6 discriminated against on the ground of race, color, religion,
7 or national origin or are denied participation or benefits
8 therein on the ground of race, color, religion, or national 9 origin. All contracts made in connection with any such pro-
10 gram or activity shall contain such conditions as the President
11 may prescribe for the purpose of assuring that there shall be 12 no discrimination in employment by any contractor or sub-13 contractor on the ground of race, color, religion, or national 14 origin.

15 TITLE VII—COMMISSION ON EQUAL EMPLOY-
16 MENT OPPORTUNITY

17 SEC. 701. The President is authorized to establish a 18 Commission to be known as the "Commission on Equal 19 Employment Opportunity," hereinafter referred to as the 20 Commission. It shall be the function of the Commission to 21 prevent discrimination against employees or applicants for 22 employment because of race, color, religion, or national ori-
23 gin by Government contractors and subcontractors, and by 24 contractors and subcontractors participating in programs or 25 activities in which direct or indirect financial assistance by

1 the United States Government is provided by way of grant,
2 contract, loan, insurance, guaranty, or otherwise. The Com-
3 mission shall have such powers to effectuate the purposes of 4 this title as may be conferred upon it by the President. The 5 President may also confer upon the Commission such powers
6 as he deems appropriate to prevent discrimination on the 7 ground of race, color, religion, or national origin in Govern-
8 ment employment.

9 SEC. 702. The Commission shall consist of the Vice Pres-
10 ident, who shall serve as Chairman, the Secretary of Labor,
11 who shall serve as Vice Chairman, and not more than fifteen 12 other members appointed by and serving at the pleasure of 13 the President. Members of the Commission, while attend-
14 ing meetings or conferences of the Commission or otherwise
15 serving at the request of the Commission, shall be entitled to 16 receive compensation at a rate to be fixed by it but not ex-
17 ceeding $75 per diem, including travel time, and while 18 away from their homes or regular places of business they 19 may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu 20 of subsistence, as authorized by section 73b–2 of title 5 of 21 the United States Code for persons in the Government serv-
22 ice employed intermittently.

23 SEC. 703. (a) There shall be an Executive Vice Chair-
24 man of the Commission who shall be appointed by the Presi-

1 dent and who shall be ex officio a member of the Commis-
2 sion. The Executive Vice Chairman shall assist the Chair-
3 man, the Vice Chairman, and the members of the Com-
4 mission and shall be responsible for carrying out the orders
5 and recommendations of the Commission and for performing 6 such other functions as the Commission may direct.

7 (b) Section 106(a) of the Federal Executive Pay Act
8 of 1956, as amended (5 U.S.C. 2205(a)), is further
9 amended by adding the following clause thereto:

10 "(52) Executive Vice Chairman, Commission on Equal 11 Employment Opportunity."

12 (c) The Commission is authorized to appoint, subject
13 to the civil service laws and regulations, such other personnel
14 as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its functions
15 and duties, and to fix their compensation in accordance with 16 the Classification Act of 1949, and is authorized to procure
17 services as authorized by section 14 of the Act of August 2, 18 1946 (60 Stat. 810; 5 U.S.C. 55a), but at rates for individ-
19 uals not in excess of $50 a day.

20 TITLE VIII—MISCELLANEOUS

21 SEC. 801. There are hereby authorized to be appropri-
22 ated such sums as are necessary to carry out the provisions
23 of this Act.

24 SEC. 802. If any provision of this Act or the applica-

1 tion thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid,
2 the remainder of the Act and the application of the provi-
3 sion to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected

THE DISUNITY AMENDMENTS

Time bombs under the U.S. Constitution

Three proposed constitutional amendments that would radically change the U.S. system of government are moving quickly but quietly through the nation's state legislatures.

The radical amendments, pushed by right-wing extremists, have been described by U.S. Sen. Paul Douglas of Illinois as "time bombs under the American constitutional system."

A survey by THE MACHINIST shows that one, two or even all three of the proposals have been pushed through one or both legislative bodies in 26 states, often with little or no debate. In one state, New Jersey, the State Senate passed two of the amendments but later rescinded its actions.

The proposed constitutional changes, sometimes called "the disunity amendments," are described at left below. The table on state legislative action, at right below, is based on information made available to THE MACHINIST by the Council of State Governments and by Congressional sources. No single authoritative system of reporting such state actions is presently in existence.

The disunity amendments were spawned by a group of state legislators determined to overturn recent Supreme Court decisions, particularly those requiring reapportionment of state legislatures. Working through the National Legislative Conference, an organization made up of state legislators and their staff members, this group quietly circulated the amendments to the various states last December. Their goal: to get identical amendments approved by at least 34 legislatures, enough to force Congress to call a constitutional convention.

During the six months since the campaign began, the amendments have been introduced in as many as 40 states. Although several legislatures have rejected the proposals, others still have them under consideration.

The disunity amendments nearly escaped public attention until the AFL-CIO Executive Council and other groups sounded the alarm.

Chief Justice Earl Warren called for public discussion of the amendments, noting that they would "make profound changes in the judiciary, the relationship between Federal and state governments and even the stability of the U.S. Constitution."

Further warnings came from Senator Douglas. Speaking on the Senate floor, the Illinois lawmaker reported that several legislatures, dominated by right-wing interests, are keeping the amendments under cover. Their strategy, Douglas noted, is to rush approval of the amendments next year to "create a bandwagon psychology which will sweep other states into the fold."

The nation's outstanding expert on the disunity amendments is Dr. Charles L. Black, Jr., professor of jurisprudence at the Yale Law School.

"The amendments are radical in the extreme," Black declared recently. "They aim not at the preservation but at the subversion of [the] balance in Federal-state relations."

Black warned that the amendments could take the nation "down that ruinous road" of converting the U.S. back into a confederation of states. He added:

"Together, these proposals would, at one and the same time, place the amending power in the uncontrolled hands of the state legislatures, place the final construction of the Constitution in the hands of judges whose offices are created and whose salaries are paid by the state legislatures, and then exempt the same state legislatures from any effective policing, by courts or Congress, of their representative character."

Writing in Newsweek magazine, the noted commentator Walter Lippmann described the disunity campaign as "shocking and sinister."

"The package of the three amendments," wrote Lippmann, "would dissolve the Union into a mere confederacy of separate states. It would perpetuate in the legislatures of these states a system of representation which antedates the growth of modern cities, and it would strip the whole system of the Union of the great constitutional guarantees.

"The amendments strike as deeply at the foundations of the American Union as anything which has been agitated seriously since nullification and secession," Lippmann concluded.

"The amendments strike as deeply at the foundations of the American Union as anything which has been agitated seriously since nullification and secession," Lippmann concluded.

Amendment 1 • "The Congress, when two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several states, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several states.

"Whenever applications from the legislatures of two-thirds of the total number of states of the United States shall contain identical texts of an amendment . . . the amendment as contained in the application shall be deemed to have been proposed, without further action by the Congress. . . ."

EFFECT: Would allow states to amend the Constitution without obtaining, as is now required, the approval of Congress or of a constitutional convention. Would provide for amending the Constitution without there having been any national debate. Would make it possible for state legislators representing only 15 per cent of the U.S. population to change the Constitution.

Amendment 2 • "No provision of this Constitution, or any amendment thereto, shall restrict or limit any state in the apportionment of representation in its legislature.

"The judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any suit in law or equity, or to any controversy, relating to apportionment or representation in a state legislature. . . ."

EFFECT: Would give the states a completely free hand in apportioning their legislative districts by placing apportionment of seats in state legislatures beyond the reach of the U.S. Constitution and the Federal courts. Would wipe out recent Supreme Court rulings requiring states to give more equal representation to city voters. Would entrench present minority rule in many state legislatures.

Amendment 3 • Provides for ". . . a Court composed of the chief justices of the highest courts of the several states to be known as the Court of the Union. The sole issue before the Court of the Union shall be whether the power or jurisdiction sought to be exercised on the part of the United States is a power granted to it under this Constitution. . . .

"The decisions of the Court of the Union upon matters within its jurisdiction shall be final and shall not thereafter be overruled by any court. . . ."

EFFECT: Would establish a super court with power to overrule U.S. Supreme Court decisions relating to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. Would make it possible for 26 judges, representing a small minority of the American people, to change the meaning of the Constitution.

Selection of San Francisco as site of 1964 Convention endorsed by full Republican National Committee at Denver meeting ... Conclave to start July 13 ... Democrats pick August 24 in Atlantic City, as observers agree their show will have few surprises, little interest.

Even JFK's former private pollster, Lou Harris, admits Kennedy popularity rating stood at new low of 59% as he left for Europe ... other unpublished polls said to give him ratings as low as 47%.

Federal agencies again in financial bind as Democratic Congress leaders fail to expedite routine appropriations bills ... only Treasury, Post Office budgets cleared in time for start of new fiscal year ... other agencies face operations under uncertainties of continuing resolution ... last year feuding Democratic leaders stalled on money bills until October.

Kennedy Administration ends fiscal 1963 with federal deficit of $7,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000 instead of $463,000,000 surplus it had planned ... with national debt already over $300,000,000,000 mark, planned deficit for '64 will be at least $11,900,000,000, with others to follow.

GOP task force headed by Rep. Battin of Montana submits congressional resolution which would declare presence of Russian troops in Cuba clear violation of Monroe Doctrine ... move has approval of House Republican Policy Committee ... Battin says Congress should demand an end to Soviet intervention in Cuba, back the right of Cuban people to determine own destiny.

Pinpointing study areas for President's Commission on Voting, GOP Chairman Miller finds widespread over-registration in many counties ... one of these is Democratic-dominated Polk County, N.C., with 165 registered white voters to every 100 white adults ... also tells of gap between registration, voting participation ... in 22 of 34 states examined more than 100,000 who registered did not vote in 1960 ... registered non-voters in California alone exceeded 1,000,000 ... Miller calls attention to single party domination in several states as contributing to voter apathy.

Debate over wisdom of signing nuclear test ban agreement with Russia complicated by new reports of atmospheric testing by Soviets ... Atomic Energy Commission is mum on report one Soviet shot took place June 12, two days after Kennedy pledged no more open-air tests unless Russia did so first ... however, AEC says there is inconclusive evidence suggesting Soviet Union may have tested in recent weeks.

Communist Party in U.S. wants all GOP candidates defeated but avoids censure of Democrats ... Moscow-trained general secretary Gus Hall notes with satisfaction Kennedy's flip flop on Cuba ... he says Kennedy atoned for last fall's blockade by quarantining Cuban exiles, banning raids, bombing, invasion of Cuba.

Former President Eisenhower, speaking at Gettysburg battlefield, warns against accepting favors from a "paternalistic government" at cost of losing individual rights, opportunities and self-reliance ... says that in face of "glittering government pledges to relieve us of sometimes burdensome responsibilities for self, family and community ... we need constantly to rededicate ourselves to liberty, duty and democracy."

Former Senator Knowland, strong advocate of party unity, tells Young Republican Convention in San Francisco GOP can win in 1964 ... says party need not concede any Southern state to Democrats ... Oakland (California) Tribune publisher charges JFK Administration not honest with people .. asks: was it a deal or historical coincidence that U.S. missiles were removed from Turkey, Italy after Khrushchev took missiles out of Cuba?

Rep. Findley (R.-Ill.) charges Kennedy Administration tried to blackjack radio, TV stations into publicizing its views on recent wheat referendum which was soundly defeated ... he cites an official memo calling on Agriculture Stabilization people to remind stations they are Federally licensed for only 3 years, and renewal could hinge on adequacy of their public service programs.

Rep. Anderson (R.-Ill.) tells Secretary of State Rusk U.S. doesn't seem to be doing enough to secure safe return of two army captains held in North Korea after forced helicopter landing May 17 ... Anderson says wearers of uniform have right to expect our government officials will do more than accept with docility this kind of international gangsterism.

U.S. News and World Report quotes Kennedy Administration official as saying Bobby Kennedy thinks of nothing but political fortunes of the Kennedy family, making no bones about it ... says he (Bobby) lays it right on table that politics is governing factor in major decisions.

In drive to broaden federal welfare activities, New Frontier attempts to force federal minimum wage formula on church-operated alcoholic rehabilitation center ... Mt. Carmel Center in N.J. provides food, lodging, medical care, paying small allowance for work done by those who otherwise would be on tax-supported welfare rolls ... Monsignor Wall, head of center, rejects government intervention, saying "ours is a relationship to sick men, their families and their God — not to the U.S. Labor Department."

PASSING THE CIVIL RIGHTS BUCK

How good is your memory? Do you remember that just three years ago the Democrats celebrated Christmas in July at a place called Los Angeles not far from Disneyland?

Each beaming Santa Claus on the Democratic platform committee showered promises on one and all. The items in the gift catalogue - a bottomless grab bag - covered 55 pages and was modestly labeled as the Rights of Man. One of the shiny gifts was a handy panacea for "all racial divisions and inequities which threaten both the integrity of our democratic faith and the proposition on which our nation was founded - that all men are created equal."

Then the Democrats transferred their whiskers and make up to John F. Kennedy who promised action the following January. In May a Democratic bill came along and was promptly knocked in the head by the President who felt there was no need for legislation at that time. Why? Your answer is as good as anybody's. If civil rights action was urgent when Kennedy was a candidate, what happened to make it less urgent after he became President? And why wasn't it just as urgent in 1962?

One can only assume a reluctant Chief Executive was hoping the issue would go away and the Democratic promise lie fallow in the minds of busy Americans. So now, only under the pressure of disturbing events, the President remembers the pledges of 1960. Now there must be a new Democratic strategy to hedge possible failure of JFK's broad proposals, which confront Congress with such knotty problems as constitutionality and feasibility. This is why there's a Democratic assertion that as many as 25 GOP votes will be needed to smash a Senate filibuster against the program.

How cynical can you get? If the day comes when prefabricated crocodile tears flow over the length and breadth of the New Frontier and Republicans are called obstructionists, remember this: A two-thirds vote is needed to break a filibuster. There are 67 Democrats and 33 Republicans in the Senate. This means the Democrats themselves can force floor action on the President's program.

And if, after a delay of two years in giving any attention to a comprehensive program, the Democrats are really sincere, they can push it through Congress by merely pulling a divided party together and apply the force of an overwhelming majority in both the Senate and House. This is why no one should be fooled by Administration maneuvers to hang the blame on the GOP.

The basic threat to civil rights lies in the record of the 87th and 88th Congress where repeated defections in Democratic ranks have made a shambles of JFK's pet programs. The President simply has not been able to lead his own party.

You would think that with its belated and panicky emphasis on civil rights the Administration would be eager to learn of moves made by the GOP whose help is so urgently requested. After all, which one is the party of Lincoln? But Attorney General Bobby Kennedy has confessed he hasn't even read the various Republican civil rights bills. House GOP Leader Halleck had invited him to do so to find out what responsible Republicans thought about the problem. Halleck has pointed out Republicans will take a "constructive" not a "negative" position. This is supported by history. President Eisenhower inspired a broad program adopted in 1957 and another was enacted in 1960.

So now we'll have to wait and see. Will the Democratic Party live up to its platform and support the President? Or will it go down to defeat and insult American intelligence by the empty alibi that the Republicans are to blame?

JFK, whose personal publicity buildup includes "great sense of history" line, flubs in Bonn, Germany, telling crowd his native Boston is oldest U.S. city (St. Augustine, Fla., is far older) and that Custer lost 500 men at Little Big Horn in '78 (the Custer massacre was in 1876, casualties totalled 276).

GOP Chairman Miller endorses proposal again to lift "equal time" restriction on broadcasters as it applies to Presidential candidates in '64 ... suspension would permit TV debates between leading candidates, as in 1960 ... but Miller wants "equal time" for lesser candidates, lest local pressures result in discrimination against underdogs.

GOP Congressional leaders see prospect of tax cut this year increasingly remote ... Republican Senate Leader Dirksen notes absence of pressure from Administration for tax reduction bill ... urges budget cuts in view of improved economic climate.

N.Y. film critics gag on "PT-109", movie version of JFK's war exploits ... "Saccharine", says Herald Tribune, terming film fit only for 10-year old boys ... N.Y. Times calls it "highly colored, synthetic and without the feel of truth."

GOP State Chairmen, holding second in planned series of pre-campaign workshop meetings, cover precinct organization techniques, coordination with women's groups ... Record turnout at Denver meeting gives further evidence of high level of morale and determination to win.

Rep. Dole (R.-Kan.) says Agriculture Secretary Freeman is running away from American farm problems at most critical time ... Dole refers to Freeman's announced visit to Communist countries ... he brands trip as unnecessary, because failure of agriculture programs in Communist countries is matter of common knowledge ... asks what can Orville learn that will help American farmers?

Averell Harriman sees Red China exploding its first nuclear device this year or next, but plays down cause for alarm ... on eve of test ban talks in Moscow, Harriman says "they (the Chinese Communists) will become more conservative ... and less reckless" when they get the Bomb.

Pentagon brainwashers issue directive for U.S. soldiers in South Vietnam ... put our GIs on notice that when they meet reporters they should avoid gratuitous criticism of the operation ... advise them to accent the positive, emphasize feeling of achievement ... or in other words this means don't lie but don't tell exact truth either.

Another House test looms for JFK's bill seeking $455,000,000 in additional federal funds for Area Redevelopment Agency ... before Senate passed measure, Senator Bennett (R.-Utah) said it provided unneeded funds for a program designed to create votes for Kennedy Administration ... Bennett displayed photo of an ARA-aided motel which included a sign giving Kennedy credit for government assistance.

IS KENNEDY IN POLITICAL TROUBLE AT HOME?

Check the trends, and you discover this:

President Kennedy, after all, is no cinch to win a second term in the White House.

In the South, political revolt is in the air. A Republican could win there.

In the North, the race issue could cost the President votes.

In farm States, discontent is widespread.

Remember: Kennedy just squeaked through in 1960. It's to be a real fight next time.

Trouble for 1964 now is glimpsed by President Kennedy and his political advisers. The President's popularity is slipping, and political unrest is shaking the whole Kennedy strategy for winning re-election.

Kennedy workers have come up with studies that suggest the President's popularity has fallen into the 50 per cent range—considerably lower than suggested by findings of Dr. George Gallup. Soundings by Kennedy men on Capitol Hill, based on congressional reaction from constituents, tend to confirm these studies.

The President's election strategy is built around plans for carrying the big-city States of the North. Success in these States rests upon the support drawn from union labor, Negroes and other voting blocs.

Kennedy's hopes. Unless there is a sharp change from the pattern of the 1960 election, Mr. Kennedy cannot hope to draw enough votes from the big-city States alone to win. He must have additional votes from the smaller States. In 1960, these votes came from the South and Border States, along with a sprinkling of votes from the farm and Rocky Mountain States. Hopes for 1964 are pointed in the same direction.

Now the feeling is growing in Democratic circles that the President's chances for holding the groups he needs in key areas are being impaired.

Mr. Kennedy's effort to meet demands of Negro leaders is threatening to generate a large-scale political revolt in the South. In a number of key States in the North, Negro pressures are said by political leaders to irritate many white voters who have been Democrats.

At the same time, Negro leaders are saying openly that the President tends

WHERE KENNEDY COULD SLIP UP IN '64

IN THE LAST ELECTION, 1960:

Kennedy won 23 States, got 303 electoral votes

Nixon won 26 States, got 219 electoral votes

NEEDED TO WIN IN 1960: 269 ELECTORAL VOTES

IN THE NEXT ELECTION, 1964:

Kennedy States of 1960 will have 10 fewer electoral votes

Nixon States of 1960 will have 9 more electoral votes

District of Columbia will have 3 votes

NEEDED TO WIN IN 1964: 270 ELECTORAL VOTES

IN SOUTHERN STATES, Kennedy is badly hurt by race issue.

In 1964, these 7 will have 84 electoral votes.

If he were to lose just 2 or 3 of these States—and keep all the other States he won in 1960—he would be defeated for re-election.

Note: In 1960, Mississippi electors cast all of thei to take the Negro vote too much for granted. They are pressing more and more insistently for the President to act to end all kinds of discrimination in the North as well as in the South.

Point of irritation. Negroes, themselves, opinion polls show, place a higher priority on jobs than on other things. Many Negroes are unhappy because of persistent and rather large-scale unemployment among their people. Yet, unemployment seems not to be declining among less-skilled workers.

This whole situation, politicians say, is loaded with political importance. Many voter reactions are not pleasing to the President and his friends.

Charles Bartlett, a columnist, a close friend and supporter of President Kennedy, wrote on June 25:

"The Negroes would rather demonstrate than register and vote and this preference is the crux of the squeeze upon the President. He is caught between the Negroes who feel he has let them down and the whites who feel he has stirred them up. The possibility of his replacement in the White House by a more regressive figure in 1965 does not daunt the Negro militants—'Let him get whipped,' is their attitude."

This opinion, voiced by some Negro leaders, suggests to politicians the possibility that the President in 1964 might receive a smaller share of the Negro vote in such strategic areas as Illinois and Michigan.

The shift of 1 vote in 1,000 would have cost Mr. Kennedy the electoral votes of Illinois in 1960. With the rearrangement of electoral votes through reapportionment, this would be enough to lose the election for him in 1964 if that election should follow the same pattern as did the contest of 1960.

White House strategists see another danger in this situation. Whites in Northern suburbs, where neighborhoods and schools are largely all-white, appear not to be happy over Negro demands that these neighborhoods and schools become fully integrated. And from the recent meeting of the Republican National Committee in Denver there came reports that some elements of Mr. Kennedy's opposition are ready to take advantage of this unhappiness in 1964.

Whites' advantage. The point is, as politicians see it, that in the North the number of white people of voting age exceeds the number of Negroes of voting age by more than 10 to 1 in most of the key States. If race became a hot issue, the bloc vote of Negroes could lose its effectiveness.

White House advisers appear confident of the continued support of most of the labor unions. Yet many white workers in the North—in construction unions and some others—view the Negro as a threat to their job security if color lines are broken in unions. This could dim the enthusiasm of some union workers in 1964, trimming down money, political workers and votes for the President.

There are some presidential advisers who have tended to discount the effect of the vote of farmers in Midwestern States. The suggestion has been that farmers now make up only 7.7 per cent of the national population and that their votes are no great factor in turning national elections.

Farm-bloc power. Some other Democrats are pointing out that, when the votes of farmers are pooled with those of residents of the small towns that are dependent on the farmers, the resulting total can be big enough to swing a good many States. In some of the vital States, it far exceeds the size of the Negro vote.

The tumultuous stirring of the race issue in all parts of the nation, the unhappiness of farmers in many areas of the Middle West, the search of young people for jobs that are hard to find, all these things are raising questions about the battle that lies ahead for Mr. Kennedy in 1964.

The political facts of life indicate that unless the President gets some "breaks" running his way in the months ahead, he may face a formidable task. How tough this task may be shows up in a

IN THE FARM STATES OF THE MIDWEST, dissatisfaction is widespread.

In 1960, Kennedy carried 4 of these States—Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri.

In 1964, these 4 will have 69 electoral votes.

If Kennedy were to lose Illinois or any two of the others—and keep all the remaining States he won in 1960—he would lose the 1964 election.

IN STATES OF HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT, Democrats could get in trouble.

In 1960, Kennedy carried these States where claims for jobless pay are running heavy: Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, West Virginia.

In 1964, these 6 States will have 114 electoral votes.

If Kennedy loses ground in these industrial areas, he could be defeated.

IN STATES WHERE THE 1960 VOTE WAS CLOSE, Democrats have a worry.

Kennedy, in 1960, carried 11 States by less than 51 per cent of the popular vote. Electoral votes in these States: 138.

Nixon, in 1960, carried 3 States by less than 51 per cent of the popular vote. Electoral votes in these States: 52.

In 1964, suppose the electoral votes of these 14 close States were to divide evenly between the two parties, with all other States going as they did in 1960: In that case, Kennedy would lose the election.

ALL IN ALL, it now becomes apparent that Kennedy's re-election in 1964 is no cinch. He will have a fight on his hands, whoever is the Republican nominee.

votes for Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia. Senator Byrd also got 1 of Oklahoma's votes and 6 of Alabama's.

IS KENNEDY IN POLITICAL TROUBLE?

study of the political alignment that developed in 1960.

In 1960, Mr. Kennedy needed 269 votes to win the Presidency. He got 171 of these from 9 big-city and industrial States in the East and Middle West.

For the remaining 98 votes needed to elect him, the Kennedy strategists had to turn to the South and Border States. He got 81 votes from 7 Southern States, 30 more from 3 Border States.

Weakness in West. Aside from Texas and Missouri, in the Southern and Border State groups, Mr. Kennedy carried only four States west of the Mississippi: Hawaii, Minnesota, New Mexico and Nevada. They had 21 votes.

Minnesota was the only Midwestern State in which farming is the No. 1 occupation that was carried by Mr. Kennedy. Here he rode the coattails of Senator Hubert Humphrey, the man who had been his foremost challenger in the Democratic presidential primaries. Mr. Kennedy got 50.6 per cent of the Minnesota votes, Mr. Humphrey got 57.5 per cent. Mr. Humphrey outran the presidential candidate by 213,564 votes.

Foundations for the Kennedy victory had been laid in the big cities, where large blocs of votes could be pooled. Except for the Far West and the South, Omaha, Indianapolis and Columbus, Ohio, were the only good-sized cities that Mr. Kennedy did not carry.

Key to the candidate's victory in the cities was the work and votes of labor union members and the votes of Negroes. He got 65 per cent of the labor vote and, across the nation, 70 per cent of the Negro vote. Some Negro wards in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and St. Louis turned up ratios of 4 to 1 for the Democratic candidate.

Close squeaks. Even so, it was a narrow squeak for Mr. Kennedy in 4 of the 9 industrial States that he carried. Wilmington narrowly turned the tide for him in Delaware. In Illinois, he carried only 9 of 102 counties and Chicago gave him the State. In Michigan, he got 13 of 83 counties and the victory came from Detroit. In New Jersey, the victory came from industrial centers.

All of these four States have felt the throb of racial discontent in the present turmoil. There have been demonstrations in Michigan and New Jersey, battles in Chicago. A switch of a few votes away from the President in cities, a little thinning of the outstate farm votes, and the President can lose 67 electoral votes in these States in 1964.

If the election should follow the pattern of 1960, these votes would be enough to lose the Presidency.

In 1960, the President's basic strength in the cities was not enough to win. It was the push of the traditionally Democratic South and the Border States that finally sent him into the White House.

Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas held to their traditions of voting Democratic. But many cities in these States voted Republican. Alabama electors, unpledged, gave half of their votes to another candidate. And the votes were so narrowly divided in Louisiana, Arkansas and Texas that a shift of only six votes in a thousand would have given these States to the Republicans.

A blunder? In the present plight, White House strategists are wondering about the hasty decision that was made in 1960 to ignore the South. They cannot readily count enough safe electoral votes in the North to win the 1964 election. But feelings are hardening against the President in the South.

Louisiana, Arkansas and Texas can easily be lost in 1964, especially if Senator Barry Goldwater is the Republican candidate. Alabama has been written off by the Democrats since the Tuscaloosa and Birmingham racial incidents. North Carolinians are showing a swing to Republicanism. One by one, Southern States are losing their enthusiasm for Mr. Kennedy.

Among the Border States carried by Mr. Kennedy—Maryland, West Virginia and Missouri—the margin in Missouri was so close that a switch of 4 votes in 1,000 would have given the State to Mr. Nixon. The votes of St. Louis and Kansas City gave the State to Mr. Kennedy. Now St. Louis is a target for racial demonstrations.

Signs "not good." Even in States that were captured by larger margins in 1960, all is not well for the President.

Pennsylvania has slipped into the hands of Republicans, and disconcerting signs for the Democrats appear elsewhere. Only Alaska, California and Washington offer real chances for the Democrats to make gains over their 1960 level—and the 52 electoral votes that might be picked up here are not enough to make up for prospective losses.

"The situation doesn't look good," said a Kennedy strategist. "We are going to have a tough fight in 1964."

IF RACE IS AN ISSUE IN 1964—

White voters, as always in the past, will be dominant in all States. The count of voting-age population is this:

IN THE COUNTRY AS A WHOLE:
9 whites for each nonwhite.

IN NORTHERN AND BORDER STATES:
13 whites for each nonwhite.

IN THE SOUTH:
4 whites for each nonwhite.

IN STATES WITH THE BIGGEST ELECTORAL VOTE, the ratios are these:

New York: 11 to 1 • California: 12 to 1
Pennsylvania: 13 to 1 • Illinois: 9 to 1 • Ohio: 12 to 1
Michigan: 10 to 1 • New Jersey: 12 to 1
Massachusetts: 44 to 1

NATION'S NO. 1 PROBLEM—FIND 35 MILLION JOBS IN 10 YEARS

Wanted: 290,000 new jobs a month, from now until 1970. They are needed to replace jobs lost to automation, and provide for new workers joining the labor force.

The country now gets this official warning:

During this decade of the 1960s, the U. S. economy somehow must create nearly 35 million new jobs.

That figure was laid before the Senate Small Business Committee on June 20 by Seymour L. Wolfbein, director of the Labor Department's Office of Manpower, Automation and Training.

Just to replace jobs lost through automation and higher productivity, the country will need 22 million more jobs by 1970.

To employ new workers joining the labor force, 12.5 million additional jobs must be found.

That adds up to nearly 290,000 new jobs every month.

There never was a time, except in war, when anything like that many new jobs have been created. In the 1950s, a prosperous decade, fewer than 22 million new jobs opened up.

Said Mr. Wolfbein: "We are now witnessing a head-on collision between advancing automation and technology, on the one hand, and a tidal wave of manpower for whom job opportunities must be available, on the other."

Demand for skilled workers. Another headache: The need is growing for highly skilled workers. Jobs are diminishing for the untrained and for older workers with outmoded skills.

"There is nothing in the offing which appears to change this trend," Mr. Wolfbein noted.

Where are automation and improved technology affecting the employment picture? Mr. Wolfbein gave the Senate committee these examples:

- In farming, jobs have been disappearing at the rate of 200,000 a year since World War II.
- Railroading now employs 40 per cent fewer workers than a decade ago, but handles the same volume of traffic.
- In industry generally, jobs for blue-collar workers are going down, while white-collar employment is soaring.

It all adds up to a staggering problem.

In other words, for every 100 jobs created during the decade of the 1950s, the country will need to create 158 jobs during the 1960s.

Republicans Look Over Another Possibility for '64

Looking for "dark horses," Republican leaders have their eyes on Senator Morton of Kentucky as a possibility for the 1964 presidential nomination. Mr. Morton has assets: He knows politics. He is well known and liked within the party, has never lost an election.

—USN&WR Photos

Senator Thruston B. Morton

The name of Senator Thruston B. Morton of Kentucky suddenly is bobbing up as Republicans look for a man to oppose President Kennedy in 1964.

As of now, Senator Barry Goldwater is far out in front among possibilities for the Republican presidential nomination. The Goldwater surge has followed a decline, at least temporary, in the prospects of Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York.

The Eastern, "liberal" wing of the Republican Party, however, is strongly opposed to Goldwater. One worry is that he would lose in the big industrial States and carry State and local tickets down with him.

Wanted: a candidate. Within the party, the next move is expected to be a "stop Goldwater" movement. Such movements, to succeed, must have candidates to support.

Governor George Romney of Michigan was brought out first as a personality around whom to rally what are known as "liberal" Republicans. The Michigan Governor, however, with numerous problems at home, has shown no enthusiasm for moving to the national stage at this time.

Thought has been given, too, to Governor William W. Scranton of Pennsylvania. He is showing some interest in the nomination. He has indicated that he intends to become a "favorite son" candidate. However, Governor Scranton is even less well known to the country than is Governor Romney.

It's at this point that the name of Senator Morton comes up.

The Kentucky Senator has served three terms in the House of Representatives. At 55, he is in his second term as a U. S. Senator. He held an important office in the Department of State.

Senator Morton has been Chairman of the Republican National Committee. Right now he is in charge of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee. All this means that he is on close terms with party leaders, the country over. They like him and in many cases may be beholden to him.

Not long ago, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, former President, mentioned the Kentucky Senator as a man who should be considered for the presidential nomination. Other leaders within the party have taken up that suggestion.

What all this means is that, in the event that Senator Goldwater is "stopped," the name of Thruston B. Morton will be in the minds of key leaders of the Republican Party.

So far as anyone knows, Senator Morton, a strapping, friendly man, has no enemies within the party. He takes the middle road on most issues, once described himself, somewhat ambiguously, as being "two degrees left of center."

Border State background. The Morton record is one of support for civil-rights legislation. He comes from a Border State, however, and that tends to temper opposition in the South. He is from Louisville, where long strides have been made toward ending segregation.

The Senator disparages his own presidential prospects, refuses to let the talk give rise to any special ambitions.

"In terms of political reality," the Senator firmly told a recent interviewer, "I have no intention of seeking a place on the national ticket. I have a comfortable six-year term ahead in the Senate, and the Senate is the height of my ambition. I'm not even coming out of the starting gate on this one."

Mr. Morton is not interested in the Vice Presidency either. What interests him is his work in the Senate and the challenge of his job as chairman of the Senatorial Campaign Committee.

This keeps him traveling, making speeches, stirring up party enthusiasm. The job also includes raising money, building the party organization and developing attractive Senate candidates.

On the last score, he is trying to stir up rivalries within the party—not usually a Republican tactic. He would like to see some hard-fought primary campaigns for Senate nominations. This, he thinks, would get Republican candidates into the field early and give them an exposure they will need for battling Democratic incumbents.

Out of it all, he looks for a net gain of 7 to 10 Republican Senate seats next year, but concedes that developments could alter his calculations. However, with the Senate now 67 Democrats to 33 Republicans, he scarcely expects his party to take control of it.

Basis for optimism. On his travels, Senator Morton finds a great and growing interest in Republican prospects.

"I can't accept a tenth of the speaking invitations I get," he says. "Our meetings are big and enthusiastic. There's a lot of enthusiasm in senatorial, gubernatorial and other elections that should carry over into the presidential campaign. I think President Kennedy can be beaten. I am not overconfident. It will be an uphill fight, but it can be done."

Unforeseeable factors are involved, however, the Senator says. Mr. Kennedy might get a break in foreign affairs and that would help him. Or there might be an adverse break. Meanwhile, a developing economic boom would be of immense value to Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. Morton foresees the passage of a civil-rights bill which will be pretty much what the President asked for, except for the public-accommodation section. He has grave doubts about that section. The Governor of his State on June 26 issued an executive order to ban discrimination in Kentucky. Mr. Morton would like to see how it works.

Leaving Senate floor, where he takes middle road on most issues.

Boarding Senate subway, the Senator heads back to the Capitol. He is on close terms with party leaders, heads Senatorial Campaign Committee.

In Capitol rotunda, he confers with Delaware's Senator John J. Williams.

In office, he checks schedule with secretary. Work for party keeps him on go.

With Minority Leader Everett Dirksen, Senator Morton discusses prospects for Republican gains in 1964.

Rejecting "dark horse" role, he says, "Senate is the height of my ambition."

The Senator in the past has voted for shutting off a filibuster against civil-rights legislation, and will again if the leadership makes a genuine effort to get a vote before asking for cloture and if he is satisfied with the bill.

Career in business. Senator Morton was a businessman before he entered politics. He grew up to moderate wealth, went to Yale, and then took his place in the family-owned business, Ballard & Ballard, a grain-milling concern in Louisville.

Mr. Morton rose to the top and, under his leadership, the business expanded. It was sold to the Pillsbury interests in 1951. Meanwhile, the Senator served as a director of other Louisville companies and was active in civic affairs. In World War II, he served in the Navy.

After the war, at the urging of friends, he turned to politics. In 1946, he ran for the House, ousting a long-standing Democratic incumbent. He was re-elected in 1948 and 1950. In 1952, he stepped aside to manage the successful Senate campaign of his present colleague, John Sherman Cooper, and to campaign for General Eisenhower.

Mr. Eisenhower called Mr. Morton to Washington for work as Assistant Secretary of State. But politics still beckoned. He ran for the Senate and defeated the redoubtable Kentucky politician, Earle C. Clements, by 6,981 votes. Mr. Morton was re-elected last year. He never has lost an election.

An "open" convention? Looking ahead to next year, Senator Morton foresees a "wide open" convention with a "big batch of favorite sons." He thinks Governor Rockefeller has been hurt by his marital situation and that this has brought Senator Goldwater up.

All this could mean a "deadlock" in the early balloting, with development of the sort of situation from which a compromise nominee emerges. As of now, the compromise choice might easily be Thruston B. Morton.

THE RAMPANT RIGHT INVADES THE GOP

In the political buildup to '64, the radicals are on the right. They attack the two-party liberalism of the center. Dozens of new organizations, from the fanatic John Birch Society to the wide-eyed Young Americans for Freedom, cry for Goldwater and try to impose a right-wing orthodoxy upon the Republican party.

BY T GEORGE HARRIS
LOOK SENIOR EDITOR

A FIERCE NEW BREED of political activist is at work across the land. In public, he calls himself "Conservative." In private, he may lightly put on another label: "Right wing." He has lately become the main topic of intense back-room talk among veteran Republican leaders in many states. He is, they know, moving in on the party machinery. His bid for authority is vigorously supported by the money, propaganda and membership of fast-growing right-wing organizations outside the party.

"It's a real raid," says a ranking member of the GOP central committee in one Rocky Mountain state. "They're grabbing for control of the party." Though a wealthy and conservative businessman, this Republican is one of many who fear to speak of the problem in public. "I don't want to be attacked as a Communist."

Some GOP leaders are delighted, others worried. "I think that in three or four months you'll see the responsible leadership get in and head them off," says Seattle's R. Mort Frayn, 57, the most experienced leader in the Washington state GOP and Richard Nixon's Northwest anchor man in 1960. "This crowd can blow the whole bundle if we're not careful. If we can keep a balance, the party will come out stronger."

The new right shows its greatest strength in the West and South. But in other sections where traditional GOP leadership shows weakness or division, it is moving in to fill the vacuum. The "moderates," as Eisenhower Republicans are now tagged, have to fight or join up, or both. In Illinois, business executive Charles H. Percy, an Eisenhower favorite for years, has been running for governor. If he can get the GOP nomination, he has an odds-on chance to beat a faltering Democratic incumbent, Gov. Otto Kerner. But Percy is under bitter personal attack inside his party and has to wage his campaign on a single, defensive theme. "Chuck keeps trying to prove he's a conservative," says one angry critic. "We aren't buying it."

Politicians in the Rocky Mountain states report a strong upsurge in rightist activity, often boosted by piped-in national radio and TV orators. In this thinly populated region, where four Democratic senators face rough reelection fights in '64, a few right-wing programs can saturate the electorate. But some GOP leaders do not want this outside help. The propaganda makes it difficult for them to consider nominating nonradicals and hands the Democrats a dandy issue—invasion by monied "foreign interests."

California, with its habit of hyperbole, offers the vanguard example of the radical right at work. Here, the John Birch Society, which trains the far right's toughest militants, is now gaining fast in members and in influence upon a badly splintered GOP. In the past year, the JBS has become, to the astonishment of most politicians, the new force to be reckoned with. Its power centers lie in the everspreading suburbs around Los Angeles. Any candidate for GOP nomination to an important office must make peace on Birch terms or take on a battle. Each GOP congressman knows that if he doesn't show skill in "the care and feeding of the right," as one veteran calls it, he will face "pro-Communist" charges until the next primary—when he will have to run against a massively financed opponent.

It's easier to feed the fires of fear. Rep. James Utt (R., Calif.), though not a Birch member, mailed out a newsletter on the U. S. Army's "Exercise Water Moccasin." This Georgia maneuver, he declared, might be "probing the resistance of the American people to an internal take-over, fantastic as that may seem, although the present tendency is to deliver this country into the tender hands of the UN peace-keeping army." By the time right-wing enthusiasts got through expanding the Water Moccasin story, there were 16,000 African troops in Georgia, "with rings in their ears and noses," trained to take over the U. S. under command of a Russian general at the United Nations.

The most effective new operator in Birch politics is former Republican Congressman John Rousselot of California. Now 35, he long ago proved his oratorical and organizational skills, and knows the California party from years of work in Richard Nixon's statewide organization. In 1956, he was Nixon-picked for state chief of the Young Republican Federation. He dearly wanted to run for Congress in 1958. Nixon's decision to run another candidate, who lost, turned Rousselot into a bitter critic of the middle-roading organization. In 1960, he overrode Nixon's men, got enough financial backing from somewhere to win both the primary and the general election. He had already been in Congress several months when the press uncovered his membership—and that of his fellow GOP Congressman Edgar (Eck) Hiestand—in the John Birch Society.

Most politicians thought Rousselot's career was ended. The Democratic legislators in Sacramento, then redistricting the state, smelled opportunity. They gerrymandered his 25th Congressional District, boxed him into a new one that was 62 percent Democratic. Also, as Birch Society founder Robert Welch later reported, the old district had 59 Birch chapters; the new one, only five.

Rousselot, Hiestand and H. L. (Bill) Richardson, a young Birch member making his first race for Congress, all lost in last fall's general election. The national press reported a Birch rout. But local Republicans noticed that the three Birchers had raised more money than any other Congressional candidates in L.A. County (Rousselot reported expenditures of $80,556.24) and had benefited from the most ardent core of workers in California politics. Only a massive election-day effort by Democratic pros defeated Rousselot—by just 8,410 votes.

Rousselot became the Birch Society's most useful new weapon. Handsome and blue-eyed, an ardent Christian Scientist, he gave the Birchers a new look of nonsecret activity and respectability. Robert Welch hired him as "District Governor" for the Far West. He opened a sleek, modern headquarters in the posh Los Angeles suburb of San Marino, recruited a dozen well-scrubbed, earnest young men as "coordinators" to organize in California. One was Bill Richardson, who works night and day in the suburbs.

In Utah, Reed Benson, son of former Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson, started recruiting among the Mormons after he lost a Congressional primary there last year. (Birchers turning up in Mormon chapels, like those in Christian Science churches, have inspired quiet, painful struggles in some congregations.) The Birch Society is no longer represented, as a Democrat once quipped, by "little old ladies in tennis shoes." It is led by young politicians with well-developed ambitions for GOP leadership.

The young coordinators are building a base. Mr Welch, as his followers respectfully address him, claims that his national membership doubled last year. Rousselot adds that in the first three months of this year, JBS gained more members, 30 percent more, than all of last year. Reed Benson claims to have tripled Birch enrollment in Utah, where he touts home-reading memberships for people who don't want anybody to spot them at chapter meetings. The actual membership totals remain a closely guarded secret. They sank briefly two years ago, but chapter activity and the heavy schedules of right-wing speakers like Nashville's Tom Anderson, who jets from city to city as the movement's barefoot wit, confirm the Society's claim that it is resurgent. "We grow," one chapter leader told LOOK, "like a fungus."

Birchers have developed a rowdy style of politics, as other Republicans can testify. Take Jack and Kitty De Stories of Covina, a suburb in the district where Rousselot ran for reelection last year. Jack, 31, a financial analyst, is an elected officer of the Los Angeles County Republican Central Committee and a director of the statewide GOP businessmen's organization known as the California Republican Assembly (CRA). Kitty works hard at Republican women's activities. One night last summer, the De Stories invited the local CRA chapter, of which Jack was one of the leaders, to hold its annual election meeting in their home. The couple often let GOP groups use their house. Since the club had only 23 members, they expected no more than 15 to show up for a genial session.

That night, a paid Birch organizer rang in a band of noisy strangers and had them made members by the club's pro-Birch vice-president. The "instant" members voted in a new "instant" president, walked out with the club's records and checkbook. De Stories was left with three big cigarette holes in his carpet and a mischievously unplugged refrigerator. The same roving band—expanded once to 87 when they needed more votes—invaded two other CRA clubs.

Such rambunctious tactics fail only when responsible people fight back. CRA's leaders got busy last summer, revoked charters of wayward clubs, fended off an all-out take-over attack by the Birchers.

The fight went the other way in the California Young Republican Federation. This time the Birchers, old hands at YR politics, had the advantage of working behind a non-Birch candidate—young, wealthy, well-spoken Robert Gaston of Los Angeles—for state YR president. "I had known Bob Gaston when I was in Congress," explains Rousselot. "One thing a person learns in the Birch Society is to work where it counts and stick with it." He worked long and hard. In the buildup to the election early this year, Birch organizers in Bakersfield and other cities suddenly packed the YR lists with new members, hung on opponents the dangerous tag of "liberal." Some Birch chapters just constituted themselves as YR clubs. When moderate YR leaders spoke out against the JBS "power grab," and documented the charge, an older Bircher darkly asked, in the press, why they should fear "the intrusion and infiltration of constitutional Americanism."

Gaston's Birch-backed campaign carried the YR convention this January. With whoop and holler, the new leadership added California's punch to the "gung-ho" conservatism that dominates Young Republican sessions in many states. Since 1959, the behind-the-scenes YR leaders—successors to those who once rah-rahed for Eisenhower against Robert Taft—have been shifting toward the political style of Arizona's Sen. Barry Goldwater. He uses their youth image.

In the older branches of the California GOP, the right-wing rise has come as a part of a suburban revolt. "The California Club Crowd," as the downtown Los Angeles business leaders have been dubbed, found their dominant role in GOP finances challenged in recent years by prospering rebels in the suburbs. The old hands, never exactly raving liberals, backed candidates whom many of the suburbanites considered a bit soft on communism. Example: Richard Nixon, in last year's gubernatorial primary and election. Nixon's friends lost control of the County Central Committee, had to raise campaign funds by direct contribution. The suburbanites, many of them Birchers, put their money directly into the Congressional races. Seeking peace and Birch funds, the downtowners seated Bircher Paul Talbert, Beverly Hills insurance man and member of the JBS National Council, on their United Republican Fund board.

But there is no peace, and the GOP is now a shambles in the biggest state. Norman Chandler's Los Angeles Times, once the voice of party regularity, has been under attack since it ran an evenhanded series on the Birch Society: "The Times is moving heavily to the left," charges Rousselot. In the absence of clear party leadership, the GOP has come to be represented by any faction that is vocal in its name. That, for the moment, is the right wing. "The Birchers have taken over the GOP image by default," says Aime Michaud, a party stalwart in Northern California. Thoughtful big businessmen, now a bit dismayed by the JBS, wait for somebody else to show leadership.

Such quiverish fret about the Birch Society only confirms the deep suspicions of the average dues-paying member. Be he truck driver or salesman, he is convinced that something's wrong with the big shots who run everything, the GOP included. He knows for sure that he is earnestly fighting communism, so why should any but Communists be scared of him? At his chapter meeting, he throbs with good old foot-stomping patriotism when the phonograph bellows out The Battle Hymn of the Republic. He gets a lift from the Pledge of Allegiance and comes out strong on the "under God." He feels a healthy tweak of discipline when he stands up to applaud his leaders.

He is a student in the most thorough indoctrination school this side of the Communist party. "It's a discipline of education," says John Rousselot, "not a discipline of leadership." Mr. Welch's long monthly Bulletin to each member does not command; it genially "educates" him, step by step, toward the Welch belief that the whole U. S. Government is in the firm grip of the Communists. The member can come along at his own pace. He does not have to decide whether General Eisenhower is, as Mr. Welch now puts it, "a mere stooge, or . . . a Communist assigned the specific job of being a political front man." The Founder's biography of Ike, The Politician, is now on sale for $8 at chapter meetings and the 60 Birch libraries. But a new prologue explains why Mr. Welch did not make it required doctrine. He could not, he wrote, "lead people too rapidly into a realization of truths that they were unwilling to accept." Outside speakers help lead the faithful deeper into suspicion and anxiety. At Birch Chapter 307 in San Marino, ex-Maj. George Racey Jordan recently warned that under present economic policy, "you're going to be in exactly the same position you were in when they closed the banks in 1933."

The Birch member's local chapter is a seminar, kept small enough for him to take part. At meetings, he finds the Society's slick, sneering monthly, American Opinion (50 cents), assorted right-wing pamphlets and a dozen true-story books on all the Reds in our midst, put out cheap by "the largest anti-Communist publishing house." The well-read student also learns by doing. He lends a hand at forming Birch fronts, pushes the "Impeach Earl Warren" petitions that Mr. Welch seldom fails to mention. He may go on a Birch "card party" to tag Communist merchandise. (Birchers don't appreciate the businessman who looks down upon the JBS as—in Rousselot's words—"below his dignity.") Or he may infiltrate the PTA and help a fellow member campaign for the school board to straighten out those teachers who—again Rousselot—"have the attitude of being above us . . . a professional sophistication, like an untouchable thing."

It's a program of total, around-the-clock political activity. It gives the member a sense that he's taking a hand in his own destiny, if only by getting even with all those people who look down on him. Yet by the time a Bircher does his duties, he has become not a member of an organization like the GOP, but an organic part of a "body," as Mr. Welch says, like the Communist party. And so, the faithful Bircher works his way up to the big thing that Mr. Welch spells out on pages 110 and 111 of The Blue Book, the JBS founding document:

"Finally, and probably most important of all these courses of action, we would put our weight into the political scales in this country just as fast and far as we could . . . especially if the Republican party then stands nationally for any Americanist principles whatsoever, it cannot win unless it has strong help and backing from forces outside . . . such as the Democratic party has on the other side in Walter Reuther's Committee on Political Education."

The Society does not formally contribute to campaigns. But the discipline of education tells members whom to back, and the leaders may hint a bit. In 1962, the Birchers contributed so much to their favorite candidates that they were in danger, Mr. Welch gently warned, of "forgetting us financially." The body's new strength will make it a major money factor in politics between now and November, 1964.

Robert Welch has become a serious embarrassment to the host of more sensible men and organizations that make up the diverse elements of "the Conservative Movement." Many knew of his beliefs long before the press uncovered his chief work of art, the Eisenhower book. But they foolishly kept silent. Then they attacked Welch's leadership, not the body he had shaped in his own image. Senator Goldwater, whose 1958 Senatorial campaign benefited from $2,000 that Welch personally raised, suggested that the Birch founder resign, or that members reconstitute the Society under a new leader. "Mr. Welch has revived in many men the spirit of patriotism," wrote William F. Buckley, Jr., in his National Review, "and that same spirit calls now for rejecting, out of a love of truth and country, his false counsels."

The tactic did not work, in part because rightists felt so outnumbered that they could not bear to do in one of their own. Mr. Welch's body refused to cut off its head. Today, his Birch Society dominates the right-wing picture—not just the minds of sensation-seeking reporters—for the simple reason that it is more successful than the other groups. The leading Birchers also hold key spots in most active conservative enterprises. Though they may disagree privately with Mr. Welch's erratic intuitions, their acquiescent membership in his body, which indeed acts as an extension of his thought, taints their more reasonable efforts at political persuasion.

In the years ahead, however, the non-Birchers of the Conservative Movement, from radicals to reasonables, will have a deeper impact. They have already accomplished, to their own satisfaction, one major goal. "Our chief contribution has been to expose Modern Republicanism's intellectual emptiness," says Bill Buckley.

The Republican party's narrow loss of the 1960 Presidential race gave the entire right its strongest stimulus. The country went off Ike tranquilizers, went on Kennedy vigor pills. "We have been freed," says Buckley, "from the burden of Eisenhower." Though he would rather have a Nixon than a Kennedy, others disagree. Says the irrepressible Tom Anderson: "I think we're a lot better off with Kennedy than with Nixon. I think it's better to go to socialism at a hundred miles an hour than to go at fifty. It shocks people more."

The purification of the GOP—washing that Ike out of its hair—thus becomes the right's most important mission and the one to which it dedicates sizzling energy. To Robert Welch, Eisenhower is a traitor to his country. But to the new alliance of very old and very young conservatives now on the move, Ike and his big-business Cabinet are traitors to party ideology. When he appears at the 1964 Republican Convention, the former President may be treated to the hisses and laughs that his name often sets off in right-wing meetings.

The liturgy of the purifiers repeats and repeats the word "Goldwater." If elected President, they agree, the jet-flying Senator would "stop our drift into communism." In his name, often without his nod, a very wide assortment of people, from Birchers to stolid old party pros, demand that the GOP "give the voters a clear choice between Americanism and socialism." Some with delicate antennae fear that Goldwater, now almost convinced he should run, is softening his line to improve his prospects. But, for the most part, the right-wing's champion has avoided the kind of specific statements that would comfort the moderates—and cool the ardents.

The dedicated rightists are, as they often say, "Conservatives first and Republicans second." They are ready to lose almost any election if the loss will help "reform" the GOP to fit their creed. They have devised a satchelful of tools to do the job. Many of them are consciously copied from Democratic liberals—who seem, to the concerned conservatives, gifted with a diabolical skill in such matters.

One tool is New York's Conservative party. Buckley's magazine came up with the idea for a "fourth party" to anchor the state GOP on the right, as the Liberal party has anchored the big state's Democrats on the left. A couple of National Review readers spontaneously adopted the suggestion, put two of the magazine's staff on their board and set up political shop. They soon threw a monkey wrench into Rockefeller's machine. Last year, their little-known candidate for governor cut 142,000 votes out of the majority racked up by Rockefeller, whose liberalism had made him their latest Public Enemy No. 1. They did more than tarnish his victory cup: They delivered a warning to the whole GOP. The Conservative party is legally locked on the New York ballot through 1966—"up there like Telstar," beams one strategist—and ready for use in protest against any Republican Presidential nominee who does not please the right. The GOP cannot ignore it. Only Rockefeller, or a candidate of like liberalism, has a chance to swing New York's big vote against Kennedy. But if the Conservative party has the will and the way to throw the state to Kennedy, the GOP must find a candidate able to pick up a bundle of new votes in other states. Who is he? The question comes with a built-in answer: Goldwater, whose backers believe that he really could take the Solid South and Texas from the restless old Democratic pros.

As conservatives copied one scheme from New York's Liberal party, so they took another from a group they revile, the Americans for Democratic Action. They built a reverse-ADA and called it ACA, Americans for Constitutional Action. In only four years of operation, ACA has built up more political muscle than ADA ever flexed in its heyday. ACA damns what ADA blesses. It opposes the graduated income tax, "bribery of the Sovereign States with 'handouts'" (the Federal-aid programs), costly internationalism (e.g., the purchase of UN bonds), and such measures as last year's trade act, which allows the President to cut tariffs. Democratic congressmen once attacked it as a "Birch front."

ACA makes a fundamental assault upon U.S. Government as it has developed since 1932. ACA-ers insist they are not "radicals," even though they fervently demand, in the name of the Founding Fathers, such a revolution in the status quo as to fit Webster's definition of radical: "one who advocates . . . sweeping changes in laws . . . and methods of government with the least delay. . . ."

ACA's Washington headquarters lists key votes in the House and Senate, rates each man's ideological purity on a percentage scale. The result: ACA's "Cumulative Consistency Index." It operates like the indices long published by ADA and the AFL-CIO's political arm, COPE. But, naturally, it comes out with opposite figures. Barry Goldwater grades 99 percent perfect on the votes he has cast since 1955, but Kentucky's able Republican Sen. John Sherman Cooper has flunked, by ACA's grading system, on all but 25 percent of his votes.

The driving force in ACA is Adm. Ben Moreell, a selfless conservative. He now runs ACA as he formerly ran the "can-do" Seabees of World War II. In the 1962 campaigns, he fielded 18 "professional organizers and campaign specialists" to work quietly for 46 favored candidates. In its wider theater of political operations, ACA provided money and other help to a total of 184 candidates, of whom 135 won (14 of them Democrats). The Admiral claims for ACA a "substantial role" in sinking two incumbent senators and ten liberal members of the House. His organization has been the most decisive factor in the pattern of Republican change in Congress. While gaining fewer seats than expected, the GOP elected, in its Classes of '61 and '63, a band of some 25 "gung-ho" young conservatives. This new bloc works as a unit, pretty much the way the liberal caucus once operated on the other side of the aisle.

ACA reaches out through 29 local chapters across the country, but it serves mainly for money-raising and lacks the grass-roots fervor coveted by the Conservative Movement. In the grass-roots business, the Birch Society outgrows everybody else. However, many a less weedy organization has been sprouting among the under-35 set, all the way from California's Orange County to New York's Westchester. In Chicago's Near North Side, the liberal ladies of the Women for Peace March now find themselves outmarched by the North Side Young Conservatives, who ring doorbells for GOP candidates and throw cocktail parties ($1.50 at the door) to raise funds. "We talk politics," explains a happy partygoer, "so the evening isn't wasted."

YAF LEADS THE YOUNG ACTIVISTS

The most active of the new groups is Young Americans for Freedom. YAF was born in 1960 on the Buckley family's Connecticut estate, and editor Buckley nourishes it through his magazine and some seventy lecture-circuit performances a year. YAF now claims a national membership of 20,000. Not all of the members share Buckley's aversion to "fetishistic" views of democracy. But they do share his bent for political activism to overcome the helpless feeling that one vote, out of 68 million, "has about the weight of a grain of sand."

YAF's chief in Indiana is dedicated Richard Allen, 24. Though he has a wife and three children, he suddenly quit his job as an insurance adjuster a year ago to be a full-time crusader. "Some conservatives have to make sacrifices," he said. He set up an office for YAF political action, soon solicited enough money from businessmen to pay his pared-down salary ($95 a week), meet the office rent and hire a secretary. Allen eats little, works seven days most weeks and lets the grass at home go unmowed, while he "does a little research on Socialistic propaganda." He formed 18 new YAF chapters, many of them among ebullient teen-agers. One handsome YAF-er at Butler University checks out the political views of pretty girls so that he will not accidentally date a liberal. Courting couples go out gaily on picket lines to counter such menaces as peace marchers, to fight Medicare or to demand a "no" vote in the wheat referendum. Allen's forces now are gathering signatures on their nationwide "Draft Goldwater" petitions. "If they don't nominate Goldwater," Allen believes, "there will be a lot of effort around the country for a third party."

So it goes. ACA, YAF and dozens of other organizations and publications exert increasing pressure upon a Republican leadership already well to the right of its membership. The militants threaten to impose upon the GOP a hard-right orthodoxy as rigid, though opposite in ideology, as the left-wing line that labor once tried to impose upon the Democratic party. As the GOP moves right, Kennedy Democrats take over the whole center. Even now, the broad middle area once occupied by Rockefeller-style Republicans has come to look narrow. Top right-wing planners, letting the wish father the thought, counted Rockefeller out of the Presidential race before his Happy marriage. They worry instead about Eisenhower and Nixon throwing weight behind Romney or Scranton.

Whatever it may do to the GOP, the right has already brought the fire of passion—a hotter flame than reason—back into politics. The emotion arises less from the leaders than the led, most of whom come fresh and fervid to any kind of politics or civic action. The typical member is a hard worker who has, in the postwar prosperity, outrun his economic dreams. He is ready to do things, but the civic groups and political parties lack the vitality to come collect his energy. He belongs, with many non-Birchers, to the latest big wave of citizens who have surged into the vast middle-class.

Newcomers have always had to fight, rudely, to prove themselves as good as the stuffed shirts already there. The Populists attacked the whole system—banks, railroads, political parties. In the '20's, revivalist Billy Sunday's white-shirted believers waved the Temperance banner and declared themselves better than all those whiskey-drinking rich people. The labor movement led the power play for the blue-collars, and McCarthy gave some ambitious Catholics the chance to claim they were "more American" than those overeducated pinkos. Now, roaring in, comes the new wave, led by the West's latest battalion of affluent migrants. They attack the biggest thing around, the Federal Government—which bites into their goodly but always tight budgets with taxes, is unable (or is it unwilling?) to get rid of world communism and turns a deaf ear to their cries of danger.

In this superheated situation, even the old-fashioned demagogues see opportunity. Jew-baiter Gerald L. K. Smith has popped up, active again. Smith's monthly, The Cross and the Flag, advises followers to infiltrate Birch chapters in search of members who will add the Jews to their list of Red conspirators. But Smith, the neo-Nazis and other racists get rough treatment from most right-wing leaders. One of Goldwater's attractions is his half-Jewish blood, which insures the right against the racist evil and the appearance of evil.

Though they ward off racists, the new right's leaders seem unable to purge themselves of Robert Welch. Nor will they until they can offer something more responsible than phantom Communists and freedom whoops. They have yet to put substance into what they call "the Conservative vision." The liberal vision of the future, whatever its Utopian defects, inspired men to specific action toward a better society. Now it has grown fat with success and stale in its addiction to Federal pills for all ills. What is the right's alternative? Buckley's deepest book, Up From Liberalism, attacked the liberal's apparent lack of a philosophy of goals. But his own proposed goals, to enhance individual freedom, offer few specifics for responsible men: "I will not willingly cede more power to anyone, not to the state, not to General Motors, not to the CIO."

This, he admits, is "a No-Program." In the name of conservatism, it does injustice to the responsible conservatives who work with the whole complex of their institutions—their businesses, their charities and (as little as possible) the different echelons of their government—to better the conditions in which they and their nation live. The no-program also leaves the new affluent with the heart-sinking certainty that the future offers nothing more worthy than a tax reduction. Without vision, the road ahead looms dark and dangerous.

But it is not impassable to any but the soul-sick minority. California's Thomas Kuchel, GOP Senate Whip, recently stood up and fought back at the "fright mail" flooding his office, as it does every office on the Hill. Kuchel's simple courage cleared the air. Back came 13,000 letters. Hundreds were "unsigned epistles sopping with hate and bigotry," but, significantly, the whole pile counted out four-to-one for Kuchel. Many citizens who had never before written to Washington declared their determination to stand against extremism. They, like other Americans in the years just ahead, will have to fight at home for what they believe and, in the fight, come to know better and care more for what it is. The '64 campaign, already boiling, promises to be this generation's hottest political test.

GOVERNOR ROCKEFELLER'S CHALLENGE

I would like to call the Senate's attention to an important political document in the history of the Republican Party. I refer to a statement which was made by Governor Rockefeller this weekend and which has already developed widespread comment and reaction.

Governor Rockefeller's statement marks a struggle for the soul of the Republican Party, which is vital to the nation and therefore, worthy of thoughtful consideration without regard to parties. For, the success of the radical right, which is boring from within the Republican Party and seeking to take it over, using the imminent Presidential campaign as a vehicle, will determine whether the two-party system in the United States can continue.

The Democratic Party has seen such a challenge, too, in the States' Rights Party of 1948; and even now, important legislation in the Congress is under the threat from some quarters of paralysis because of the imminent civil rights debate and the powerful positions held, as a result of seniority, within the Congressional structure of the majority party.

To continue a viable two-party system, neither major party can leave the mainstream of American political thought -- and this is without regard to liberal or conservative principles. The Republican Party has to be true to the principles which make it the party of Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, Robert Taft and Dwight Eisenhower, and other greats, just as the Democratic Party has to be true to the principles of Jefferson, Jackson, Wilson and Franklin Roosevelt, and its greats.

For this reason, the struggle within the Republican Party is not just an intra-party struggle. It is a national struggle.

Governor Rockefeller's statement is a challenge to the conscience of every Republican. But more than that, it is a call to all Americans to deal in a forthright manner with the grave threat to our political institutions posed by extremist elements, whether in the Democratic Party or the Republican Party.

Those who view the Governor's statement as merely a political gambit or an opening gun in the Presidential sweepstakes are underestimating its importance. They are running away from the issues and the challenge which Governor Rockefeller has presented.

The party of Abraham Lincoln must be true to its heritage in the civil rights fight and in the coming Presidential campaign; without such fidelity to principle and precedent, the civil rights fight cannot be won in the Congress and the Presidential campaign could develop into a threat to the nation's principles of justice and freedom.

The issue is joined. Governor Rockefeller is obviously enlisting for the duration; so are many other Republicans, including colleagues in the Senate; and so am I.

Actions In Washington Influence All Of Us

All of us are influenced by what goes on in Washington. Indeed, every person on the face of the earth is affected by every major decision that takes place at that focal point of government.

All of us read about Washington, and hear what is going on there. But few of us ever take the time and trouble to investigate first hand just exactly what is factual, actual, and true. The publisher of Jordan Enterprises Weekly Newspapers, DuPree Jordan, Jr., has just returned from a full week in the nation's Capital doing just exactly that.

Publisher Jordan originally made the trip for the purpose of interviewing half a dozen key leaders of this nation, asking them questions to get a picture of exactly what this country is doing, and how, what problems are being met in exactly what way, and why.

But the first few days of talks and discussions quickly led to still more appointments, and the idea of a series of articles in the NORTH DEKALB RECORD, in THE WEEKLY STAR, and in the TRI COUNTY GRAPHIC, gradually grew into this special magazine supplement which is appearing simultaneously in all three newspapers.

Although it was not an easy matter, as our readers can well imagine, these interviews led to the very heart of the thinking and planning of Congress and of the nation. Talks with Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, with Secretary of State Dean Rusk, and Defense Secretary Robert McNamara, and personal contacts with many key figures in both the Senate and the House of Representatives, gave a comprehensive and accurate picture of just what is being done in Washington, and how it is being handled.

The following pages reveal the results of these many top-level interviews. Washington thinking on domestic difficulties such as Civil Rights and financial problems, and the many fields of foreign affairs, can be seen directly from the conversations of the men responsible for these major decisions.

TYPICAL OF THE LEADERSHIP in Washington today are these men in all branches of government, from all sections of the country, representing both major political parties. Comments from all of these twelve leaders and from many others not pictured on this page, will be found inside this special section prepared from personal interviews conducted in Washington by the publisher of Jordan Enterprises Weekly Newspaper.

Presidential 1964 Prospects Leads Washington Topics

Everywhere you turn in Washington, government leaders are talking about the prospects, problems, and possibilities involved in the 1964 presidential campaign.

Everyone assumes that the Democratic Convention will be simply a routine performance, with very little more real debate over issues in a platform than the rubber-stamp approval of the President as the party's candidate.

The Republicans prospects are much more complicated. Many expect a real knock-down-drag-out fight over both the platform and the candidates that will make up the GOP ticket. The prelude to that battle has already begun in the heated exchanges between Governor Nelson Rockefeller of New York and Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona. Although many Republican leaders such as Senator Thruston Morton of Kentucky feel that these verbal volleys back and forth will have no lasting effect, and that the party will eventually unite completely behind one man, there are many others who are much less comfortable over the problems.

Quite a number of the Republican leaders such as Senator Jacob Javits of New York believe that there is a definite and dangerous division within the party, and that it well might not be possible to reconcile the various elements by the time the convention is completed.

Some of the more liberal Republicans will be pushing very hard for a strong platform, stating in detail the stand of the party on several basic issues, such as the need for much more specific Civil Rights legislation. Others do not want to be forced into any statement of policy that would alienate the south and the mid-west, the strongest hopes for a Republican candidate at the present time. There is a very real dilemma within the GOP as to whether it would be best to write off the less populous areas such as the south and midwest, and to make an all-out appeal for the heavily populated industrial areas of the East and West Coast.

This cleavage in the Republican ranks, which gives every evidence of growing rather than lessening in the months ahead, gives some little comfort to democratic strategists. Many Administration leaders would be most disconsolate over the severe reaction against the President's Civil Rights proposals, for example, but for the fact that they feel confident the Republicans will eventually alienate the staunch segregationists and states righters who have reacted so violently to the Kennedy ideas for enforcement of such legislation.

These Democratic leaders state quite candidly that they do not expect Civil Rights to

PUBLIC HEARINGS ARE very common before the various committees of the House and Senate. This was one of the hearings conducted by the Senate Commerce Committee to

ONE OF MANY hearings of the Senate Commerce Committee was this session in one of the larger public rooms, at which Secretary of Labor Willard Weeks gave a prepared statement as to why he felt the public accommodations provisions of the Civil Rights legislation was right and needed.

All Other Questions Tend To Point To The White House

There are many strong currents and cross-currents in Washington today. Many feel that it is tragic but others regard as wholesome the fact that in the background of all these activities is the problem of a presidential election in 1964. Certainly very few decisions are made in the Nation's Capital today without reference to the political campaigning that will be done next year.

The biggest, and most urgent matters are influenced by political considerations just as cide who goes back to Congress next year, and who is selected as the nation's Chief Executive for the next four years.

Civil Rights continues to consume more time and energy than any single consideration. Many officials are on the spot with this bill, particularly the most volatile portions of it such as the public accommodations section. Many protagonists on both sides of the issue are seeking a happy compromise, but are finding it most difficult to locate.

for the Administration are speaking out regularly and are increasingly insistent, both publicly and privately, trying to emphasize the dangers of these demonstrations.

Despite the furor and heated emotions connected with the Civil Rights controversies, there are several conservative leaders in Washington who still feel that fiscal affairs should receive priority in all matters before Congress at the present time. Some such as Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia point out the very real and growing dangers to over the severe reaction against the President's Civil Rights proposals, for example, but for the fact that they feel confident the Republicans will eventually alienate the staunch segregationists and states righters who have reacted so violently to the Kennedy ideas for enforcement of such legislation.

PUBLIC HEARINGS ARE very common before the various committees of the House and Senate. This was one of the hearings conducted by the Senate Commerce Committee to get a sounding of public sentiment on the Civil Rights proposals, and specifically the public accommodations provisions. At this particular session, in one of the smaller hearing rooms, several officials from the state of Maryland, and from private businesses in that state, gave their testimony against the force and compulsion involved in the public accommodations proposals.

These Democratic leaders state quite candidly that they do not expect Civil Rights to be the over-riding issue in the presidential campaign next year. They are counting on the fact that the Republicans will be forced to come out strongly for Civil Rights legislation in a bid for the high density industrial areas that favor such action, and consequently will leave the conservatives of the South and Midwest with nowhere to go on that particular point. When the vote is decided on other issues, the Democrats feel that their historical and traditional stronghold on the South will still carry most of those states for them, and that the President is in a fairly good position for his re-election efforts.

Many southern congressmen reason the same way, but not all of them are as comfortable about it. Indeed, some of them who would like to support the President are very hesitant about how much help they can afford to give him in his campaign next year, and still others are openly inclined to support a Republican candidate if the GOP ticket should be headed by a more conservative politician such as Goldwater.

There is no question but that next year will see the political game played to the hilt, regard as wholesome the fact that in the background of all these activities is the problem of a presidential election in 1964. Certainly very few decisions are made in the Nation's Capital today without reference to the political campaigning that will be done next year.

The biggest, and most urgent matters are influenced by political considerations just as much as the others. Indeed, some feel that the more important and far-reaching the decision, the more carefully it is weighed in reference to its political effects.

The current Civil Rights controversy, the many financial or fiscal problems, including the proposed tax cuts, the need for an increase in the nation's debt ceiling, and the problem of the nation's outflow of gold, together with the complications on the labor scene as typified by the threatened nationwide railroad strike, and the many trouble spots in foreign affairs all over the face of the earth, and the proposed test ban agreements, all are viewed in the light of what people will think of each individual's vote both here at home and abroad, but particularly the voters who will decide the outcome of the next years.

Civil Rights continues to consume more time and energy than any single consideration. Many officials are on the spot with this bill, particularly the most volatile portions of it such as the public accommodations section. Many protagonists on both sides of the issue are seeking a happy compromise, but are finding it most difficult to locate. Many feel that regardless of the final outcome, the proposals will have created much more harm than good this year, and will probably damage distinctly the President's relationship with and influence upon Congress.

Demonstrations in the streets of many of our cities, and the increasingly angry mood of the more militant Negro leaders, is regarded by everyone as a dangerous two-edged sword. In fact, it seems that the more liberal leaders who are pushing for the Civil Rights measures are even more concerned about the riots and the threats of bloodshed than are the more conservative politicians who are steadfastly opposed to any break in segregationist practices. All agree on the fact that increasing pressure from the most aggressive Negroes is much more likely to kill the public accommodations proposals than it is to help them. The President, the Attorney General, and many other influential spokesmen to emphasize the dangers of these demonstrations.

Despite the furor and heated emotions connected with the Civil Rights controversies, there are several conservative leaders in Washington who still feel that fiscal affairs should receive priority in all matters before Congress at the present time. Some such as Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia point out the very real and growing dangers to the economic stability of this nation and its influence in the world, while many others on both sides of the Civil Rights issue point to the fact that racial problems are very closely and directly relared to economic developments. The unrest of many Negroes is tied to the rising unemployment among the colored work problem of unemployment is directly related to the general economic health of the United States.

Foreign Affairs has a tendency to be pushed back behind other more pressing problems unless there is some particular crisis or national emergency. If the threat in Cuba, in Southeast Asia, or elsewhere should break out into a boiling issue, then most congressmen would immediately turn their attention to that crisis problem. But as long as those foreign fields are relatively quiet, and with the growing rift between the Communist Chinese and Soviet Russia, many representatives feel safe in turning away from those problems to the more immediate domestic difficulties.

Everyone is very much aware of the nuclear test ban proposals, but the details of the suggested agreement will probably be getting a thorough airing for several more days yet. Most observers feel that this weak first step will probably be approved when it is all over, but it may be a close vote.

Everything has a tendency to keep coming back to next year, and the problems and prospects involved in the presidential campaign. Key leaders in both parties have their eyes glued to the conflict between two representative candidates in the 1964 election, and somehow everything else tends to pale by comparison.

THE ROTUNDA OF THE CAPITOL is a very popular focal point where tourists come and go in a steady stream all throughout the year. The Capitol Building is one of the fine points of interest for everyone visiting Washington.

SHOWN IN HIS PRIVATE office, Georgia Senator Richard B. Russell is surrounded by papers and documents indicative of the heavy load of responsibility which he carries. A visitor to Washington very quickly gets the impression that our Federal Government floats on a sea of paper.

TALKING ABOUT SEVERAL key issues now being considered by the Senate, Senator Richard B. Russell expresses himself forcefully on all matters, and has a wealth of information on any subject, gathered from his 30 years service in the Senate.

PICTURED HERE IN the recording studios of the Senate is Georgia's Junior Senator, Herman E. Talmadge, preparing to give his regular weekly report for radio and TV stations all over Georgia. The Senator regularly reports to the people back home the various activities in the nation's Capital, rarely using notes.

Talmadge And Russell Agreed In Opposition To Civil Rights

Both of Georgia's senators are greatly disturbed by the latest Civil Rights proposals of President John F. Kennedy, particularly the public accommodations provisions which have stirred up such a furor throughout the nation.

Senator Russell, who has already spoken out publicly on a number of occasions including a major address in Georgia a couple of weeks ago, says that it is hard for him to imagine just what caused the Administration to go to such extremes, or how the President could have been so badly misled as to the real feeling of the American people as a whole.

law were enforced as the Kennedys would like to see it passed, it would spell the end of freedom and democracy in the United States.

He said, for example, that if any individual were refused service for any justifiable reason, he could still claim racial discrimination, and in effect place the burden of proof upon the business or company with whom he was dealing to prove that discrimination had not been practiced against him. In the absence of such proof that there was no discrimination, that business could be fined and penalized, and tied up in legal entanglements indefinitely, cut off from any federal funds even to stopping Social Security payments and other federal benefits to individuals who happened to live within that state.

STILL DEMOCRATIC

Both of the Senators were reluctant to make any prediction about a national election more than a year in the future, though they agreed that at the present time, Republican Barry Goldwater's states rights views had generated considerable strength for him throughout the South. Both said that Georgia is not as surely Democratic as it has been for the past 90 years, though both were agreed that

Senator Russell, who has already spoken out publicly on a number of occasions including a major address in Georgia a couple of weeks ago, says that it is hard for him to imagine just what caused the Administration to go to such extremes, or how the President could have been so badly misled as to the real feeling of the American people as a whole.

Senator Talmadge, who has also been outspoken already in his opposition to and criticism of the President's recommendations, pointed out some of the penalty provisions provided by the public accommodations proposals, and described them as the most dictatorial and high-handed display of brutal political force that this country has ever seen. He stated with vehemence his conviction that if the reason, he could still claim racial discrimination, and in effect place the burden of proof upon the business or company with whom he was dealing to prove that discrimination had not been practiced against him. In the absence of such proof that there was no discrimination, that business could be fined and penalized, and tied up in legal entanglements indefinitely, and the state in which it was located could likewise be penalized severely.

As an example, if the charges were made against a bank or a savings and loan association, the federal government could withdraw its guarantee of that institution's deposits, and sever all connections and relationships with that financial institution. Further, the state in which the business was located could be completely reluctant to make any prediction about a national election more than a year in the future, though they agreed that at the present time, Republican Barry Goldwater's states rights views had generated considerable strength for him throughout the South. Both said that Georgia is not as surely Democratic as it has been for the past 90 years, though both were agreed that Governor Rockefeller would make a miserable showing if he were the Republican nominee.

Senator Talmadge said that having always been a Democrat, he hopes to remain a Democrat, and so vote in the coming presidential election.

Senator Russell stated that President Kennedy's rapid about-face and sudden determination to press what he calls his civil rights bill to passage has decreased the President's popularity throughout the South. This was particularly true because the bill went even farther than the very drastic platform upon which the President ran.

Both Senators stated that there was very little understanding througout the country of the many threats which the bill posed to the liberties of the people in every section and that they expect a long hard fight in the Senate before the nation generally would be awakened to the dangers in GRIMACING AND GROWLING over the difficulties he encountered in using a new candid camera during his recent week in Washington, Publisher DuPree Jordan, Jr. wonders why the contrary contraption acted up as badly as it did during his many interviews. Mr. Jordan took literally hundreds of photographs of key government leaders all over Washington, and many of them simply did not turn out, through some mechanical difficulties which have yet to be explained satisfactorily. For example, all of the photographs he made of Senator George Smathers of Florida and Senator Thruston Morton of Kentucky turned up completely blank.

ATTORNEY GENERAL ROBERT F. KENNEDY is seen in the middle of this photo talking with a group of newsmen just after he had entered the Senate auditorium to testify at a public hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

INDICATIVE OF THE VAST volume of mail handled by members of Congress are these rows of robot typewriters which type up individually but automatically hundreds upon hundreds of form letters that are sent out by the various members of the House and Senate. Most Senators have at least two of these automatic machines in regular service for their offices, and most members of the House of Representatives are also compelled to use these same facilities, either in their own offices, or in pools that are available at the Capitol.

RELAXED BEHIND HIS desk, busy House Speaker John McCormack discusses legislative matters which are now under consideration by various committees of the House. He emphasizes the committee system of operation in Congress, and stresses the fact that there has been a great deal more accomplished this year than most people realize.

House Speaker Sees Progress Being Made By 88Th Congress

Despite the many charges made against it, and much criticism as a do-nothing Congress, the present 88th Congress is not nearly as bad as many have feared, according to Speaker of the House John W. McCormack.

The real accomplishments of the present Congress can not be measured until its two years have been finished, and even this present year may turn out much better than many seem to think at the present time. So much of the work in the House of Representatives goes on in committee sessions that you can never tell just exactly what is being done or how much is being accomplished simply by following the action on the floor of the House itself.

Speaker McCormack emphasizes the fact that there are so many important matters in key committees at the present time, it is grossly unfair to label the Congress as lazy and inept purely because little major legislation has come to a vote on the floor. The Speaker from Massachusetts says that he tries to keep up with all important matters as they are being considered by committees, and he confers regularly with the various committee chairmen, but there are so many factors involved in these various considerations, and in the time required for the committees to do their work, that it is very difficult to give a meaningful assessment of what Congress has done or is doing until it is ready for its final adjournment.

In the opinion of Mr. McCormack, the problem of Civil Rights is no greater than several other key issues before Congress at the present time. He points to the fiscal problems of the nation, and to the labor difficulties facing the United States. He says that the question of a tax cut, and the need to raise the debt ceiling of the goverment again, tied in with many other money matters such as the problem of the outflow of gold from this nation, combine to make a most serious and complicated problem demanding congressional attention.

The same is true in the field of possible labor legislation to meet the threat of strikes that threaten the national interest, and to deal with the so-called "feather bedding" problem as is now faced in the railroad dispute, and which has parallels in many other key industries. All of these are urgent matters, according to Speaker McCormack.

The Speaker has a steady flow of important visitors parading in and out of his office. On the three different days we visited in his office, we waited for several hours on the different occasions, as he conferred with congressional leaders, discussed problems with men like Walter Reuther, who was testifying before a special committee considering Civil Rights legislation, and he enjoys entertaining visiting delegations from foreign countries such as the group from Afghanistan which had a lengthy social visit with the Speaker on one of the occasions while we were waiting.

The activity all around the Speaker's office is indicative of the variety of legislative action in which he is involved. If you spend much time in those offices you are likely to see almost anyone from the legislative, and/or executive branches of government. McCormack meets them all without definite appointments, and sees as many as he possibly can every day.

SOMBER AND SERIOUS as he is asked about some of the most pressing problems before the House today, Speaker John W. McCormack talks about how these various problems are being solved, and indicates that much progress is being made in committee deliberations.

Byrd Fights Growing Debt And Excess Federal Spending

Like most staunch southerners, Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia is violently opposed to the Civil Rights measures now being debated in various Congressional Committees. However, he feels just as strongly that fiscal affairs are just as important as the Civil Rights issue, and that both fields show some most disturbing signs about which all American citizens should be concerned.

Long regarded as the watchdog of the United States budget, Senator Byrd says that there is a positive danger of increasingly serious financial of stopping the rapid trend toward larger and more expensive central government, but he still opposes the developments in this direction with all of the influence he can muster, which is quite considerable. He advocates states rights and individual initiative, and urges everyone to consider the wisdom of flatly refusing federal funds. He says the only way to reverse the trend is for local and state governments to turn down federal assistance, and to do on their own anything and everything that they possible can.

He does believe that many stitutional abridgements of individual rights involves many grave dangers, which could quite conceivably lose the White House for the Democratic Party in 1964. Byrd points with some concern to the fact that his state has gone Republican in the last three presidential elections, and could well do so again as a result of this particular problem.

In the Senate for more than 30 years, the Virginia senator will not now talk about retirement. He had announced his retirement toward the end of his last term, but was draft-

Because of more daylight hours this time of year, many Georgia egg producers turn off artificial lights in laying houses too early. Milton Dendy, Extension Service poultryman, says it usually proves profitable to set the time switch for the morning lights to come on as usual throughout the summer months. Turning the lights off too early often results in birds going into a neck molt or complete molt. This is particularly true in flocks of older birds. Lower egg production and lower profits may be the result.

Long regarded as the watchdog of the United States budget, Senator Byrd says that there is a positive danger of increasingly serious financial problems in this nation. He is convinced that the danger of national bankruptcy, or of having the world lose confidence in our economic stability, is just as urgent and as real a problem as are the individual rights, the trouble spots on the foreign scene, or any other matter which addresses itself to the attention of Congress.

You can see the genuine alarm and concern of the man whenever he thinks of our national debt as being more than one trillion dollars (that's a thousand billion dollars). This staggering sum is much more than the combined debts of all the other nations of the world, and the Virginia senator wonders aloud just how much longer we can continue to carry it.

muster, which is quite considerable. He advocates states rights and individual initiative, and urges everyone to consider the wisdom of flatly refusing federal funds. He says the only way to reverse the trend is for local and state governments to turn down federal assistance, and to do on their own anything and everything that they possible can.

He does believe that many people are waking up to the fact that everything going to Washington loses 15% and comes back not only with reduced funds, but with strings attached and often excessive government demands tied in with the lesser amounts of money.

He sees a logical justification for federal participation in some areas, such as highway construction on interstate routes, but he is unalterably opposed to federal aid to education, and in many other fields where he feels that the problems can be better and more effectively handled on a local level.

Senator Byrd is very much opposed to the Civil Rights legislation, and intends to fight it in every way that he can. He feels that forcing upon the south and the nation unconpoints with some concern to the fact that his state has gone Republican in the last three presidential elections, and could well do so again as a result of this particular problem.

In the Senate for more than 30 years, the Virginia senator will not now talk about retirement. He had announced his retirement toward the end of his last term, but was drafted by the leadership of his state and persuaded to run again for the seat he has held these many years. There are strong indications that the powerful Senator Byrd will be around for many more years yet.

Attorney General Is Concerned About Demonstrations And Crime

Atlanta is the best example in the nation of good race relations, and the practical workings of an intelligent approach to a very serious problem that is growing in all parts of the nation today.

That is the opinion of Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, and he was most cordial in discussing the problems of race in the United States today, and most complimentary to the city of Atlanta for the happy solutions worked out by thoughtful men of intelligence and good will who are willing to deal with the problem in a practical and progressive way.

Kennedy stated flatly that he feels Atlanta has shown the way not only for the South, but for the entire nation, perhaps even more for many hypocritical cities of the north. The Attorney General is very frankly aware of the fact that many of those in the north who have been talking the most about equality for the Negroes have done even less to put it into practice than have the major cities of the South.

The man who controls the law enforcement apparatus of the United States government, and who is considered to be the most powerful individual in the nation next to his brother who sits in the President's chair, says he believes the Negroes need to slow down in extreme actions that lead to violence. He is convinced, and has told Negro leaders, that the extremes of their recent demonstrations only hurt their own cause. He believes that continued demonstrations, especially if they lead to more riots and violence, could well kill the Civil Rights legislation now before Congress.

SEES A NEED

Bobby Kennedy feels very strongly the need for such legislation, and adequate enforcement of it. He presented a most eloquent statement to the Senate Judiciary Committee at its hearings last week, and he is doing everything within his power to push through the Civil Rights proposals made by the Administration. But he understands the reaction of southern congressmen, and their voters back home, against the more militant demands of the extreme Negro leadership, and the evidences of ingratitude expressed dramatically on several recent occasions by such Negro leaders. The Attorney General has been puzzled about as much as southern segregationists over the treatment received by people like James Meredith who integrated the University of Mississippi and Mayor Daly of Chicago who has done so much to help the Negroes in that city.

Apart from the pressing problem of racial strife, crime of all kinds is receiving systematic study by the Justice Department today, and its vigorous young leader. The crime problem is being attacked in co-operation with ROBERT F. KENNEDY talks with a great deal of conviction as he discusses the various problems which face him in the position which he holds in the Administration of his brother, the President. Relatively small and extremely youthful in appearance, he displays a dynamic and dedicated personality, completely devoted to his tasks.

RELAXED BEHIND HIS DESK as he discussed the problems of Civil Rights legislation

A CAB DRIVER named Karey expressed the thinking and sentiment of many Negroes in the nation's Capital when he compared the present demands for Civil Rights to collecting a long overdue debt. Originally from North Carolina, but a resident of Washington for many years, this man expressed a distaste of the street demonstrations which are being carried on in a number of cities throughout the nation, but said that if such action was necessary that it should RELAXED BEHIND HIS DESK as he discussed the problems of Civil Rights legislation now before Congress, the Attorney General sympathizes with the problems of the of the South, and was most complimentary in describing the progress made in Atlanta.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL of the United States has a deceptively youthful appearance, but demonstrates beyond question the drive and determination that have made him the second most powerful man in the nation today. He is thoroughly familiar with all of the problems of this country, particularly in the field of law enforcement.

treatment received by people like James Meredith who integrated the University of Mississippi and Mayor Daly of Chicago who has done so much to help the Negroes in that city.

Apart from the pressing problem of racial strife, crime of all kinds is receiving systematic study by the Justice Department today, and its vigorous young leader. The crime problem is being attacked in co-operation with local law enforcement agencies throughout the nation.

The Attorney General points out that most crime is local in its nature, and must be handled primarily on that local level. But his offices are doing everything possible to cooperate with local law enforcement officials, and are effectively finding more ways every day to help meet the many problems in this area.

Crime in the District of Columbia, while recognized as a very serious problem, is not nearly as bad or entirely black as it is often pictured, according to Robert Kennedy. The situation in the Nation's Capital is vastly complicated by the multiple involvements of so many different groups and individuals, but basically the Attorney General feels that the situation is improving, and that most of the present problems could be solved under a thorough-going home rule authority given to the residents of the district.

During World War II, U. S. railroads paid an average of $3,172,000 in federal income taxes per day.

A CAB DRIVER named Karey expressed the thinking and sentiment of many Negroes in the nation's Capital when he compared the present demands for Civil Rights to collecting a long overdue debt. Originally from North Carolina, but a resident of Washington for many years, this man expressed a distaste of the street demonstrations which are being carried on in a number of cities throughout the nation, but said that if such action was necessary that it should be continued.

He said that it was just like trying to collect money from someone who had been owing it to you a long time, and had finally forced you to employ extreme means of collecting what was already your rightful due. He believes that many Negroes now feel that the full and complete citizenship which they are demanding with increasing vehemence is something that should have been theirs 100 years ago, and that any means necessary are now justified in obtaining it.

There are others among the more militant leaders of the Negroes today who carry the analogy to a long overdue debt a step further. They reason that the colored people of this country not only have a right to demand everything that is due them, and demand that it be given immediately and without any further excuses or delays, but also that interest should be paid on that long standing debt. This line of logic insists that Negroes in the United States today should not only be treated as equals, but should actually be given preference in any circumstances where all other factors are equal, and that this preferential treatment of their race in the years ahead is simply payment on the interest to compensate for the fact that they have been discriminated against for many years in the past.

The customs man poked through an old gentleman's luggage and located a flask of whiskey.

"I thought you said you have nothing but clothes in here", the inspector said.

"I did, and it's true," the old gent replied. "That, sire, is my nightcap!"

It is right to be contented with what we have, never with what we are. - Sir J. Mackintosh.

State Department Sees Great Progress All Over The Globe

The traditional image of the United States as the "land of the free and the home of the brave" has been greatly damaged by recent racial demonstrations in the nation, and especially by the riots and violence which have presented a picture to the world of police dogs, fire hoses, and screaming Negro demonstrators. However, some of the damage done in other nations by these unhappy scenes can be eradicated if a strong Civil Rights Bill is passed by the present Congress.

That is the firm opinion of the State Department, and is based upon their careful study of all nations throughout the world, both those who have been inclined to support United States policy abroad, and also those who have been most critical of this nation. According to the top officials of the State Department, the world believes in President Kennedy and in the United States under his leadership. But failure to take action on the Civil Rights program would result in distinct damage to the prestige of both.

Special interviews with Secretary of State Dean Rusk, and with his top policy-planner Walt Rostow, brought out these facts and many other details relating to the foreign policy of the United States at this time.

Both men feel that the attitudes toward the United States have improved dramatically among the peoples of the world during the last two or three years, in some instances changing from antagonism and as it has often been pictured in some press reports.

For example, the new President of Brazil is not considered a Communist by our State Department, but is looked upon as a practical politician who seems to be turning more to the United States, and is genuinely inclined to cooperate in the Alliance for Progress.

State Department officials also pointed to the latest political vote in Argentina as being a happy reflection of a turn towards stable democratic government.

Several other nations and specific problems were clicked off in order, with emphasis Communist leadership in China today has been together through so very much for so many years that they are determined to stick together and ment is watching closely is the growing conflict between the Soviet Union and Red China. Our officials feel that the setback of the Russians in Berlin and Cuba, and Soviet difficulties in other areas, are very much on the plus side of the ledger for us.

The Chinese, incidentally, are in a bad way, with problems that are likely much more severe than have even been pictured in this country. Officials say that the heavy industrial develop-

Part of this may stem from the fact that everyone knows Dean Rusk is a Georgian, and is thoroughly familiar with the problems and the attitudes of the South.

Both men feel that the attitudes toward the United States have improved dramatically among the peoples of the world during the last two or three years, in some instances changing from antagonism and distrust to strong gratitude and confidence. Mr. Rostow cited India as one example of this, and said that our quick support of the Indians at the time of the Communist Chinese invasion had won us a lasting friendship among the peoples of that vast nation, and has made real heroes of Americans in India at that time and since.

In discussing several specific problems and trouble points in Asia, such as India, Laos and South Vietnam, the strong opinion was expressed repeatedly that Asia is finding its feet and Communist thrusts are being dealt with. The same is true among many of the newer emerging nations of Africa, with many of them making progress toward a much better understanding of this nation and working relationship with us. And Latin America has never been as bad given to each one, showing the progress that has been made toward a more favorable working relationship with the United States, and a growing acceptance of U.S. policy during the past few years.

Another factor in our foreign affairs which the State Department convinced that when these strong-willed leaders die out, the multiplicity of problems in China will very likely cause important changes in policy and could well overwhelm the new leaders of the nation, causing these younger men to fall out among themselves. It is the concensus at State that any other group of ambitious politicians would probably have already split up under the pressure of so many great and urgent problems, but the top

While part of our improved position in the eyes of the world has come about through the conflict and disagreements among our Communist competition on the global scene, much of it has also been accomplished as a result of the vigorous and youthful picture presented to the world by the Kennedy Administration. But the image is flawed by the racial incidents in the United

Key Republican Leaders Feel GOP Will Win Presidency

Three key leaders of the Republican Party on a national level have differing views on the Civil Rights proposals now before Congress, the motivations of the President and the present democratic administration in making these proposals, and the likely outcome of these debates in the legislative process.

House Minority Leader Charles E. Halleck of Indiana made it plain that he has not yet taken any position on the Civil Rights proposals now be-tions, at least under the provisions as outlined by President Kennedy. Morton was the only one of the three Republican leaders who felt there was any possibility of passage of any public accommodations provisions, and he indicated that such would be possible only if they were drastically revised and modified from the original proposals of the Administration.

Although all three men were agreed in their general opposition to the extreme action intended by the President, they did not agree on their interpretations of the reasoning behind such action, or the likely consequences of been on the payroll of any particular Party, and promoting the candidacy of a particular individual. Dirksen wondered if Harris had questioned people in the United States, or had done his interviewing in Laos or South Vietnam.

Morton felt that there could be some reasonable justification for the conclusions drawn, and that the wording, phrasing, and presentation of the questions could have predetermined the answers. He also pointed out that a random sampling of people throughout the population is not necessarily an accurate reflection of voter preferences. He said, for example, that he could visualize getting 54% of a random sampling in the South to favor almost anything that would seem to benefit minority groups. His logic was that some 35% of the population would be identified with such minorities, and so you could assume that they would feel almost unanimously in favor of any action that might promise anything to their advantage. Of the majority group, one out of three would probably be sympathetic with the minorities, and would favor almost any action that would seem to benefit them. The addition of that one-third of the 65% majority, added to the entire 35% minority, would make up a majority of some 55% or more of the total population. But, he cautioned, the 55% of the total population might represent only 10% or 15% of the registered voters, or those likely to go to election, and with the Civil Rights Issue as the latest of many major blunders, it would take a combination of several spectacular miracles to salvage enough public confidence for the President to retain his office.

While none of them would indicate any personal preference of a presidential nominee for next year, they all denied there was any serious split in their Party ranks. Morton said that despite the verbal block-busters that have been exchanged recently between Nelson Rockefeller and Barry Goldwater, he feels confident that either man could win the presidency if nominated, and that either of them would support the other if he received the nomination. The Kentucky Senator said that he did not consider himself a candidate, but did appreciate the confidence of former President Eisenhower and others in Republican ranks who have indicated that he would make a strong standard-bearer.

fore the Congress, nor has the Republican Party in the House of Representatives adopted any official course of action. However, Halleck did admit that he had received some expressions of opposition from his constituents who felt that this particular legislation is not desired, at least in the form of the present proposals, at this particular time.

Senate Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen indicated that he felt the majority of the voters throughout the United States were opposed to the public accommodations proposals, and compared the residents of Southern Illinois, whom he knows best, with those in the deep south, as being equally opposed to forced regimentation in this matter.

Senator Thruston B. Morton of Kentucky, a Republican Party stalwart, who was a leader in drafting the platform for the Party in 1960, and frequently being mentioned now as a possible presidential candidate for 1964, feels that even the liberal voters of his state are not ready for forced public accommodation intended by the President, they did not agree on their interpretations of the reasoning behind such action, or the likely consequences of it. While Dirksen labeled the proposals as purely politics, and Halleck seemed to feel the same way although refusing to make that statement, Morton disagreed decisively. Senator Morton feels it was not good politics, and that there is strong evidence the President and the Attorney General became frightened and fearful of the growing unrest among Negroes throughout the nation, and were stampeded into any suggestions that would relieve some of that growing minority group pressure.

All three Republican leaders were questioned about a public opinion poll published recently by Louis Harris in which Harris claimed that a survey indicated that throughout the nation 74% of those questioned were in favor of the public accommodations provisions, and that 54% in the South favored such action. Halleck was suspicious of the objectivity of any polls conducted by an individual who has

age. Of the majority group, one out of three would probably be sympathetic with the minorities, and would favor almost any action that would seem to benefit them. The addition of that one-third of the 65% majority, added to the entire 35% minority, would make up a majority of some 55% or more of the total population. But, he cautioned, the 55% of the total population might represent only 10% or 15% of the registered voters, or those likely to go to the polls and express their opinions on such an issue.

KENNEDY IS DEAD

All three Republican leaders were quite positive in their feelings that John F. Kennedy will be a single term president. Halleck and Dirksen refused to express any preference for possible Republican candidates, or even to give an idea of who they felt to be out front at the moment. (Morton did say that Goldwater seemed to be in front of the pack at the time of these interviews.) But they all three were agreed that regardless of what candidate was chosen by the Republican Party, he would certainly defeat the Democrat's Mr. Kennedy next year.

Senator Dirksen explained in some detail his feeling that rarely does a presidential candidate win an election, rather the other man manages to lose. He indicated that President Kennedy has already lost next year's

He has been mentioned as a possible presidential candidate himself, but shrugs off any interest in the job. He has had a strong voice in policy decisions of the GOP, however, and had a great deal to do with drafting their presidential platform for 1960, and will likely play a major role in setting up the platform and the ticket of his Party for 1964.

Secretary Of Defense Sees Strong And Secure Nation

At a special press conference last week Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara said that no real military secrets have been lost to Communist nations in recent months. He declared that no defense secrets were lost in the recent cases that have been publicized so much of individuals who have defected to Communist - block nations. According to the Secretary, any information which was shared with our Allies, which was passed on to the Russians by the latest defectors, was entirely out of date and of very little value to the ments already made in the B-70 or RS-70 program. He stated: "I suspect that many of the materials and the design techniques that were incorporated in the B-70 will be of some value to the supersonic transport, and we will be very happy to make that technical information available to the transport."

Asked about reports circulating in the press that Red China is about to make a move in southeast Asia, Mr. McNamara replied simply: "I have no such information."

The last question of the news conference came back to the country of most concern to Americans: Mr. Secretary, I want to ask you if you see any lessening in dangers from Cuba, the movements there, or the construction

Vinson Not Only The Dean Of Congress, But Powerful

Every day now, Georgia's Sixth District Congressman, Representative Carl Vinson of Milledgeville, sets new records of service in Washington. As Senator Herman E. Talmadge said in honoring the venerable Georgia statesman last week, "No other man in history has served so long or so well in the United States House of Representatives.

sians by the latest defectors, was entirely out of date and of very little value to the Communist cause.

Asked what measures have been taken to avoid security leaks and plug up the defenses against any loss of important military information, Secretary McNamara said: ". . . . I know of no compromise of any current U. S. military plans . . . or of any release of classified information to non-U. S. sources . . . I am satisfied and very pleased with the action that General Carroll (in charge of the Defense Intelligence Agency) and his counterparts in the Services have taken to insure proper safeguarding of our classified information."

At his interview last week Mr. McNamara also said that he felt the overall defense posture of the United States is as strong and stable at the present time as it has been in many years. He is not troubled by the criticism which has come to his Department from many sides, not even the constant barrage of harrassment and harranging which has resulted from the TFX controversy. In fact, despite his natural regret over the time and energy his staff has been forced to devote to these hearings, he does not believe that the final completion of the TFX program has really been delayed by the debates thus far.

Asked if his thinking had changed on the B-70 bomber program, and the need for continued manned bombers such as the massive B-70 (Senate Armed Services Chairman Richard Russelll had indicated that perhaps the Secretary's position has changed), he refused to say one way or the other, but made no admission of any change in thinking. The Secretary did admit, however, that there will probably be side benefits derived from the developvantageous to the United States? The Defense Secretary replied:

"I think all responsible leaders of this Department believe that it is against the interests of this nation to allow further proliferation of nuclear weapons, and any action we can take that protects our national security, and at the same time reduces the risk of further proliferation, is desirable. I believe an enforceable test ban would assist in accomplishing that objective. I think it is unwise for me to say anything more in a period such as this, a time when negotiations relating to a test ban are underway."

Asked about waste and inefficiency in the Defense Department, Mr. McNamara smiled and said that certainly there had been some, and unfortunately would likely continue to be in the future. but he feels very strongly that such waste and inefficiency has been drastically reduced under his leadership, and that there is a relentless determination on the part of all of his staff to continue to cut out everything possible that is unnecessary. The sheer size of his Department, with almost 4-million military and another million civilian employees, or a total of close to 5-million personnel, makes some amount of waste inescapable.

COMMUNIST THREAT

Several questions touched upon the threats of military aggression by the Communists at various points in the world. One reporter referred to the statement of the Korean Foreign Minister when visiting recently in this country that it would be unthinkable for the United States to remove one of its military divisions from Korea and pull it back either to Hawaii or Okinawa, as has been rumored. The Secretary replied firmly: "I don't know the basis any lessening in dangers from Cuba, the movements there, or the construction or the concentration of troops? The Defense leader replied forcefully: "I don't believe we can ever accept a Soviet satellite in this Hemisphere, and we must continue to take the actions we have taken to put pressure upon Cuba and the Soviet Union to insure the removal of Soviet military personnel from that island is continued. Thank you very much."

This dean of legislators was sworn in as a member of the House on November 3, 1914, and two weeks ago now passed the record of 48 years and 8 months service established by the late Speaker Sam Rayburn. No current member of Congress even comes close, or is ever likely to reach that period of longevity in the future. Indeed, some have pointed out that Vinson took his seat in Congress when many of the present members of that body were still infants, or not yet born.

There is every indication that the phenomenal record of this man will continue to grow in the months and years ahead, as he gives no hint whatever of an early retirement. Indeed, he is vigorous, quick and alert, and works hard and long every day of the week. He arrives at his office early every morning, and usually has done a good day's work by the time most other Congressmen are getting started.

Vinson wields tremendous

Asked about the prospects of the presidential campaign next year, he did not hesitate to say that he felt that was too far ahead to be making a judgment at this time, but he does not see any Republican candidate likely to give President Kennedy any real competition. And thus far, he sees no reason why he should not continue to support the Administration.

As chairman for many years of the House Armed Services Committee, he has been a key figure in shaping this nation's defenses. He believes that the defenses of the United States are strong and adequate at the moment, but cautions that we must be constantly on our guard to keep them that way.

He also feels that Civil Defense is most important,

And when this youthful and tireless 79-year-old speaks on these matters, you recognize his authority, and do not question his word.

Senator Talmadge was only one of many who paid tribute to Carl Vinson on the occasion of his setting a new record of length of service in Congress. In the remarks that Georgia's Junior Senator made on the floor of the Senate, he summed up something of the position of the man:

"For almost half a century, Congressman Vinson has served Georgia and the nation with unswerving dedication to the high principles upon which this country was founded. He is devoted to the American way of life and the American system of government, and in the discharge of this public trust throughout his remarkable career, Congressman Vinson is without peer.

"All the people of the United States owe Carl Vinson an abiding debt of gratitude. Though his activities have been many and his interests varied, his every deed has been calculated to further the welfare of the nation.

"More than any other member of Congress, he was principally responsbile for the development of our two-ocean Navy, and for this history will mark him the 'Father of the Modern Navy'.

"No other man in history has served so long or so well in the House of Representatives. He is truly one of the greatest statesmen of all time, and on this momentous occasion, I would like to congratulate him as the alltime dean of the House, thank him for his outstanding service and contributions to the United States, and wish him Godspeed in all that he is to do in the future."

On a passenger-mile basis, railroad travel is the safest in the U. S. In 1962, travel fatalities, per 100 million passenger-miles, were: private autos and taxis-2.3; domestic airlines - .35; buses - .16; and railroads - .15.

A PIERCING and incisive look is typical of the intellect and personality of the dean of Congressmen, Representative Carl Vinson of Georgia's Sixth District. Rapidly approaching the 50-year mark in the House, Mr. Vinson is chairman of the powerful House on Services Committee, and has as much influence in Washington as any other individual in Congress.

NINTH DISTRICT REPRESENTATIVE Phil M. Landrum discusses with fervor the problems involved in the proposed Civil Rights measures now being considered by various congressional committees. Like the other members of the Georgia delegation, he is opposed to many aspects of the President's plan, especially the public accommodations provision.

Landrum Sees No Big Hurry For Redistricting Of The State

Representative Phil M. Landrum of Georgia's Ninth Congressional District, the man whom many have felt should be most concerned about the redistricting of the state, does not seem to feel that there is any urgency about this particular matter. Even though his district is noticeably smaller than the Fifth Congressional District, the northeast Georgia Congressman cited several reasons why he found no cause for immediate alarm. In no state has federal court dictatify the time, trouble, and expense of a special session of the legislature in September, or at any time prior to its next regularly scheduled session.

The northeast Georgia Congressman cited several reasons why he found no cause for immediate alarm. In no state has federal court dictate the 1962 general election.

However, the important point to remember in Alabama's situation is that at no time did the federal court order the state to redistrict.

The U.S. Supreme Court is scheduled to consider the Georgia Congressional dis - tricting case in the fall term. Congressman Landrum be-

Congressional Redistricting Causing No Loss Of Sleep

Georgia congressmen may not be nearly as violently and immovably opposed to the redistricting of the state as many have been led to believe.

The ten representatives who are now in Washington naturally would prefer to leave things as they are. Any elected official would be disinclined to tamper with the boundaries of a district which had sent him to Washington in the first place. But the extreme opposition that has been pictured in many press reports simply is not representative of the total congressional delegation.

Most of the ten congressmen now in office were hesitant about rushing to Atlanta for a discussion of redistricting, and several of them felt strongly that it was not so urgent a matter as to demand that sort of emergency treatment. The concensus was that even though the action should be taken next year, and must be done somehow before these representatives run for reelection in 1964, that it can be handled at the regular session of the General Assembly in January, without calling an expensive extra session of the Legislature this fall.

While there is some natural resistance to any re-drawing of district lines, most of these men accept that necessity as inevitable, and are not nearly as concerned about its being done as exactly how and in what way it is handled. Certainly none of them want to be forced into a race against each other. But a couple of plans have already been suggested which would enable all ten incumbents to run again for their district, without competing with any of the others.

The greatest discrepancy in all of the ten districts in Georgia is between two adjacent districts, the Fifth and the Ninth. According to the population figures of the 1960 Census, Congressman Charles L. Weltner represents 823,680 people in the Fifth District, while Phil M. Landrum of Jasper represents only 272,154 in the Ninth District.

A committee of the Georgia General Assembly is now working on the realignment of district lines, and is expected to have a fair and equitable picture to present to the Legislature in January. The concensus right now seems to be that the Governor will not call a special session of the Legislature before the end of this year.

CONGRESSMAN JOHN J. FLYNT of Georgia's Fourth Congressional District stands behind the desk in his private office. Like other members of the Georgia delegation, he is increasingly concerned about the multiplicity of legislative matters now being considered by the House of Representatives, and the growing possibility that many important items will be by-passed as a result of the Civil Rights controversy.

Our Man In Washington

for aid on personal problems they have in districting of the state, does not seem to feel that there is any urgency about this particular matter. Even though his district is noticeably smaller than the Fifth Congressional District (around Atlanta), he feels very strongly that no Federal Court will ever take upon itself the task of carving out congressional districts for any state, or setting boundary lines for the voters of that state.

Congressman Landrum was among several of Georgia's ten representatives who were most reluctant to leave Washinton last week to confer with Governor Carl E. Sanders about the problem of re-arranging the district boundaries in the state. Landrum indicated that it was not because he was reluctant to discuss the matter, but that he simply did not feel that it was a matter of great urgency or any over-riding time consideration. He feels very strongly that the matter can be planned calmly and carefully in the months ahead, and that proper legislation can be drafted with every possible consideration and presented in a routine manner at the 1964 General Assembly when it convenes in January. He does not believe that there is anything about the issue to justsion.

The northeast Georgia Congressman cited several reasons why he found no cause for immediate alarm. In no state has federal court dictated the drawing of congressional district lines.

Not until 1962 did the courts even find competency to deal with apportionment questions, which throughout our history had been considered too political for judicial consideration. Consequently, as demonstrated in the Georgia case, federal judges appear to be hesitant to rush headlong into this area, preferring evidently to leave the matter in the hands of state legislators where this power under Article 1 Section 4 of the U.S. Constitution resides:

"The Times, Places and Manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof..."

After the 1960 census Alabama lost one of its nine Congressmen because of population changes. Alabama's state legislature attempted to redistrict the state, but could not agree on a plan. Because of this impasse, all of Alabama's Congressmen had to run on a state-wide basis in state to redistrict.

The U.S. Supreme Court is scheduled to consider the Georgia Congressional dis - tricting case in the fall term. Congressman Landrum believes, however, that the court will not redraw the district lines.

He adds that if the state legislature does change the present boundaries by adding new territory and additional constituents he "would welcome the opportunity to serve the new people and hope that they would be as good to me as the people I now serve."

STRONG FEELINGS

Like all other Georgia congressmen, and most representatives throughout the South, Landrum was very much disturbed by, and strongly opposed to, the latest Civil Rights proposals of the President, particularly the public accommodations section. He cited a rally held in the Ninth District a couple of weeks ago, at which Senator Richard B. Russell was the featured speaker. Landrum said it had been many years since he had seen such a large crowd for a political speech, or had experienced such an enthusiastic response to the remarks of any speaker.

PHIL M. LANDRUM, Georgia's Ninth District Representative in Congress, looks through some of his law books to substantiate his claims that no Federal Court would be inclined to try to set district lines for the various congressional divisions of a state. He believes that the very worst that any Federal Court would attempt would be to declare unconstitutional and discriminatory the present boundaries, and require the state legislature either to set new lines, or to have all congressmen in that state to run on a statewide basis.

Constituents who have written Mr. Weltner

CONGRESSMAN JOHN J. FLYNT of Georgia's Fourth Congressional District stands behind the desk in his private office. Like other members of the Georgia delegation, he is increasingly concerned about the multiplicity of legislative matters now being considered by the House of Representatives, and the growing possibility that many important items will be by-passed as a result of the Civil Rights controversy.

Our Man In Washington

It was the intention of the Founding Fathers who wrote the Constitution that Congressmen should be the direct representatives of the people, while Senators should represent the several states as sovereign members of the Union. That concept was changed somewhat by the 17th Amendment which provided for the direct election of Senators. Before that they had been chosen by the state legislatures.

But it is still true that Representatives in the House are closer to the average citizen than anyone else in Washington. We invariably turn to our Congressman when we have some individual need in the Capital. Or when our district, county or city faces a crisis, like the recent spring floods here, when Federal help is urgently required.

We are happy to note that the Fifth District's new Congressman, Charles L. Weltner, now rounding out his first half-year in Washington, has shown a keen responsiveness to the needs of the people who elected him. Just a few days ago he obtained House approval of $70,000 for a Federal flood control study in Fulton and DeKalb counties, and is working to get an appropriation for it during the current fiscal year.

He also has worked hard to obtain an extension of Section 221 of the Federal Housing Act to make possible the erection of low-cost homes for low-income groups, which are urgently needed in Atlanta where the expressways and other large - scale projects have forced many to move from their former homes.

He has devoted his efforts to obtaining Federal aid for municipal rapid transit systems of the type envisaged for Metropolitan Atlanta.

Mr. Weltner also has concentrated on obtaining an extension of the billboard bonus provisions of the legislation for construction of the Interstate Highway System, which was for aid on personal problems they have in Washington have found him quickly responsive and helpful.

So much for the purely local aspects of Congressman Weltner's service.

On a national level, the Fifth District Congressman already has attracted attention as one of the most capable and promising of the freshman members of the House. At the beginning of the session he was assigned to the Banking and Currency Committee, a signal honor. Recently he became one of four new House members chosen among the Ten Most Promising Members of the the 86th Congress.

Visitors to Washington from the Fifth District have been told by older Congressmen that they regard Mr. Weltner as one of the most brilliant and effective of the new members.

Although Mr. Weltner is generally regarded as a liberal in the field of human relations, he undoubtedly expressed the majority sentiment of his District when he recently made a statement strongly opposing the "public accommodations" section of President Kennedy's civil rights legislation. This is the section under which the Federal Government might coerce businessmen to serve customers regardless of race.

Mr. Weltner's concern with the welfare and the opinions of his constituents has been shown by other activities outside Congress. During the recent disastrous floods, he and the Fifth District Executive Committee took the lead in appealing for furniture and clothing for the destitute residents of the Butler-Chestnut Street area of Atlanta.

The committee and Mr. Weltner also are making an unprecedented effort to learn the opinions of Fifth District citizens on public issues. Recently they circulated a questionnaire asking for the views of citizens on 10 important public questions, including a Federal tax cut, use of Federal funds for rapid transit and voluntary desegregation of hotels and restaurants.

This demonstrates the Congressman's eagerness to know what his constituents are thinking, and to reflect their views in Washington. In so doing he is filling the role envisioned for a Representative under the U.S. Constitution.

We believe most readers will agree with us that Congressman Weltner has made an auspicious start on his career in the House. As he gains experience, he should become increasingly useful to his District.

Hale Bogg Is On The Spot Representing Progressive South

A man squarely on the spot in the the present crosscurrent of opinions and prejudices in the Civil Rights controversy is Congressman Hale Boggs of Louisiana. He is torn between basic and very deep conflicts between the constituents he tries earnestly and conscientiously to represent on the one hand, and some parts of the program of the Kennedy Administration, of which he is the majority whip in the House, on the other.

While his personal preference is for continued segregation, and he understands the strong feelings of his state against the public accommodations proposals, he is still sympathetic with many of the problems of Negroes. He is in favor of more educational and vocational training, manpower retraining, better schools, and broader economic opportunities for the Negroes. He wants to help and to treat them like fellow human beings, but he strongly resents the unnecessary demonstrations which they have been conducting, the recent riots, and the extreme expressions of opinion and of aggressive militancy on both sides. Indeed, he expressed a personal fear of both extremes, indicating that he is greatly disturbed that emotion might prevent an intelligent approach to solving the problems the nation faces in that area.

Congressman Boggs quickly impresses anyone as a vigorous and intelligent new breed of southern leadership. He is quick to go to the heart of any matter, and sensitive to see the problems and the implications of all issues involved. He is fully aware of the dangers to any southern representative who does too much to help the Negroes, particularly in light of the present unrest in the south and throughout the nation, but he still feels compelled to face their needs for education and job opportunities, and believes that many southern leaders will follow their consciences in these matters. This does not imply, he emphasized, that responsible southern leadership is changing drastically in its traditional positions, but rather is simply seeing all sides of the various issues now, and is trying to weight carefully all of the factors and the equities involved.

The Louisiana Congressman is conscious of the responsibility of any politician to stay in office, if he is to accomplish anything. He feels that it would be a real tragedy if the more intelligent and progressive leadership from southern states were destroyed by unreasonable demands by the extremists on both sides. He is convinced that modifications will be made in the present proposals that will avoid just such a head-on clash. If so, he feels that it is likely that many southern congressmen, like Boggs, will vote for such programs as expanded vocational education, manpower retraining, better education, improved job opportunities, and others designed to improve relations between the races, as long as they are not forced to cast their vote for the features that are most objectionable to whites in the south.

MAN ON THE SPOT in the welter of Washington activities is Democratic Majority Whip in the House of Representatives, Congressman Hale Boggs of Louisiana. He is uncomfortably aware of the fact that the sentiments of many of his constituents back home are in direct conflict with the desires of the Administration for which he must act in the nation's Capital.

Smathers Sees Demos Safe, Is Critical Of Demonstrations

The Republican party has little chance of capturing the White House throughout the nation next year and the deep south must consider issues other than civil rights in determining a Presidential candidate.

Those are the feelings of Senator George A. Smathers, Democrat of Florida, and a very close personal friend of President John F. Kennedy. While Senator Smathers has openly differed with the Administration on such important issues as Cuba, Medicare, and now the Civil Rights legislation, he believes that the President has done an outstanding job in providing the nation with opposition party will select another man as their best chance for the White House. In either event, Senator Smathers is confident that the Democrats will win.

The Florida law-maker feels that he can support a few of the provisions contained in the Civil Rights legislation but states frankly that he will definitely vote against the public accommodations section of the legislation now being considered by Congress. He is very strong in his opinion that the Negroes should take their

FLORIDA SENATOR GEORGE SMATHERS looks at a map of South America, and the Caribbean area about which he is so vitally concerned. Because of the geographical location of his state, he has been keenly aware of the Communist threat in Cuba, and concerned about the growth of Communism throughout Latin America. Despite some differences with the Kennedy Administration, he continues to hold the President in high regard, and believes that a great deal has been accomplished under the present Administration, and he will be returned to office in 1964.

COMTEMPLATING THE ENDLESS variety of problems presented to his staff for solution, you might imagine that Congressman Charles L. Weltner sometimes wonders why he wanted to go to Washington in the first place. But the dynamic young legislator insists that he is enjoying the heavy responsibilities of his office, and many of those who have been observing him in action feel that he is doing an outstanding job.

mocrat of Florida, and a very close personal friend of President John F. Kennedy. While Senator Smathers has openly differed with the Administration on such important issues as Cuba, Medicare, and now the Civil Rights legislation, he believes that the President has done an outstanding job in providing the nation with strong leadership.

Looking ahead to next year's Presidential possibilities, Smathers believes that Kennedy can and will defeat any Republican candidate that might be selected to run against him.

The vigorous young Florida Senator would like to see Barry Goldwater as the GOP standard-bearer because he feels that a Kennedy-Goldwater confrontation would give a more positive proof of the sentiment of the American people and decide more definitely in the election between conservative and liberal leadership for the nation's policies.

However, he is doubtful of the chances of the Arizona Senator and believes that the Democrats will win.

The Florida law-maker feels that he can support a few of the provisions contained in the Civil Rights legislation but states frankly that he will definitely vote against the public accommodations section of the legislation now being considered by Congress. He is very strong in his opinion that the Negroes should take their grievances "off the streets and into the courts" and should resist any pressures that would or could easily lead to violence and rioting conditions as has been seen in a number of cities recently.

Regardless of differences on Civil Rights, or on any other specific issues, Senator Smathers emphasizes that "certainly the Republican Party has nothing to offer the deep South. We must not forget it was the Democratic leaders in the Congress, working within the framework of the Democratic Party, that have lifted the economic shackles from the South and moved us into the position of the nation's most progressive area..."

DISCUSSING ENTHUSIASTICALLY THE various accomplishments of the Kennedy Administration, George Smathers indicates that he is still a close personal friend of the President, and believes that the President is doing an outstanding job in leading the United States, despite some disagreements between the two men. The Florida Senator talked warmly and earnestly for almost an hour explaining why the Republicans cannot win in 1964, and why the south should continue to support the Democratic Party.

The following is a transcript of a television show, "Senate News Conference", taped in Washington for broadcast Sunday, August 4, 1963. on seven television stations and 26 radio station in New York State. Senator Javits was questioned by Tom Wicker, White House reporter for the New York Times, and Jim Canan, Washington reporter for Gannett Newspapers.

CONGRESS MUST ACTIVATE ITSELF TO MEET CRISES

QUESTION: You have had some fairly harsh things to say about this Congress, calling it maybe one of the worst in recent history in terms of getting something done. Do you think this might be a reflection of lack of purpose in the country at-large? Does this nation know where it's going or what it wants to do? Does anyone feel any need to have anything done?

SENATOR JAVITS: I deeply believe the nation does. I think the nation does know where it's going. The problems are very complex, and therefore leadership is so important a factor. I have pointed out that in the big crises, the civil rights crisis, the international balance of payments crisis, the endemic unemployment crisis, even the railroad crisis -- we somehow get bogged down, and on big things, like Federal aid to education, even higher education, youth opportunities, manpower developments, area redevelopment, etc., we just didn't seem to be able to get off the ground. My plea was, and is, that we activate ourselves, and that the President show as much fire in making the majority party go to work and get something done, as he does in sending messages to the Congress.

NOMINEE WILL PROBABLY BE ROCKEFELLER OR GOLDWATER

QUESTION: Leadership is one of the most talked about things in Washington today, particularly the Republican leadership for next year. Do you puts any stock in the proposition that Govèrnor Rockefeller and Senator Goldwater next year might deadlock the Republican convention and the party would then turn to a compromise candidate, perhaps someone standing between those two men?

SENATOR JAVITS: I believe it takes a long time to build up a presidential candidate and so the nominee must be very well-known to the country and the world. Because of this, there is the greatest likelihood that the Republican nominee will be either Rockefeller or Goldwater. That's my honest judgement. It's very difficult in these times to suddenly produce another personality on the scene. But it is not a two-man race. There are others: Governor Scranton of Pennsylvania, Governor Romney of Michigan -- and what has been little noticed is that there are people in the Senate. There's Tom Kuchel of California, there's Clifford Case of New Jersey, men who've won outstanding victories. There's John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky, and I'm sure there are others who are not in the Senate. The Senate has always produced presidential candidates and it's astounding to me that -- other than Senator Goldwater -- there has been no consideration of the Senate. To sum up, it is most likely that it will be Rockefeller or Goldwater, because both are national and international figures, as things stand today.

GOLDWATER CAN BE OVERTAKEN

QUESTION: Do you agree that Senator Goldwater is the front runner?

SENATOR JAVITS: The Gallup Poll shows that. I would not say that he is the front runner in the sense that he can't be overtaken. I think he is ahead in the Gallup Poll, but I think that Rockefeller can overtake him, and I have a feeling that he has a good chance.

ROCKEFELLER-GOLDWATER DEBATE GOOD FOR THE PARTY

QUESTION: Do you think your party can come out of this nomination fight without being almost as bitterly divided as you accuse the Democrats of being?

SENATOR JAVITS: The Democrats are divided, but they've managed to win an awful lot of elections, notwithstanding their divisions. The question of division must be tested in the light of whether it will hurt the party. In my opinion, the Rockefeller-Goldwater debate over the ideology of the party -- shall it be a party in the mainstream of American public life; or shall it go over to a conservative point of view, which I think swings beyond the mainstream of American public life -- is good. It may tell the public that the Republicans aren't unified, but it gives the party strength and vitality and interest. It's provocative and therefore it's good for the party, not bad. The party will be stronger in the convention than it would be, if the debate were not held.

"WHITE ONLY" TACTIC WOULD SET GOP BACK 20 YEARS

QUESTION: Do you have any fears that the Republican Party or some of its leaders might become the "party of the white man" in an attempt to beat President Kennedy through the "white backlash" on civil rights?

SENATOR JAVITS: I think there is a danger of that. I think it is a seduction, if you will, for some of the people in the Republican Party-- some of Senator Goldwater's backers, for example, are constantly calculating that he is the man who can win because he can carry the South. Under present conditions, it seems to me, the only way anybody can contemplate this result is if our party becomes "lily-white" and abandons its heritage of Lincoln and abandons its advocacy of civil rights, and abandons the moral issue involved. In my judgement, this would not have the superficial and immediate effect of materially carrying the South -- although even if it did, I would be against it. In my opinion, this tactic would set the party back 20 years and discredit it as a party of principle that means what it says.

COALITION NEEDED TO PASS CIVIL RIGHTS BILLS

QUESTION: I have talked with a number of White House officials, and almost without exception they say that the passage of a civil rights bill this year is, in the main, dependent on the Republican Party, because they can't expect anything but the largest defections in the Southern wing of the Democratic Party in Congress. Simply on a numerical basis, they say that the Republicans must provide the votes that will pass the bill, and they then put the responsibility on the Republican Party. How do you view this prospect and do you think it is true, numerically?

SENATOR JAVITS: Numerically it's true. But I think the political advantage sought to be gained is a false one, and I hope it will not mislead the people. If the Democratic Party is going to take the credit for civil rights legislation -- and the President's message to the country certainly indicates that that's their intention -- it's inconsistent with the fact that they can't deliver on it in their own Party. After all, they have two-thirds of the Senate. If the Democrats all voted together -- with every Republican vote the other way -- they could impose cloture. Now obviously, that isn't going to happen with 22 Senators from Southern states who probably will vote against cloture. So they've got to depend on Republicans. That's what ought to be emphasized to the country. I welcome this responsibility because I think it demonstrates where my party stands, in terms of the strength in the country. After all, a voter has the right to say, 'Why should I elect Republicans, if the Democrats have got the majority of the Congress.' The answer is that in our country, we are governing not by the Democrats. We are governing by a coalition -- on specific issues -- of people who have similar ideas. It is important to point to this as an element of weakness for the Democrats, and an element of strength for the Republicans. The Democrats are admitting that they can not carry the responsibility of government themselves. They must have the Republicans with them, and because I think it is to my party's great interest and to the great interest of the nation, I shall do everything I can in my party to marshall the necessary number of Republican votes -- which I estimate at not less than 22.

GOP LEADERSHIP WILL BACK CLOTURE AND RIGHTS PACKAGE

QUESTION: Do you think that the Republican leadership in the Senate, and in the House, is going to share that view; is this your impression?

SENATOR JAVITS: I think this issue is somewhat muddled, as these thing: always are. I think a civil rights bill will carry in the House without any question. In the Senate where the showdown will be, I think the Republican leadership will ultimately back cloture -- not for as broad a bill as I would back -- but perhaps for a watered-down public accommodations section, because of the feeling of Senator Dirkson and some others on that subject. I think you will find even the Republican leadership behind most of the civil rights package in the Congress. As to how it will come up and just how the votes will be, I can't divine now. The Republican leadership, in my opinion, will ultimately be found supporting a major part of the President's civil rights package.

COMMUNIST TAG ON RIGHTS MOVEMENT IS "RED HERRING"

QUESTION: Do you put any stock in accusations being made by some of the southerners recently that there is a pretty healthy bite of Communism in the civil rights movement; or that the movement is being used by Communists?

SENATOR JAVITS: Well even so conservative and reasonable a member as Mike Monroney of Oklahoma has stated he sees nothing in that; and he's been sitting in the Commerce Committee, hearing the testimony all the time. There is no evidence of it whatever. I think it is just a "red herring" -- I don't like to use catch-words, but this one is so descriptive in this case -- drawn across the civil rights trail to make people suspicious. The minute that Communist influence is mentioned, many people get suspicious, but I hope there are also reasonable citizens who want some evidence -- and there is none. Obviously this is a native-led movement of Negroes and white Americans who feel very deeply about this particular situation and very importantly it is led by people who have been at it for years and years. I mean most of them are not newcomers to the civil rights struggle. I'd like to add, however, that you can't expect that Communists will not try to fish in these waters. But I feel the question the American people want to ask is -- 'Is this Communist-led, communist stimulated?' The answer is 'NO,' in my opinion, but certainly they're going to try to take advantage of it.

GOP LEADERS HAVE SOME RESERVATIONS ON TREATY

QUESTION: What is the significance of the decisions of Senators Dirkson and Hickenlooper not to go to the signing in Moscow of the test ban treaty?

SENATOR JAVITS: It indicates that they have rather more reservations on the subject than others of us do. For myself, I am very much predisposed in its favor. I have no doubt whatever that I shall vote for it. Naturally it's very important -- critical -- to the security of the country, and I would want to hear all the evidence before I finally cast my vote. I think that's pretty much the prevailing view. But their reservations are deeper and whether they will ultimately be against it or not, nobody can tell. In any case, it indicates a higher order of reservation than that held by Senators Aiken or Saltonstall who are going for the Republicans, although they also reserve the right to vote for the treaty or against it.

CIVIL RIGHTS FIGHT GOING WELL

QUESTION: As a fighter, how do you feel about the way the fight is going on civil rights? Give us your mood.

SENATOR JAVITS: The fight, I think, is going well. Demonstrations are all right if they're orderly. Laws must be enforced --in New York as well as in any Southern city --provided they're constitutional laws, not, as some Southern states have, suppressive unconstitutional laws.

Hampshire Republican put it, "the ball game is over." On the other hand, Goldwater intimates candidly admit: "Barry doesn't really want to campaign there and spend half a million dollars, stuff every mailbox, shake every hand, and kiss every baby in the state." In that kind of campaign, the ebullient Rocky is at his best—at least the first time around. What's more, he has plenty of cash to finance a proper campaign. "Rockefeller is going to do an Estes Kefauver in New Hampshire," predicts one observer.

Underdog: Working against Rockefeller is the fact that New Hampshire's GOP is badly splintered; some of the more popular GOP fixtures are expected to line up for Goldwater. The current view was stated this way by a Republican officeholder: "Anything can happen. If Rockefeller puts on a good campaign, he could pull it out; if he puts on a poor campaign, he'll get the stuffing kicked out of him." On winter-book form, Rocky is the underdog; but he is confident that in the state where he went to college (Dartmouth), an appeal to youth, person-to-person meetings, and careful organization will sweep him in.

Farther afield—should he win in New Hampshire, he may go into primaries in Wisconsin, West Virginia, and Oregon, as well as California—Rockefeller can count on the fact that he is better known to the public than any other GOP Presidential possibility. The latest NEWSWEEK Poll indicates that the New York governor is familiar to 67 per cent of all voters, while Goldwater is known to only 42 per cent—compared with Romney's 39 per cent and Scranton's 19 per cent. In the next two months, Rockefeller hopes further to capitalize on this currency with speaking forays to Illinois, Colorado, West Virginia, Virginia, Oregon—and an official trip to Europe.

Fascinated by the rising temper of the Rockefeller and Goldwater factions, many Republicans get the uneasy feeling that it might all end in a kind of GOP Armageddon; and that Rockefeller is so determined to stop the Arizona senator (and would be so vindictive if clobbered) that he would throw whatever weight he had to Nixon.

"If Rockefeller decides that he can't win," says one Eastern congressman, "I don't think it is too farfetched to think of him throwing his support to Nixon . . . Dick Nixon could look pretty good to us next summer."

In any event, now that Nelson Rockefeller has chosen to throw down the gauntlet to Barry Goldwater, the 1964 GOP Presidential race promises to be a knockdown drag-out. And if the two contenders and their loyal factions really start playing rough, in the words of one close political observer, "this could be the gutsiest campaign in history."

THE NEWSWEEK POLL

'64: The GOP Could Win—IF

by Louis Harris

IF THE 1964 election were being held during this long summer of discontent, John F. Kennedy could win in a landslide, almost equaling Dwight Eisenhower's second victory over Adlai Stevenson in 1956. In the latest NEWSWEEK Poll of a cross section of American voters, the Democratic President outdistances Gov. George Romney of Michigan by a 55-45 per cent margin, Sen. Barry Goldwater by 56-44 per cent, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller by 58-42 per cent, and Gov. William Scranton by 59-41 per cent.

The real story of how next year's Presidential campaign begins to shape up, however, must go beyond such trial heats, interesting as they may be. For despite these pairings—and despite voters' greater familiarity with Mr. Kennedy (below)—the fact is the Republicans could win in 1964. But to do so they must find a moderate candidate who will not lose GOP votes while appealing to nonparty middle-of-the-roaders. This is said not as a hedge, but because it is a fact that other early Kennedy leads have been known to disappear in the past. In the 1960 primaries, for example, he campaigned best and delivered his most decisive political majorities when he began as an underdog. When he began as the far-out front-runner, his leads tended to fade.

In order to win, the Republican candidate must be able to seize the initiative and attack, attack, and attack—in the right places, at the right times, and on the right issues. And the fact is the issues are there to be seized, areas of Kennedy weakness that can be exploited (page 27). In many ways, indeed, Kennedy weaknesses are more important to the GOP than Republican strengths. These soft spots must be examined in depth to find the combination that might win for the Republicans.

The most vulnerable areas for President Kennedy in the political pattern of today can be seen in a roster of issues on the domestic front, such as his attempts at keeping the economy healthy, the civil-rights battle, medical care for the aged, and the push for an income-tax cut this year, on all of which he receives no better than an even split of public approval. Furthermore, between now and next year, he may have to explain the continued failure of Congress to act on his programs.

In the foreign-policy field, the issue of foreign aid does not add up to a positive for the incumbent President (as, indeed, it never worked well for Truman or Eisenhower before him). And, despite widespread public approval of his bold action last October in the Cuban crisis, the question of handling Cuba and Castro still is a political thorn in the President's side.

Popular as Mr. Kennedy may be personally, it is interesting to see what happens when voters are asked to stack him against his predecessor, Dwight D. Eisenhower.

ACTUALLY, we asked voters to choose in a hypothetical contest between the Eisenhower of 1952 and the Kennedy of 1963, so that Ike's age factor would be discounted. On that basis, Eisenhower wins by a 53-47 per cent margin. This pairing is politically significant because a breakdown of the Kennedy-Eisenhower ratings among the various voting groups provides the analyst with new insights and an incisive tool for examining in depth the key patterns of political America today.

In 1960, John F. Kennedy fashioned his razor-thin victory over Vice President Nixon by running a tight, efficient, and daring campaign. He won in the big states of the East, where the polyglot minorities of the big cities, beginning to spill into the suburbs, piled up record majorities to offset losses in the heavily anti-Catholic small towns in the South, Midwest, and West. In an election settled by 119,000 out of 69 million votes cast, obviously every element in the victory was marginal. Everyone and also no one could claim the credit for the win.

In that dramatic contest Mr. Kennedy's Catholicism cost him better than one voter in every four to Vice President Nixon. On balance, the religious issue made what would otherwise have been a clear Kennedy victory one of the closest of all Presidential elections. The religious issue has not disappeared in 1963. In 1960, 30 per cent of the voters expressed concern over undue Catholic influence on Mr. Kennedy if he became President. Today, this figure has gone down only slightly to 26 per cent. It is still most severe in the Fundamentalist Bible belt of the border states and the South.

But while his religion will still work against him in 1964, occupancy of the White House will offer President Kennedy an opportunity to overcome some of the obstacles he faced in 1960. A prime example is familiarity. At no point in 1960 was Mr. Kennedy as well known (82 per cent) as was Vice President Nixon (94 per cent). Today, the President is a thoroughly familiar figure to over nine out of every ten voters, whereas none of his prospective opponents is known to better than two out of every three. Even Barry Goldwater is not yet known to a majority of the American people.

Even more significant is the vast advantage accruing to the President as the man who shapes the nation's defense and foreign policy. To be sure, if mishandled, foreign policy and security can be the fastest exit from the White House. But if the conduct of foreign policy has been reasonably successful, it gives an incumbent a huge reservoir of prestige and public confidence that must surely demoralize the opposition. An attack on the foreign policy and defense posture of the President can come precariously close in the eyes of some voters to an attack on the national security itself. That is why in 1960, candidate Kennedy's treatment of foreign policy and defense was general and peripheral. He tried to register a sense of urgency about the country's prestige abroad, but took care not to level a frontal assault on the Eisenhower record in foreign affairs.

NEXT year, any Republican will face the same difficulty in attacking the way Mr. Kennedy has handled Khrushchev, his efforts in the space program, his defense program, the establishment of the Peace Corps, his exercise of leadership in the free world, or the recent test-ban agreement with the Soviet Union and Great Britain. In the field of foreign affairs, only foreign aid, Cuba, and the Alliance for Progress in Latin America might be fair game for the GOP candidate. And even in these areas, there is enough divided opinion not to give the Republicans a really wide open shot at Mr. Kennedy.

Thus, the Republicans' best chances for developing 1964 campaign issues would appear to rest in a massive assault on President Kennedy's domestic policies, especially for not moving the domestic economy ahead as vigorously as he promised in 1960. Tied to this central theme, the charge that Mr. Kennedy is a "spender" receives much public credence, and the President's inability to get a Democratic Congress to act on vital legislation also incurs criticism.

Without emphasizing civil rights at all, the Republicans are likely to make capital out of the issue and in all likelihood, as things stand now, the GOP will carry the South. If the South were the only dynamic part of the electorate, and if everything stood the way it did on that dramatic election night, Nov. 4, 1960, then President Kennedy would in all probability be defeated.

However, things have not remained static among key groups in the electorate. At this moment, the President is enjoying some rather healthy gains among pivotal groups of voters.

▶He has gained significantly among Negroes; these gains seem likely to stick.

▶He has spurted well ahead among young, male voters, and his whopping 64-36 per cent edge is likely to hold.

▶He has come back handsomely in the West, especially in California, and will be difficult to overtake in that second biggest prize among electoral votes.

These gains can be documented by analyzing data on the Kennedy-Eisenhower pairing. Among Negroes, young men, and voters in the West, not even Ike can dent the gains registered by Mr. Kennedy since 1960.

The patterns among a whole roster of other key voting segments, moreover, put Mr. Kennedy well ahead of the average of his four leading opponents—Governors Rockefeller, Romney, and Scranton, and Senator Goldwater. Accordingly, if the Kennedy margins of today persist, then the incumbent Democratic President can bust the election of 1964 wide open. These pro-Kennedy blocs include Catholic voters (except Irish voters who were not very Democratic in 1960 and are less so today); women of all ages; Americans of German descent; workers in personal-service jobs, such as department-store clerks, office workers, and sales personnel; and voters in the East.

The Kennedy margins in all of these voting blocs, however, are suddenly wiped out when he is pitted against someone like General Eisenhower. This can only be read to mean that President Kennedy is moving well with these groups, but has not consolidated his vote against any eventuality. Certainly these are the targets toward which Mr. Kennedy can be expected to push the hardest in the months ahead and when the campaign moves into high gear.

But there are also some sleeper groups in the electorate among whom President Kennedy has not moved appreciably ahead of his 1960 showing, and where General Eisenhower also scores especially well in comparison to Mr. Kennedy. These are voters of Scandinavian descent, traditionally Republican anyhow; Italian-American voters, a bulwark of Kennedy strength last time and still behind him today, though there are increasing signs of disaffection and complaints of having been forgotten; retired people, again traditionally Republican, who have not been set afire by the President's oft-repeated promises of medical care for the aged; white-collar people, the backbone of Eisenhower strength in the 1950s, who feel Mr. Kennedy has been too pro-union; and skilled labor, particularly among the Teamsters and Railroad Brotherhoods who feel the President is too little on their side.

Ironically, on the labor-disputes area as an issue, President Kennedy receives widespread credit that cuts across the board. But among white-collar and skilled-labor voters, the labor issue works the other way.

Thus, the Republican pattern for victory clearly rests in coming up with a candidate who can make a convincing case among white-collar voters, skilled workers, farmers, and small-town and suburban residents. That case rests perhaps on the argument that they have been forgotten financially in the Kennedy Administration's bid for minority-group support, on the one hand, and its appeasement of Congress, on the other. Above all, this approach dictates a GOP candidate who is not an extremist in the eyes of these middle-of-the-road voters. Our latest surveys show that neither Governor Rockefeller nor Senator Goldwater, as they are known to the public thus far, fits this image. To the rank-and-file Republican, Rockefeller seems too liberal and Goldwater seems too conservative. But the Republicans' dilemma is that unless they nominate a relatively familiar figure, they face the almost insurmountable task of building up an unknown—a handicap that has proved fatal before.

For Mr. Kennedy's party, the 1964 campaign is likely to be entirely different from that of four years ago. Now he will be able to ride hard on his accomplishments in foreign policy as an experienced world leader, and he will no doubt taunt his GOP opponent for his party's conservative record on domestic economic issues.

Most of all, perhaps, President Kennedy's personality will be going for him powerfully. It is ironic that in the dynamic, changing era of the mid-twentieth century, the obvious formula for incumbent Presidents to win re-election is to keep the country strong militarily, avoid a war abroad, and above all else, stay personally popular with the voters. It used to be that performance on bread-and-butter issues was decisive. Now a President can survive by avoiding a severe recession or depression. But landslide victories these days in politics are built on quite different stuff: don't rock the boat at home and abroad and maintain a magnetic personal appeal. President Eisenhower did it in 1956 and President Kennedy appears to be on the road to doing it in 1964.

CAN GOLDWATER WIN IN 64?

THE RACE ISSUE, "HAPPY," HIS PERSONAL CHARM MAKE HIM THE GOP'S SURPRISE FRONT-RUNNER.

By Stewart Alsop

Let us try to imagine a politician with no chance whatever of becoming President of the United States.

First, let us suppose that our man is a junior senator from a small state with a mere five electoral votes, and that he is half-Jewish. No such politician has ever been nominated for the Presidency, much less elected.

Then, just to make sure that our man hasn't a prayer, let us suppose that he has consistently taken positions nicely calculated to alienate all the major voting blocs in the country—labor, the aged, the teachers, the Negroes, the subsidized farmers, all the beneficiaries of the welfare state, the liberal-minded independent voters, and finally, just to make doubly sure, the inhabitants of the entire East Coast.

It is not easy to come upon a description of a less likely presidential candidate. Yet the above description precisely fits the current front-runner for the Republican presidential nomination—Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona.

The fact that Goldwater is the front-runner is thus, on the face of it, an almost incredible fact. Talking to Goldwater, it is easy to sense that he himself is amazed, and a bit appalled, by what he calls "this President thing." Yet however incredible, the fact is a fact—Barry Goldwater now is unquestionably the man to beat for the Republican nomination. Moreover, among the political professionals there is beginning to be a feeling that Goldwater just might make it all the way to the White House, in 1968 if not in 1964. The Goldwater phenomenon is plainly a most peculiar phenomenon, which needs explaining.

Part of the explanation lies, of course, with the charming "Happy" Rockefeller. Before his marriage, New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller had the nomination just about

An unstuffed shirt, Barry is crazy about jet planes, Indians and mechanical doodads. The idea of waking up as President, he says, "Frankly scares the hell out of me."

sewed up. Another part of the explanation lies with Goldwater himself. "Barry's a damned hard man to dislike," says a liberal senator, "though some of us have tried pretty hard."

Likability is not surprising in a politician—it is a necessary tool of the trade. But it is surprising to find an extremely conservative politician extremely likable—to find, instead of a purse-mouthed ancient in a high collar, a pleasant man with boyish enthusiasms for jet planes, ham radios, Indian tribes and corny jokes about himself.

Because of a bad back—he shares President Kennedy's lady doctor—Goldwater walks like an old man, head bent forward, steps short and stiff. Otherwise he is, at 54, in a remarkable state of preservation. With his bronzed and rugged face, he is visibly what the Latins call muy macho—very much a man—and this is doubtless one secret of the Goldwater charm.

A more important secret is the fact that Goldwater's shirt is astonishingly unstuffed. During a long plane ride from Washington to Arizona, and again at intervals between Goldwater-piloted flights in an elderly plane to remote Arizonian outposts, this reporter interviewed Goldwater at length. Here are a few Goldwaterisms, culled from my notebook, which suggest why Goldwater is a "damned hard man to dislike":

On the possibility that he might actually wake up to be President one day: "Frankly, it scares the hell out of me."

On his own intelligence quotient: "You know, I haven't got a really first-class brain."

On his leaving college in freshman year to become a salesman in the family store: "Worst mistake I ever made. But then I guess a peddler doesn't need a higher education."

On the possibility that he might emulate Lyndon Johnson, and safeguard his Senate seat by running both for the Senate and the presidency in 1964: "No, I can't do that after what I said about Lyndon in 1960—they'd run me out of the country. But if I hadn't opened my big mouth so loud, I might do it."

On how he achieves his vast literary output—he has produced three best-selling books and innumerable magazine articles, and he signs a thrice-a-week column that goes to about 175 papers: "Oh, hell, I've got ghosts all over the place. I pick up a lot of Fletcher Knebel's stuff too. I sent him an item about Bobby Kennedy's pool, and he sent me two bucks. I sent it right back—I wrote him if we began paying each other off, I'd owe him $2,000 right off the bat."

On a draft he had written for a humorous speech: "I took it back to the apartment and read it to my wife Peggy and a couple of her girl friends. I thought they'd be rolling on the floor, but they never cracked a smile. So I said, what the hell's the matter and Peggy said, look, this is a sophisticated audience, they're not a lot of lame-brains like you, they don't spend their time looking at TV Westerns. You can't give them that corn."

Goldwater says this sort of thing with a small, lopsided smile, which is as disarming as his unpretentiousness. Moreover, however superficial or reactionary many of his political views may seem to the liberal-minded, nobody can accuse Goldwater of pussyfooting—except, perhaps, on one vital subject. Before interviewing him, this reporter made a selection of his more extreme political sentiments. Having interviewed other politicians who heard the beating of distant presidential drums, the reporter waited confidently for the hedge and the weasel. They never came. Here are a few more jottings from the notebook:

REPORTER: "You have been quoted as saying that you oppose the progressive income tax, that everyone should pay the same rate."

GOLDWATER: "Yes. Yes, I still believe that."

REPORTER: "But do you really think it's fair that a man with five million a year should pay the same rate as a man with five thousand?"

GOLDWATER: "Yes. Yes, I do."

(Goldwater explains that the poor man would benefit from the rich man's investments, while in his mind's ear the reporter hears liberal orators make mincemeat of candidate Goldwater as "the rich man's candidate" in 1964.)

GOLDWATER (volunteering): "You know, I think we ought to sell TVA."

REPORTER (scribbling busily): "You really do?"

GOLDWATER: "Yes. Yes, I do."

(Oops, thinks the reporter, there goes the whole Tennessee Valley.)

REPORTER: "You were quoted some time ago as favoring the 'prompt and final termination of all farm subsidies.' Do you still believe that?"

GOLDWATER: "Yes, I believe that. Might take three years, might take five. But it's not right to force an inefficient farmer to stay on the farm when he'd be much better off in industry."

(Oops again, there go the farm states.)

Goldwater's other views, on subjects ranging from Medicare and Walter Reuther to Castro and the welfare state—he's against them all—are similarly simple and refreshingly forthright. And aside from private charm, Goldwater also has public charisma—star quality, call it what you will. Although he is no great shakes as an orator, this quality has helped to make him, after the President, the most sought-after public speaker in the United States.

Goldwater's star quality obviously has a lot to do with the Goldwater phenomenon. To understand more about the phenomenon, it is necessary to visit Goldwater on his native heath.

Flying into Phoenix, his hometown, Goldwater looked down affectionately on the arid, sunlit land below. "If you'd dropped a five-dollar bill down there before the war," he said, "it would be worth a couple of hundred now." After a short colloquy with his younger brother Bob at the airport ("Straighten your tie, Barry, it's all crooked"—the potential President obediently straightened his tie), Goldwater drove eagerly to his house, which he obviously adores.

Like just about everything else in Arizona, the house is new—it was built in 1957, on a small dusty hill outside of Phoenix. Aside from books,

At Draft-Goldwater-for-President HQ in Washington, volunteer worker Carolyn Birely displays materials to be used in campaign for nomination—and perhaps for election.

"Pooping about" home state in his private airplane, Goldwater salutes Legionnaire guard at San Manuel.

The Negro vote, the "effete" East appear lost. So why not hunt where the ducks are?

Pat aimed at a non-voter makes contact with a voter as Goldwater shows charm on home-state stumping tour.

there is nothing old in the house, nothing to suggest that the Goldwaters have been in Arizona for a hundred years. Barry Goldwater's grandfather, Big Mike Goldwater—born Michel Goldwasser in Poznan, Poland—founded the family fortune when he moved to Arizona in 1860 and set up shop as a storekeeper. The Goldwaters have been storekeepers ever since, and prosperous ones—grandson Barry's house is certainly worth more than $100,000.

Goldwater's house is built in a desert—the land round about hasn't enough green stuff on it to support a jackrabbit in reasonable comfort. For those not born to it, the desert takes some getting used to. Goldwater's wife Peggy, whom he married in 1934 after snatching her away from another suitor, former Michigan Gov. G. Mennen Williams, came from Indiana. At first, Goldwater recalls, Peggy hated Arizona. "I found her crying and I asked her what was the matter, and she said it was because she missed the leaves changing in the fall."

Nowadays Peggy Goldwater, a chic grandmother, loves Arizona with the passion of the converted, and she spends far more time in the Arizona house than in their Washington apartment. Only one of the four Goldwater children lives in the house, but the others come back often. Yet to a remarkable extent, the house is Barry Goldwater's house, and his alone. It tells a lot about the man, as houses often do.

For one thing, the house suggests that Goldwater has never quite grown up—a not unusual characteristic in a successful politician. "You must remember," wrote the British ambassador about Theodore Roosevelt, "that the President is about six." Goldwater is about 12. His house might have been built by a dexterous 12-year-old boy suffering from an overdose of Popular Mechanics, which is in fact one of Goldwater's favorite publications.

The place is alive with electronic gadgets, which are constantly getting out of order—the flagpole with the electronic eye, which raises Old Glory at sunup and lowers it at sundown, had not been working for several weeks, Goldwater admitted with annoyance. He was also having trouble with the motion-picture screen which lowers automatically from the living-room ceiling, but his other gadgets, like the ham-radio sets, the wind-speed indicator, the garage door with the electronic eye, the intercom system and the bedside push-button console were working fine.

The fact that he has never quite grown up is another secret of the Goldwater charm. Goldwater's favorite gadget is an airplane—any airplane—and "pooping about" Arizona with him in an airplane is fun. ("Pooping about" is a favorite Goldwater expression—when a friend suggested that it was about time he put together a national campaign organization, he replied, "I seem to have done all right so far pooping about on my own.") The pooping can be a bit hair-raising. "Gee, that was a boo-boo," he said, after landing on a cow pasture at an Indian reservation. "Know what I did? I feathered the props before landing." But, as with other men who have forgotten to grow up, Goldwater is fun to be with.

Goldwater's house tells other things about Goldwater the man, and about Goldwater the political phenomenon as well. The desert on which Goldwater's house is built is a uniquely American desert. It is an overpopulated desert—anywhere else in the world it would be nomad country, camel country. When Goldwater built his house, only six years ago, the desert was what most deserts are—empty. In those days, Goldwater says, "you could shoot a thirty-thirty in any direction and never hit a thing."

Now, all around Goldwater's house, there are $50,000 and $100,000 houses crowded together on a few arid acres which often cost more than the houses. Goldwater remarked happily that a single hillside lot he owned would sell for around $30,000. Before the war this desert land went begging for a few dollars an acre.

"I can remember when Phoenix was a little town of 10,000 or so," Goldwater says. "I can remember when Phoenix got its first paved street, its first telephone. I wish my kids could have the experience of growing up with a town like this."

Growing up with a town like Phoenix is a rewarding experience, financially as well as spiritually. Phoenix is pushing 500,000, and its population has quintupled since 1950. In the post-war period any reasonably shrewd Arizonian with a bit of capital has seen his net worth multiplied by ten, or a hundred. The Federal Government has had a lot to do with the amazing Arizona boom. Federally supported reclamation projects going back to Teddy Roosevelt's day have made the state habitable for human beings as well as jackrabbits. And defense spending, of of Republican faithful at Oracle, Ariz. Out where the skies are not cloudy all day, says Goldwater, "we're not harassed by the fear of what might happen."

which Arizona enjoys a lot more than its per capita share, is at the heart of the current Arizona boom. But to the beneficiaries of the boom, as to Goldwater, the Federal Government, with its nasty interfering habits, is The Enemy.

One key to the Goldwater phenomenon, in short, is money—new money, boom money. Wherever there is a lot of new money in the United States—in the West and Southwest, in Texas, in the newly industrialized South—there is fanatical Goldwater support. In such areas, for the first time, an actual majority of the voters belong to what Prof. J. Kenneth Galbraith—one of Goldwater's pet hates—has dubbed "the affluent society." The newly affluent provide Goldwater with the broad base of his support.

Another key to the Goldwater phenomenon is what sociologists have called the "revolt of the South and West." That revolt is now complete. The era when the South and West were semi-colonial dependencies of New York-dominated capital is over, but in these areas "the East" is still regarded with a mixture of suspicion, dislike and envy. Goldwater perfectly expresses this attitude—to an extent hardly recognized in the East, he is the anti-Eastern candidate. He once remarked—perhaps only half jokingly—that the East Coast ought to be "sliced off and set adrift."

On the second day of whistle-stopping-by-airplane, Goldwater and his attendant reporter came to the little town of Oracle, high on a naked mountain, and at a dude ranch there Goldwater addressed a Republican gathering. The assembly—the floppy-hatted ladies especially—had the country-club look of gatherings of Republican faithful anywhere. But to Goldwater they were a different breed from the "effete Easterners"; and perhaps he was right.

Who's afraid of Khrushchev?

"I wish the President would take a tour," he said, "and get out where the people of this country live, out where people live without the constant fear of what would happen if we got Khrushchev mad. What's happened to us? Why must the United States fear a little island like Cuba that's not as big as some counties in Arizona? We grovel, we back off, we seem to be afraid. I've never known Americans to be afraid of anything. Out here in the West and Midwest we're not constantly harassed by the fear of what might happen. Sure there are risks, but we've always taken risks."

There was a big burst of applause. And indeed, on that sunny mountain it did seem rather silly to worry about Nikita Khrushchev and his bombs. Perhaps if Goldwater had lived his life in a place of mists and rains and vagrant weather, his thinking might lack some of the simple absolutes which are its chief hallmark. But there are plenty of people who like to think in similar absolutes. Goldwater's trumpet call for "total victory over Communism" may sound like shallow and dangerous semantics in the "effete East." But out where the skies are not cloudy all day, it strikes a responsive chord. Goldwater's remarkable talent for the unsubtle and the unqualified is a third key to the Goldwater phenomenon.

The fourth key to the Goldwater phenomenon is the ugly racial crisis which now confronts the United States. If there were no racial crisis, it is most unlikely that Goldwater would be a serious presidential contender. For the Goldwater candidacy is squarely based on the assumption that he could carry the South and, in so doing, defeat John F. Kennedy. And Goldwater's views on the racial issue in turn underlie that assumption.

The Goldwaterites argue with passion that only Barry Goldwater could defeat Kennedy. Their reasoning is simple.

The industrial East is lost anyway, sure to support Kennedy. So is the northern Negro vote, overwhelmingly Democratic. Therefore, in Goldwater's words, the Republicans should "stop trying to outbid the Democrats for the Negro vote." Again in his words, the Republicans should "go

ALSOP ON GOLDWATER'S CHANCES FOR THE NOMINATION

Sen. Barry Goldwater's nomination at the Republican convention is probable, as long as his election is considered impossible. But if it begins to seem that he might actually win in November, his nomination will be a lot less probable and may even be impossible.

To understand the sense behind this paradox, consider the words of Walter Lippmann: "If they wanted to make American politics logical and clear . . . I think it would be just as well . . . to let Kennedy and Goldwater, who is supposed to be a true Republican, fight it out and see what the country wants."

Until recently this Lippmann theory has been widely shared within that amorphous but powerful body, the Eastern Establishment—on the rather complacent assumption that John F. Kennedy would murder Barry Goldwater at the polls. In this event, the notion that the Republican Party is the minority party because it is not conservative enough would be exposed as a myth. And the Eastern Establishment, the moderate-internationalist, old-money wing of the party, would be left to pick up the pieces.

But lately the Establishment, which twice vetoed the nomination of Sen. Robert A. Taft, has been having second thoughts: Is the assumption that Kennedy would murder Goldwater necessarily valid? A Goldwater victory would require a peculiar combination of circumstances—say a sudden economic downturn combined with Communist triumphs in Latin America or elsewhere. But there would have to be an X factor as well. The X factor might be the racial issue, now the dominant issue all over the United States.

It is not only in the South that President Kennedy's forthright stand on civil rights is unpopular. In this situation it is not inconceivable that such Negro extremists as the Black Muslims might make Goldwater President. "A few race riots in the North," remarked an old pro on Capitol Hill, "and Barry might make it."

The mere idea that "Barry might make it" is enough to give the Establishment the galloping colleywobbles. Even if Goldwater polled no more than 45 percent of the votes, this, by his own formula, would be enough to give the right-wing-nationalist-new-money-anti-Eastern wing control of the Republican Party.

Lately Goldwater has been at pains to dissociate himself from such figures of the radical right as Robert Welch, head of the John Birch Society. But certain of his own positions are radical in the exact sense of that word. His view that the "jackassian" decisions of the Supreme Court are "not necessarily the law of the land" is genuinely radical in that it clearly implies a constitutional upheaval.

Goldwater, if elected, would have to back away from his candid prescription for "total victory over Communism" or accept a grave risk of nuclear war. The men who have hitherto had the last word at Republican conventions want no such risks. Nor do they want a bitter partisan conflict on the racial issue.

This is why, if it begins to seem that Goldwater might not be sunk without trace by Kennedy, the Establishment will marshal all its power to block his nomination. In the past that would have been enough—given the other factors against him—to stop Goldwater cold. But there is no visible candidate to fit the miracle-man role of Willkie in 1940 and Eisenhower in 1952. Goldwater's supporters are fanatical and well heeled. It is already clear that next year's convention may be far more than a meaningless exercise to select a sacrificial lamb.

hunting where the ducks are." The ducks are in the electoral votes of the West, the Middle West and the South.

A presidential candidate needs 268 electoral votes to win. Give Goldwater the Old Confederacy (103 electoral votes), Texas (24), California (40), and every other state Nixon carried in 1960 (151), and Goldwater coasts home with 318 electoral votes. He could lose California, or another big state carried by Nixon in 1960, and still win. So runs the Goldwater argument. The South, obviously, is the sine qua non of the argument. But if numerous polls are accurate, Goldwater really is popular in the South.

Goldwater is popular in part because, in the South as in the West, the industrial boom has made his brand of conservatism popular. But the basic reason is that, in the South, Goldwater is regarded as a sort of honorary Southerner where the racial issue is concerned.

In some ways it is ironical that Goldwater should be the hero of southern conservatives and segregationists. He made his first political reputation as a member of the Phoenix city council, when he fought for the integration of the city's high schools, before he went to the Senate in 1952.

He was at the time a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He claims that his views have not changed at all—he only left the N.A.A.C.P., he says, when "they began calling me an s.o.b."—and he is still a member of the antisegregationist Urban League. He states flatly that the Federal Government has a constitutional obligation to prevent discrimination on interstate bus, rail and air lines, and to ensure that qualified Negroes have the right to vote.

All this would hardly seem to make him the hero of southern racists. Moreover, Goldwater himself does not talk like a racist, and never has. On the plane to Phoenix he pointed to a picture on the front page of a newspaper on the reporter's lap. The picture showed a Negro on the floor of a Mississippi restaurant. A white man was kicking the Negro while white spectators grinned at the revolting spectacle.

"That sort of thing's going to make a change in the South," he said. "Kicking a man who's down, and those guys smiling. White or black, it makes no difference. Decent people won't take that."

The indignation in his tone sounded real. "I made a speech up at Andover school," he said a little later, "and a boy asked me a very perceptive question—would I be patient if I was a Negro in, say, Alabama? Hell, no, I wouldn't be patient; I'd be damned impatient. That's the only honest answer."

How is it, then, that despite this "honest answer," this part-Jewish member of the Urban League is a hero to the southern racists? Part of the answer is a matter of attitude, which derives, oddly enough, from Goldwater's own racial heritage. "You can't force people to associate together," he says. "I know as being part Jewish—there are no more racially inclined people than the Jews. My second cousin ran away to marry a Gentile, and the family practically ostracized him."

But the heart of the answer lies in Goldwater's interpretation of the Constitution, which differs markedly from that of the Supreme Court, whose decisions Goldwater has described as "jackassian." Asked whether, and how, he would enforce the Supreme Court's ruling on school integration if he became President, Goldwater's answers turned fuzzy for the first time. "I don't necessarily buy the idea that what the Supreme Court says is the law of the land. . . . The school question is a problem for the states.

"If the Federal Government moves in to enforce integration, it also moves in to control the schools. . . . I don't think there's any legal way to solve this thing. It's a question of man himself, his own worst enemy."

Since the Administration's civil-rights bill was presented, Goldwater has talked of giving the Attorney General the right to intervene in school cases, on "proof of grievance." But he opposes the heart of the bill, which would prevent discrimination in public accommodations. And as a practical matter, if "there is no legal way to solve this thing," that means leaving the "thing" in the hands of such impeccable States' Righters as Governors Ross Barnett of Mississippi and George Wallace of Alabama. This is enough to suggest why, although Goldwater himself is no racist, he is acceptable to southern racists.

It is also enough to suggest why the nomination of Goldwater, and the adoption of the "southern strategy" by the Republican Party, would force a radically new political alignment. It would bring the Republican and Democratic candidates into direct conflict on the race issue, at the moment of the greatest race crisis since the Civil War.

Goldwater's leading rival, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, has blasted the "Southern strategy" as a recipe for disaster. Many northern and border-state Republicans agree with him. "My God," says a respected Republican senator, "we'd be the apartheid party." But even in the East some professionals in high party posts are coming around to the view that a Goldwater candidacy would be a political plus. "With Barry at the head of the ticket," says one pro, "I'd guarantee a whole passel of new Republican seats in the House, and some in the Senate too." Some are even beginning to believe that Goldwater—and only Goldwater—just might defeat Kennedy.

Trade black votes for white?

There is an unspoken, or rarely spoken, reason for this view. It is the growing belief that white votes for Goldwater might at this time of racial crisis vastly outnumber black votes for Kennedy, in the North as well as in the South.

Whites, after all, outnumber Negroes at the polls by a ratio of more than ten to one. This is still another reason why Goldwater, who seems at first glance so wildly unlikely in the role of presidential candidate, is nevertheless the Republican front-runner.

One senses that Goldwater himself, who likes "pooping about" the country making headlines, seems somewhat dismayed by the Goldwater phenomenon, and half hopes that the Goldwater boom will fade away. "A senator can say things a President can't," he reflects, and then he tries to laugh off "this President thing" with small jokes. But Goldwater has passed the point of no return, and in his heart he knows it. As a friend says, "Barry has reached the point where he can't not be a candidate."

And so this pleasant, uncomplicated, unpretentious, very likable man confronts the Republican Party with a historic choice. Should the Republican Party, which freed the slaves, now abandon claim to Negro support and go all out instead for the electoral votes of the Old Confederacy? The political shape of the future may depend on the answer. THE END

As girl piper plays familiar tune, a solemn Goldwater sets the pace and Legionnaires fall into step behind.

New Negro Party Proposed

The Christian Century 9/11/63

Pol. Gen.

✦ A GROUP of Negroes announced in New York city on August 25 that they are creating an all-Negro political party to enter the national elections in 1964. The party, inspired by Negro newsman William Worthy at a Harlem street rally last June, will be called the Freedom Now party. The group has already set up a national committee and appointed as its chairman Conrad J. Lynn, Manhattan attorney and veteran of civil rights struggles. Lynn says that the new party will support an all-black slate in its aim to elect Negroes to both houses of Congress and to state and local offices. The formation of such a party is bad news for Negroes and whites who want both justice for the Negro and integration of the Negro into the total life of the nation. In the first place it is bad because it constitutes racism carried to the same extreme southern Democrats carried it in excluding Negroes from those elements of the Democratic party over which they had control. It is regrettable that just as the nation begins to awake to the evils of racism Negro groups like the Black Muslims and the Freedom Now party arise to feed on and to perpetuate racism. The formation of this all-black party is bad news in the second place because it will waste the Negro's vote and his increasing political power. An independent Negro electorate, free to throw its weight to whichever major party offers it the best bargain, has tremendous political leverage; an all-Negro political party will have little or none. Third, when national elections are as close as the last one was the isolation of the Negro vote will elect the party candidates least disposed to do justice to the Negro. Recalling President Kennedy's slim margin of victory over Richard Nixon in 1960, Lynn said, "That margin is the Negro's political strength." This is probably correct; but if the Freedom Now party succeeds in drawing the Negro vote away from the contest between the major parties, the power of the margin will evaporate. The best thing the national committee for a Freedom Now party can do for the Negro is to dissolve.

Preview of '64?

WHY KENNEDY, GOLDWATER ARE GOING TO THE VOTERS NOW

Behind the rash of trips already arranged by President Kennedy and Senator Goldwater—

Democrats are calling for Kennedy appearances in weak areas.

Republicans, encouraged, now see the nomination as something worth fighting for in '64.

A few months ago, many politicians were saying that the re-election of John F. Kennedy in 1964 could be taken for granted.

Now, with some surprise, politicians of both parties report that the presidential campaign is beginning to look like a wide-open battle.

Worry shows up among presidential advisers at the White House. And prospective Republican candidates are viewing the chance to run against Mr. Kennedy as worth fighting for.

Political itinerary. There are suggestions that something of a preview of 1964 may be glimpsed in the plans now taking shape in the two parties.

On the Democratic side, President Kennedy is preparing for a "nonpolitical" tour of Western States almost a full year before regular campaign time. It was in these States that he got fewest electoral votes in 1960.

For the Republicans, Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona is stepping up the pace of his work, making flying trips about the country and invading Eastern industrial States where he has been described as weakest. Governor Nelson Rockefeller of New York is building a campaign organization and making tentative probes of battleground areas.

The prospect of a race between Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Goldwater in 1964 no longer is scoffed at by White House strategists. And, the politicians say, the West is gaining steadily in political importance.

"Goldwater was considered something of a joke a few months ago," said a Democratic strategist. "That is not true any more. We don't know how things will look next year, but I believe that, if the election were held today, Goldwater would need to gain only one big State, such as California or Pennsylvania, to win the election."

Reports keep coming into Washington that white voters in the East are jarred by the President's racial policies. If one of the big Eastern States should slip away from Mr. Kennedy in 1964, his men would look to the 40 electoral

KENNEDY: INTO THE WEST—

States to be visited in a cross-country trip starting September 25:

California, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Utah, Washington, Wyoming.

7 of these 10 States were lost by Kennedy in 1960: California, Montana, North Dakota, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming. They have 70 electoral votes. The President's Western trip will give him an early start on his 1964 campaign in these doubtful States.

GOLDWATER: INTO THE BIG-VOTE STATES—

States to be visited in speaking engagements during September-October:

California, Illinois, Ohio, Oklahoma, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Texas.

6 of these 10 States were lost by the Republicans in 1960: Illinois, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Texas. They have a total of 154 electoral votes. Senator Goldwater's appearances in big-city States will give him a chance to show Republican leaders his voter appeal in the States that have the most electoral votes.

votes of California to make up the difference. These are a prime target.

Stress on the West. It was the votes of the Northeast that turned the tide for Mr. Kennedy in 1960; in 1964, his men say, more stress must be placed upon efforts to win States in the West.

In 1960, Mr. Kennedy carried only eight of the 24 States west of the Mississippi. Three of these—Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas—are Southern States, none of which are counted as safe today for Mr. Kennedy. A fourth was Missouri, a Border State with Democratic traditions, but reports are that this State is slipping into an uncertain category.

Of the others, Mr. Kennedy got Minnesota, among the farm States; New Mexico and Nevada, among the Rocky Mountain States; and Hawaii, out in the Pacific. These are thinly populated and have few electoral votes.

GOVERNOR ROCKEFELLER. His path is marked to cross Senator Goldwater's.

Mr. Kennedy carried 15 of the 26 States east of the Mississippi. But with the Southern States excluded, Mr. Kennedy carried only six States in that broad stretch of country between the Appalachians and Hawaii. These were Michigan, Illinois, Missouri, Minnesota, New Mexico and Nevada.

10-State tour. Mr. Kennedy's September study of the ground for the 1964 campaign takes him to 10 States: Pennsylvania, Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Washington, Oregon, California and Nevada. He lost seven of these in 1960, all west of the Mississippi. Six of these seven have Democratic Senators up for re-election.

Interestingly, virtually all of these States have one or more big recreational, flood-control or power projects in the works for which they would be able to use large sums of federal money. Mr. Kennedy plans to visit the sites of many of these projects on his Western trip.

The Senators involved in these six States are Mike Mansfield of Montana, the Democratic Leader, and Clair Engle of California, Quentin Burdick of North Dakota, Frank E. Moss of Utah, Henry M. Jackson of Washington and Gale W. McGee of Wyoming. All of these except Mr. Mansfield and Mr. Jackson are just rounding out their first terms.

The only State east of the Mississippi that is to be visited by Mr. Kennedy on the late September trip is Pennsylvania. This he carried by 51.1 per cent of the vote in 1960, helped along by good pluralities in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. Pennsylvania also has a Senate contest in 1964, but the seat is now held by Senator Hugh Scott, Republican.

Many things have changed in Pennsylvania since 1960. Then, it had a powerful Democratic Governor in David L. Lawrence, backed by hundreds of State employes. Now it has a Republican Governor, William Scranton, and most State employes are Republicans.

Goldwater soundings. Pennsylvania is one of the 10 States on the ambitious schedule of speaking engagements that has been worked up for Mr. Goldwater during September and October.

The Senator, although he has not yet positively committed himself to making the race for the Republican nomination, is continuing to make soundings and, his men report, is drawing wide support.

Much of the Goldwater support has been found in the South, the Rocky Mountain States and the farm States. His September and October schedules take him into Eastern States: Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania. He also is to visit four other States, outside the East, that are rich in delegate votes. These are California, Illinois, Ohio and Texas. Oklahoma and Oregon round out his itinerary.

Altogether, the 10 States to be visited by Senator Goldwater during these two months have 528 delegates to the Republican Convention at San Francisco in 1964. To win nomination, a candidate will need 655 delegate votes.

Some "favorite sons." Quite a few of the delegates in these Eastern States, however, are likely to go to other candidates in early balloting. Governor Rockefeller has first call on the New York delegates. Governor Scranton holds Pennsylvania. Governor James A. Rhodes may hold Ohio. And there are other favorite-son groups.

PRESIDENT KENNEDY. He will go West, where his votes were sparse in '60.

The Goldwater trips, however, will give selected groups of people a chance to see the Senator in action. He is to speak primarily to Republican groups—fund-raising dinners, Republican women's meetings and similar affairs. His trail is to cross that of Governor Rockefeller at the Western Republican Conference at Eugene, Oreg., on October 12.

Clearly, the politicians say as the tumult rises, the presidential campaign of 1964 is going to be long and hard.

Interview With the Governor of New York

WHERE ROCKEFELLER STANDS

"I don't think there's a split in the Republican Party. . . . It's healthy to have the issues debated on the national level."

Governor Rockefeller now sizes up the chances for 1964—his own and the Republican Party's.

As he sees it: Senator Goldwater may be leading for the nomination, but can be stopped.

In this interview with staff members of "U. S. News & World Report," the Governor also discusses the issues, tells how he differs from both Mr. Goldwater and President Kennedy.

Q Governor Rockefeller, most of the recent polls seem to show Senator Goldwater as the strongest possibility currently for the Republican nomination. Would you agree with that appraisal?

A I think it's a fact that the Gallup Poll has him in the lead, but I think it's fair to say that his standing in the polls has been rather volatile over the period of the last two or three years.

Q You think the poll results keep changing—

A Senator Goldwater is now rated as the choice of around 39 per cent of those polled. I was as high as 44 per cent at one point.

I think the latest poll is always something that is interesting and important in terms of registering the public's feeling as of the moment. But the trends are more important than any one specific moment. We're still quite a way from the Convention, and even further from the elections.

Q You don't think, then, that this necessarily means that he's going to win the nomination?

A No, I really don't.

Q Do you believe he can be stopped?

A If you mean do I think someone else can be nominated, I do.

Q Are you and Senator Goldwater really at odds on all issues, or are there many areas of agreement between you?

A I would say there are many areas of agreement. And there are many other areas in which it's hard for me to know just exactly where he does stand. His position on many issues has been importantly modified in recent weeks or months.

As a matter of fact, in the interview in "U. S. News & World Report" [issue of Sept. 2, 1963] you asked him, "Would you, over a period of years, phase out various welfare programs?"—a position he had taken in his book. And he said, "Oh, I don't think you can do that."

Now, this makes it very hard for me to be able to say, in certain areas, what the differences are between us.

Q You mean you can't be sure of what his position is?

A Yes, that's right. But I can say that, for instance, in our belief in the role of individual initiative and free enterprise, I don't think there's any difference. We both feel that this is the vital creative force in America. As far as fiscal integrity is concerned, I think there's no difference between us. However, I would have to put a caveat there, because he said in his book that he was against the progressive income tax. When you asked him the question, he had modified his position. He was going to get a group off in the corner to write a new tax plan.

. . . "The States should take the leadership" on civil rights

Now, if he really meant, as he said in his book, "Conscience of a Conservative," that he was against the progressive income tax and would go to a flat income tax, either our revenue would be so seriously impaired as a nation as to undermine any possibility of fiscal integrity or there would have to be an increase in income taxes for 40 million taxpayers. This assumes he would try to get the same amount of revenue with a flat rate. It would mean an increase in taxes for nine out of 10 taxpayers. Forty million people would get tax increases.

To me this is completely unrealistic. Now, I just raise the question, because I think we have to discuss these problems on the basis of issues rather than on the basis of slogans such as "conservative" or "liberal."

DIFFERING WITH GOLDWATER

Q Senator Goldwater also said in that interview that we ought to withdraw recognition of the Soviet Union. Where would you stand on that?

A I think it's unrealistic to feel, at this point in the history of the world, that we can cut off relations with the principal leader of the Communist world, dedicated to burying America, as they've stated, and dedicated to a take-over of all free people and world domination by the Communist state. On that I disagree with him.

Q Do you differ with him on the civil-rights issue?

A Yes. From what I gather, he would leave most aspects of civil rights exclusively to the States. For example, back in 1957, when the Eisenhower civil-rights proposal was before the Senate, Senator Goldwater voted for a motion to refer the bill to the Eastland Committee, which was tantamount to killing the bill by burying it. This was a very constructive bill, the first civil-rights legislation since the Civil War.

My feeling is that the States should take the primary leadership. In New York State we have traditionally been the leader in civil-rights legislation. Under Republican leadership, with majorities in both houses, we completed last year the framework of laws barring discrimination in all phases of the social and economic life of this State. Where you have a State that is out in front in its understanding of the basic problems which relate to our fundamental beliefs in the worth and dignity of each individual and his or her right to equality of opportunity, that's fine. But remember that the Federal Constitution guarantees basic civil rights, and the Federal Government has the responsibility of insuring these fundamental rights of its citizens.

Q Back in July you issued a statement that was sharply critical of what you referred to as the "radical right"—

A That's correct.

Q This was widely interpreted as an attack on Senator Goldwater. Was it?

A If it was interpreted as such, it was erroneously interpreted.

What I was doing was sounding a call of warning to our party not to take lightly the "radical right." I made that statement after the Young Republican Convention, which, in the words of the "conservative" outgoing chairman, degenerated into a situation where hoodlum tactics were used.

Q You're speaking of the California convention?

A The National Young Republican Convention in California. Candidates' lists, pamphlets, posters and equipment were stolen. Telephone wires were cut. The candidate who won the chairmanship was supported by these activities. He is a man who stands for the repeal of the income tax. This is typical of the "radical right." It is completely unrealistic and deceptive to the American people. The "radical right" also stands for a hard, strong line against Communism, with which I agree. Yet 80 per cent of our revenues come from the corporate and individual income tax.

How are we going to be able to meet the challenge of worldwide Communism and block its objective of world domination—whether by military, subversive, economic, or political warfare—if our Federal Government has 80 per cent of its revenue cut off? We'd have to fight the Communists with bows and arrows.

It's preposterous to me to think that our party could find itself in a position where its leaders were advocating anything as unrealistic, as escapist, as that. Yet here is the head of the Young Republican national organization who does. If this is possible at that level, based on the tactics that were used there, I think we've got to take it seriously. And I think that we want to be clear in analyzing these tactics and positions so that we're sure we don't find ourselves as a party in a position where it becomes impossible to present to the American people an intelligent and effective alternative in 1964.

Q Do you think whoever the Republican nominee is next year will have to repudiate the support of the John Birch Society?

A I would think that he would repudiate them because of their positions and the secret and undemocratic nature of their organization, if he really was intelligently interested and concerned about the future of America. It would be hard for me to conceive of somebody not repudiating their tactics or the list of objectives which they have outlined as their goals.

Q Governor, do you think that your divorce and remarriage have damaged your chances of being nominated and elected President?

A I think that the reaction on that subject is a highly personal one with all people. Until such time as there is an occasion when they have to make a decision, it's hard to tell exactly what that reaction will be. But when an individual has to make a decision, whether it's in a convention or in the voting booth, then I think that he will bring that factor, along with all of the other factors, into balance and make a decision. The collective effect of all the people's decisions would, of course, give the answer.

SLOGANS VS. PRINCIPLES—

Q When do you intend to announce your intentions for 1964?

A I would say sometime before the end of this year—whatever the decision is.

Q Then if your decision is to be a candidate, will you go into the New Hampshire primary and others?

A I would feel that's a reasonable assumption.

Q What kind of Republican nominee would have the best chance of winning, Governor—a "liberal" or a "conservative" or a "middle-of-the-roader"?

A I would presume that a "middle-of-the-roader"—if we're going to use slogans—is the one who would be closest to reflecting the sentiment of the people of this country. However, I'm very skeptical of labels and slogans, because I think they tend to confuse the issues. I would rather talk about principles and specific problems and our solutions to those problems, because that's where, really, the test comes.

ON POWER OF GOVERNMENT: "I am very concerned about the growing centralization of authority in the Government and the loss of respect for the States."

Q How would you characterize yourself—as a "liberal," as a "conservative," as a "middle-of-the-roader"?

A As I said before, I really don't think it's possible to use such labels. They have different meanings to each individual. So I'd rather be judged by my record and my positions on the basic issues. I feel that my position is related to the fundamental beliefs of our country, to the mainstream of American political thought. It's a positive, constructive, optimistic approach to the problems and the tremendous possibilities and opportunities that face us in this world and at home.

I think that labels are dangerous and very confusing in relation to the complex issues of today. Too many people say, in a sense are saying when they identify themselves with a slogan, "Don't confuse me with the facts, my mind is already made up." And they don't get down to the heart of the problem.

A scientist doesn't go into a laboratory to find a solution and say, "I'm going to find a 'liberal' solution or a 'conservative' solution."

A businessman doesn't go into a new market and say, "I'm going to make a 'liberal' approach to this market or a 'conservative' approach." He goes in and says, "I want to find out what the facts are." Then he adapts his program and his approach to the realities. And I think that's what we've got to do, and in the process be guided by fundamental principles.

Now, I don't know whether it's "liberal" or "conservative," but New York State has brought its fiscal situation back into balance, has gone on a pay-as-you-go basis, and has increased State aid to education by nearly 500 million dollars this year over five years ago. To me these are fundamental requirements of our society—fiscal integrity, pay-as-you-go, the best education for our young people.

We would rather meet our problems in education ourselves than have the Federal Government come in. We believe in local responsibility. We want to keep the control at the local level. The State during these five years has increased its aid from 39 per cent to 47 per cent of the total cost of primary and secondary public-school education in this State.

Q There's a great deal being said, Governor, about a split in the Republican Party. How serious is that division in the party?

A I don't think there's a split in the Republican Party. I personally believe that the greatest tragedy for our party would be to find ourselves where we had a monolithic attitude toward the problems of life.

To me the strength of democracy has been the divergence of the points of view of individuals and their willingness to discuss and debate their different beliefs. Our strength as a party is directly proportionate to the vitality of those beliefs on the part of the membership and the leadership of the party.

When I ran for the Governorship in 1958, there were five candidates seeking the nomination. I think this did a tremendous amount to arouse public interest, to stimulate a sense of confidence that the Republicans could win, because everybody said, "Well, if all these people want to get the nomination, they must think it's worth something." Up to that point, there had been a feeling that Harriman [Governor Averell Harriman, Democrat] had the next election in the bag, and that there was no chance of a Republican's winning. The people began to get interested in what the different candidates had to say.

Now, my feeling is that it's very healthy to have the issues debated on the national scene at the present time. I only wish there were more people in our party talking on the issues than there are. I think this is essential. I don't think it hurts the party. I think it helps the party. It makes for interest, it makes for public understanding and awareness, and this is the whole basis of democracy.

IF A "CONSERVATIVE" WINS—

Q Would you support a "conservative" candidate as the nominee of your party?

A I have absolute confidence that the Republican Convention is going to adopt a platform that reflects the great heritage and tradition of our party, that recognizes the realities and the problems of the world in which we live, that looks into the future with optimism and confidence—and whoever is selected to be the candidate to run on that platform will have my wholehearted support.

Q Do you think a "conservative" could win?

A I think it's going to depend on what his positions are on the key issues. I don't really think that anyone can say what is a "conservative." Therefore, it's what does Mr. X think about this issue? What is his position on that issue? Now, when those are added up, that is the basis, in my opinion, on which the voters are going to make their determination.

Q Governor, do you think the Conservative Party in New York State would present any threat to you as Republican nominee for the Presidency, so far as winning New York State is concerned?

A Let's look at the Conservative Party in the last election. Out of almost 6 million votes, they got 141,000. The Lieutenant Governor and I won by 529,000 as against about 573,000 in the 1958 election. So it would be hard to say that they were really an important factor.

If that is the strength of this group, it's about half that of the Liberal Party on the other side. The Liberals have a registered membership of about 100,000, although they'll score as high as 300,000 votes in a Statewide election.

Q Do you think that Kennedy can be beaten in 1964?

A Yes, I do. And I think it's very much in the interest of our country and the welfare of our people and the security of our nation and of the free world that a change be made.

. . . "There is great Republican strength in industrial States"

Q Do you feel that the Republican chances have improved recently—say, in the last six to 12 months?

A Yes. However, I think the characteristics of this present Administration were visible very early in the Administration. By that I mean the inability of that Administration to carry out programs that it puts forward to meet the problems, and this has just become clearer and clearer as time has gone by. I think the American people are becoming more aware of the fact that the Kennedy Administration is not meeting the fundamental problems, either at home or abroad.

Q In what parts of the country, Governor, would you say that the Republicans have a good chance of putting together a winning combination of electoral votes?

A I feel that, basically, we, as a party, have strength throughout the country—in the Midwestern agricultural States, in the industrial States, and in other areas. I think this was shown very clearly in the last election.

It was shown in 1958 when I was fortunate enough to win in New York, which is a big industrial State. The voters in New York did not feel that the Democratic Administration then in power under Governor Harriman understood how to encourage private enterprise, investment of capital, and the creation of additional jobs, which were essential.

The same situation was evidenced, for example, in Pennsylvania, in Michigan, in Rhode Island and in Ohio, in the election of Republican Governors in this last election.

Q Do you see a similar situation now developing on the national scene?

A Yes. I think we are getting on the national scene the same kind of awareness we had in New York and in these other industrial States. I think there is going to be great Republican strength in the industrial States.

The hope of the urban areas, the industrial areas and of the minority groups is, basically, increased job opportunities —a more rapid rate of economic growth. If they don't have that, they're not going to get jobs and they're not going to be able to provide for their own security, their own opportunity of development and self-realization.

COMING: A TWO-PARTY SOUTH—

Q How about Republican strength in the South? What do you see there as the prospect?

A What I see in the South is a gradual realization on the part of the people in the South that a two-party system is a pretty fundamentally sound proposition to reflect the best interests of the people. In a one-party system, you just don't have the kind of vitality in political life which has proven its usefulness in this country. And I think Southern people are coming—not on any one issue, but basically and fundamentally—to a feeling that a two-party system has value. I believe that, regardless of who is the candidate, there is going to be a very strong Republican showing in the South.

Q If you were the Republican nominee, would you expect to take the South?

A I'd expect to do my best to win the South, if I were a candidate, as well as the North and the East and the West and the central areas.

I think that what you've got to do is to go to the heart of the problems, come up with constructive alternatives to the present Administration, offer sound solutions that are within the tradition of our heritage, the fundamental beliefs of the American people, and build on those for the future.

The American people want to go forward, they don't want to stand still or go backward. And they want to feel a sense of confidence and optimism and excitement about the future, not only in our own country, but in our role in the world scene.

Q You wouldn't agree with those who say that the Republicans have to cross off the big industrial States in the East in 1964—

A To me it's inconceivable. New York State is the second most Republican State in the nation today, next to Kansas. Now, why would anyone talk about crossing off New York when the Republicans have all but one State-wide office, majorities in both houses of the legislature, both United States Senators and a majority of the congressional delegation?

I don't know why anyone talks about crossing off the industrial States. I think the people of New York, in their re-electing the present Republican Administration by a plurality of over half a million last year, evidenced the fact that they want the kind of sound administration of their affairs which we have been providing. They want to have opportunity for jobs, and they want to have decent educational opportunities. They want to have the things which go to make up the values which we hold dear in America.

WINNING THE NEGRO VOTE—

Q How do you feel about the possibility of the Republicans' taking the Negro vote?

A I think it depends upon the position of the Republican Party and its candidates. It depends upon whether we stand by our heritage as a party—our heritage as the "party of Lincoln," a deep belief—not only through Lincoln, but through the Founding Fathers—in the Judaeo-Christian concept of the worth and dignity of every citizen.

If we stick to those principles and fight for the realization by minority groups of their aspirations for equal opportunity —through legislation, through co-operative action with community leaders at all levels, with labor groups, with industrial groups—I think we will command the confidence of the minority groups. And they will say, "Well, not only do these people believe in us as human beings, but they also understand how to create the jobs we need." Republicans know how to encourage the forces of private enterprise—private initiative, a free-enterprise system—and they know how to create a climate which will encourage a more rapid rate of capital investment, expansion of production at lower cost, and a more competitive position at home and abroad.

Now, we've got to have 20 million more jobs in the next five years if we're going to meet the tremendous increase in the number of young people coming out of school and college, and if we're going to make possible the realization of the goal of equal opportunity in employment for minority groups.

Q Then you don't write off the labor vote either—

A No, sir, I certainly do not. I feel that the Republican Party is the party of all the people, not of special interests, not of any section or group or race or creed or color, but the party of all the people. I feel that our tradition is with the people, and that our ability is to solve the problems of the people within the framework of principles and the fundamental values which have been the foundations of this great nation.

Q On the basis of your analysis of the situation in New York, do you figure the Republicans would also have a pretty good chance in Pennsylvania and other big-city States?

A Yes, in Pennsylvania, in Ohio, in Michigan, in Illinois, in California.

I feel that we can't think of ourselves as only a rural party. Rural areas are tremendously important, and we have great strength there. But the people, over the past 150 years, have been moving slowly from the rural areas into the industrial areas, the urban areas. And now the people are moving out of the urban areas into suburban areas. We have got to follow the people as a party if we're going to be a party of all the people and represent them wherever they are, helping them by creating a framework of laws, administrative policies and attitudes which will encourage the freedom and opportunity of the individual in our system.

ON U. S. ALLIES: "I am disturbed by the bypassing of our allies in negotiations with the Soviet. . . . There's been a major weakening of our relations with our allies."

Q Do you think the Republican Party could win without either New York or California?

A It could, but I think it would be less likely.

Q How do you feel about the Kennedy civil-rights bill?

A It was 2½ years too late, in my opinion, but it should be enacted. I feel very strongly that a great deal of the turmoil and upheaval we've been going through in this country could have been and would have been avoided had President Kennedy done what he said he was going to do in his campaign. He said he was going to make civil-rights legislation the first order of business.

The Democratic Party, like the Republican Party, had a strong civil-rights platform. Senator Joe Clark of Pennsylvania and Congressman Emanuel Celler of New York introduced a bill encompassing the Democratic platform during the first session of the new Administration. Pierre Salinger, for the White House, disassociated the President from this bill. The result was that it took these massive demonstrations, strife and bloodshed, and two and a half years of lost time before he was willing to act on the pledge he had made in the campaign, which he said he would make the first order of business. And I think that his inaction is importantly responsible for having brought on a great deal of the confusion, humiliation and suffering that has transpired. The country was ready to move the programs which both the Republican and Democratic parties had advocated. The platforms of both parties were generally agreed upon. The basic principles and the legislation could have gone forward. This is one example of how the Kennedy Administration puts political expediency ahead of principle, and what can happen as a result.

Q How do you feel about the sections of the civil-rights bill that would outlaw discrimination in public accommodations?

A At the request of the Senate committee, I stated my position, which is in support of these sections. We have had such laws on the books of the State of New York for a long time, and never have had any difficulty with them. I feel that this proposal will not have the adverse effects which so many people seem to fear. It is part of giving equal rights and equal opportunities to all our citizens.

Q How about the power to withhold federal assistance in cases where discrimination is practiced?

A I am opposed to that provision as originally drawn because it was so broad and loose that there was real danger of its being misused for political purposes.

It seems to me whatever is done in that area should be specific in the law and not left to decision by federal agencies or individuals. There should be court procedures so that anyone who is accused of having discriminated will have a chance to defend himself.

I am very strongly concerned about the growing centralization of power and authority in the Federal Government and the growing disregard and loss of respect for the States and their responsibilities. I am particularly concerned about the ability to use these growing federal powers for purposes of political power and advantage, and the federal bypassing of the States in order to work directly with the local communities, which are becoming more and more dependent on federal funds, and therefore more subservient to federal political dictates.

FORCE TO BACK UP COURTS—

Q What about the use of federal troops to enforce school integration?

A If the federal courts have taken a position, then the Federal Government has the responsibility to back up and enforce their decision with whatever means it has.

But I think that the President could have used his authority and his position of leadership to save a lot of the heartaches and bloodshed which have taken place.

Legislation at the federal level would also have helped. I have felt for a long time, and advocated in 1959, that the Attorney General should have the right in limited situations to initiate cases himself on school desegregation. I thought this would speed up the process. Kennedy finally got around to recommending this in June of this year. The proposal has not, of course, been enacted.

Q Speaking of the civil-rights issue, why are they picketing your office in New York City? As Governor of New York, haven't you done a great deal toward promoting employment for Negroes?

A This is a sit-in group which has a series of demands regarding the employment of Negroes in State-financed construction.

There have been demonstrations here in the city, and over at the downstate medical center in Brooklyn, which is a State job. Ministers and various other groups had been involved. I've met with the leaders of the groups to explain the legal and administrative procedures the State has developed to prevent discrimination in union membership and State-contract employment. We set up co-operative programs to help them find qualified workers in the various trades who can apply and seek membership in the unions.

. . . "Federal expenditures should be held at present levels"

Q Has that satisfied them?

A The group downstairs is not satisfied with that approach. The ministers and the other groups have all agreed and have called off the pickets, and there's only a handful left.

They would like a racial-quota system on jobs, which I oppose. We cannot have quotas for any racial or national groups. It is counter to the law and would be an impossibility. I've been opposing it for months. In addition, they would like to have the State actually employ the people for the unions on State-financed construction jobs. Their program would destroy the whole concept of free unions and of union membership.

As a matter of fact, in a meeting I had with the various leaders of the national Negro groups, the representative of CORE [Congress on Racial Equality] proposed their program, and Roy Wilkins [executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People] said his association was opposed to the quota system.

WHERE KENNEDY FAILS—

Q There are some "conservatives" who say that there's no difference between you and President Kennedy. What would be your comment on that?

A They're just plain misinformed. That would be my answer. I think the President lacks a real understanding of the role of the free-enterprise system in our country, and the responsibility of Government to create a framework within which it can operate most effectively.

I have mentioned his lack of adherence or belief in the importance of fiscal integrity in Government. I recognize the fiscal problems of the moment, but I feel that it's essential that there be goals established relating to immediate income tax cuts, federal-expenditure controls at present levels, and plans to achieve a balanced federal cash budget by '65 or '66, all of which are importantly interrelated.

Only in this way can confidence be restored and the necessary encouragement be given to increase the rate of private-capital investment and thus develop the millions of new jobs needed in the immediate years ahead. At the present time there seems to be complete abandonment relating to federal expenditures.

Also, I feel that there's a very real lack of understanding of the role of the States in our federal system of shared responsibility. There is increasing evidence of a desire to bypass the States.

Also, I am not sure of the depth of the President's understanding of the dangers of world Communism and its objectives of world domination.

And I am deeply disturbed by and disagree with the bypassing of our allies in negotiations with the Soviet. This is a serious mistake, in my view.

I feel that there's been a major weakening of our relations with our allies in Europe, in Asia and in Latin America.

Another very fundamental area in which I disagree with the President is his failure to state clear, long-term objectives, either at home or abroad, toward which we can build solidly for the future, step by step. Rather he is handling things on an ad hoc, expediency, basis, as the crises develop and they become hot politically.

In the balance-of-payments area, for example—another tremendously important one for the future of America—he has taken no decisive action, and the second quarter of this year we reached a rate of 5.2 billion dollars in our balance-of-payments deficit. It can undermine world confidence in the dollar if this keeps up, and could have tremendously serious effects. He has been aware of the problem for three years and yet has not taken effective action to deal with it.

Q How about tax cuts? Do you differ with President Kennedy there?

A His whole approach to stimulating the economy—and, again, he talked about this in the campaign—has been tardy and ineffective.

Only after a major stock-market crash did he come up with the proposal for tax cuts. Then the cuts were watered down by so-called reforms which would have, in very important respects, wrought chaos for tens of millions of taxpayers and all our religious, philanthropic and private educational institutions. It would have undermined confidence rather than increased it. The effective dates of proposed tax cuts were delayed.

On the other hand, I feel that there should be tax cuts reducing corporate rates from 52 per cent to 47 per cent and a 7.5-billion-dollar personal income tax cut, without the so-called reforms, and that they should all take effect immediately. At the same time, I feel that federal expenditures should be held at present levels and the federal cash budget balanced by '65 or '66.

Q Any other points of difference?

A In the field of transportation: On various occasions he's mentioned it, but has not come up with an over-all approach to the problem of transportation, which in this country is in a chaotic state and a financial crisis—the railroads, the airlines, the bus companies, the truck companies. There is no co-ordinated policy. I have urged time and again the creation of a Department of Transportation and the development of an over-all national transportation policy.

In the field of agriculture, I disagree fundamentally with his supply-management concepts. He's added 2 billion dollars to the 5.2 billion that was spent under the Eisenhower Administration. All of his concepts go to rigid controls by the Federal Government, with penalties—for instance, in the case of milk producers—if they don't conform, both in terms of jail sentences and up to a $2,000 fine. His program is not realistic and goes counter to the whole philosophy of a free-enterprise society.

The Administration's actions in all of these areas which I have been discussing reflect fundamentally a lack of true understanding of what makes our system work, of encouraging initiative and the opportunity for advancement of the individual and the free-enterprise system, of the importance of removal rather than the introduction of further Government interference from Washington, and they also reflect a serious undermining of the role of the States and the preservation of our federal system.

THE BIG ISSUES FOR '64—

Q What do you regard as the key issues for 1964?

A It's hard to tell yet, but I would think that two areas will be dominant in the campaign:

One is our security and free-world security.

The other is the domestic economy and unemployment, and the lack of effective steps to encourage a rate of growth

ON FOREIGN AID: "Objectives are constantly being shifted. I don't think most of our allies are very clear about the goals any longer, either."

and a reduction in the percentage of unemployment that I think is essential to preserve the strength of this country at home.

Q Do you think those two objectives could be met and the budget still be balanced in any early year?

A If the tax cut were made now—this year, right now—with corporate rates reduced to 47 per cent and 7.5 billion dollars' personal income tax cut, effective immediately, but without the so-called reforms, there would be about a 10-billion-dollar saving in taxes. This would restore profit margins for corporations, and the incentive to invest capital would be strengthened. The result would be an increased rate of capital investment in new plant and equipment and expanded production. Employment would be increased, productive efficiency would rise, and we as a country would enjoy a better competitive position internationally.

Coupled with that, the President should hold the present line on federal spending and, as new programs came in that he believed essential, he should give them a priority and cut out existing programs of a lower priority.

At the same time he should take steps, and have all his departments take steps, to save money at every turn in Government. It's the savings of dollars and hundreds of dollars and thousands of dollars and hundreds of thousands that build up to savings in the billions, and if you don't start with small amounts, you'll never get the big amounts of saving.

Federal employment should be held down. We have put a freeze in this State on the filling of vacancies at the present time. The President should stop this tremendous rate of growth in the Federal Government. I think there's got to be a determined effort in that direction.

We have got to stimulate the growth of the economy and the increase in employment opportunities. Out of that, then, will come the increased revenues which will make possible a balanced budget. I think that they could balance the cash budget by fiscal 1966.

Q Do you think that expanded school aid and a program such as medicare could be made effective and still control federal spending?

A The medicare program—which the President has talked about but done nothing to implement—would not come from general taxes. It would come from a contributory system under Social Security—which I favor—so that wouldn't affect the federal budget as such. Incidentally, I have important differences with the President with respect to medicare. I would offer the individual a choice of taking cash benefits to buy private health insurance.

As far as school aid is concerned, I think that has got to be balanced with many of these other programs.

I think if we adopted a sensible agricultural program, tremendous amounts of money could be saved there.

I think we've got to be able to bring our expenditures into line with our revenues. It can't be done overnight. Our individual and corporate taxes are too high to encourage the rate of growth that's essential. Therefore, I feel that, if he made the tax cuts now, it would stimulate the growth of the economy, and with that stimulation, he would get a growth rate which would result in increased Government revenues. As those revenues grew, he could bring the budget into balance—if he had held expenditures in line.

Q And continuing budget deficits do worry you—

A Very much, and I've been advocating right along that the Government set a goal for balancing the budget.

SPEEDING ECONOMIC GROWTH—

Q You spoke of our slow rate of growth. What would spark a faster growth?

A The only way we're going to get the growth we need, and the reduction in our percentage of unemployed, is by increasing private capital investment. It was running at around 37 billions a year last year. It's closer to 39 billion now, but, in order to get the greater growth that we need, it ought to be around 45 or 46 billion a year.

If we get up to 45-46 billions, we could achieve a 4.5 per cent growth rate. I think, at that point, through greatly expanded and more-efficient production facilities, we would have the increased job opportunities necessary to absorb the tremendous increase in the number of young people who will be coming out of school, plus those who will be losing their jobs through automation. By retraining, they could get back into the labor market. Our production costs would be lower. At the present time our plant is growing older each year, rather than more modern, whereas in Germany and Japan and many of the other industrial areas of the world plants are becoming more modern, more competitive, and we're at an increasing disadvantage.

So if we can get on a more competitive basis, then we will find ourselves in the position of being able to improve our balance-of-payments picture. These things are all interrelated, but they all involve a faith in the individual citizen and his ability to assume his responsibilities, or hers, and to make decisions instead of having them all made in Washington.

Q Do you feel that foreign-aid expenditures are running too high?

. . . "U.S. just cannot carry the whole world on its back alone"

A Well, it is hard to understand clearly today what our long-term objectives and goals are in the foreign field, and, therefore, it's difficult to appraise intelligently the character and the level of foreign aid necessary to achieve them.

I think that foreign aid is something that's run on and on and on since the end of the war, and I don't think there has been a clear reappraisal of our objectives in the light of changing conditions.

Foreign aid is a tool to achieve an objective. Unless you understand clearly what the objectives are, it's very hard to determine and to measure the size of the tool that's needed. So I don't think that at the present time the American people know—and certainly I don't know—clearly what they are trying to accomplish, what our goals are.

One day we're told one thing, another day another. Programs, plans, objectives are constantly being shifted. I don't think most of our allies are very clear about the goals any longer, either. Without clear understanding, it's very hard to have a judgment about the scope of the programs that are being used.

Q And so, would you like to see a reappraisal of the whole foreign-aid picture?

A A reappraisal of the foreign-aid picture, a reappraisal of what we're trying to do, of our goals and specific objectives in the world.

How do we, as still the leading free nation of the world, visualize five or 10 years from now the structure of the free-world relationships? Nobody proposes that we abandon our alliances. Are we going to continue to undermine the governments of some of our allies? Or are we going to try to build these alliances, are we going to try to work toward closer ties and closer relationships?

I don't think there is any clear picture as to where we want to go or where we are going, and where we will be five or 10 years from now. Without that, I don't see how you can determine the scope of these programs.

Q Do you feel foreign-aid spending could be cut and still not damage our long-range program with our allies?

A Gen. Lucius Clay and the members of his committee that studied foreign aid said certain cuts could be made. I have great respect for him and his judgment, his ability and his awareness of the Communist threat in the world. So if he says that he thinks certain cuts can be made, I would say that was probably the best judgment we could get. Now, he's said that the cuts that were made by the Congress were too much. I would still follow his advice because I don't have the basis today for an independent judgment.

Honestly, I don't feel that this country can carry, on a unilateral basis, the economies of 50, 60, 100 nations. I think we have got to have some structures in the world, like the Atlantic community and the Western Hemisphere, where we can work closely together in a common effort. The United States just cannot carry the whole world on its back alone.

THE "FIASCO" IN CUBA—

Q If you were President, what would be your position on Cuba?

A You have to go back and retrace each step all the way, starting with the Bay of Pigs fiasco. The first one was the most tragic. In fact, I think it is one of the most tragic situations in the history of America. The last-minute lack of air cover and support of the Cuban "freedom fighters" as they went ashore in the Bay of Pigs is inconceivable.

I went down to talk to the President the week afterward. I had done some intensive work with very close political and governmental friends of mine in the Western Hemisphere to develop a plan by which we could retrieve the disaster of the Bay of Pigs and permit the establishment of a free government truly representative of the people of Cuba. I outlined the plan to the President. He was extremely courteous, but to my knowledge nothing was ever done in relation to it.

The next thing we knew, Senator Keating of New York was warning us of the Soviet buildup in Cuba and of Soviet missiles coming in. And then came the very dramatic statement on the part of the President that the Soviets had to take the missiles out and we demanded inspection. He had mobilized our military forces on an international basis, but again he backed off. He did not follow through on his demand for on-the-spot inspection. We never actually got on-site determination as to what was going out. We had pictures of boats and so forth. But the President's tremendously dramatic action which started out so strongly ended up by leaving Cuba as an armed Communist fortress, 90 miles off our shore. This was an abandonment of the Monroe Doctrine, and a very serious weakening of Western Hemisphere unity.

Now we're confronted with a Soviet fortress off our shores, which—based on the briefing that was given by the Defense Department—is equipped with the most modern radar and ground-to-air missiles and ground-to-sea missiles. They have the latest MIG's there, and these MIG's have a range that would easily reach the United States with nuclear bombs, if they are smuggled into Cuba.

I think we have got to isolate this Communist infection from the rest of the Western Hemisphere. I think we have got to have as our goal getting the Soviet forces out, and then freedom for the Cuban people. Those would be my goals, and, without having access to intelligence reports as to what is going on, it's very hard to make a more definitive statement at the present time. Two years ago the problem was far less complicated.

WHY TEST BAN IS NEEDED—

Q Do you favor ratification of the nuclear-test-ban treaty?

A I do, and have so stated, because I feel that it has come to reflect the hopes of millions of people throughout the world—hundreds of millions—and the prestige of the United States has been invested in it. Moreover, our responsible military leaders have testified that if we act independently within the terms of the treaty, our security will not be jeopardized. Therefore, I feel we have no alternative but to ratify.

However, I have recommended in a full statement the advice which, it seemed to me, it is essential the Senate should give to the President in the way of understandings about the treaty at the time of its ratification. One of the most important is that we would be free to use nuclear weapons in the defense of freedom anywhere, a point which is ambiguous in the treaty. The President has stated that we can use them, but, if this is his interpretation, I don't know why they didn't write it into the treaty clearly instead of his having to interpret it. As a matter of fact, three of the five articles of the treaty are ambiguous.

Q If the nominee should not happen to be yourself or Senator Goldwater, where do you think the party would turn?

A There are a lot of good Republican Governors, Senators, Congressmen, leaders throughout the country. I personally would like to see more Republicans talking and speaking on the issues and participating in the debates on the problems that lie ahead of us. [END]

There are numerous people who were close to him during his congressional years, too, who visit him here. His opinions on politics, and on what is good and bad for the State and Nation, still are sought, and he shows that he hasn't let current events and their evaluation escape his interests. He has a ready answer for almost any question involving Government, its present and future, and he draws on the past in giving comparisons or in providing background that may have influenced his views.

He doesn't return to Washington often, for he made up his mind upon retirement to stay away as much as possible from the active scene.

He was there during the early days of the nuclear test ban hearings. His opinions were sought—and he favored the treaty—but he didn't testify for public appraisal.

He also has been retained by the American Pharmaceutical Association as a consultant on needed legislation or proposed legislation involving the drug industry. This will consume little time, he explains, since most of his duties will be in discussion groups and in making speeches before pharmaceutical associations.

Mr. Durham was a pharmacist here before he was tapped for Congress, and he has not lost his interests in the profession.

It was his interest in science, as a part of his education, that placed him in a strong position of leadership when the atomic age blossomed for the Nation and basic organizations were established in Congress. As a member of the original Joint Atomic Energy Committee in Congress, he was then made vice chairman and later chairman. He also served as vice chairman of the House Armed Forces Committee.

When he decided on his retirement from Congress, he was urged to accept a civilian position with the atomic energy program, but he declined. He wanted to return home.

On the sidelines today, though in prominence through correspondence and other contacts that seek his opinions, Mr. Durham does not regret his decision to leave Congress.

He is enjoying his children and grandchildren as they come home from their own homes at nearby and distant points. He enjoys a more relaxed life with his friends and neighbors here, as well as in the Sixth District and other sections of the State. He enjoys his hobbies and other interests.

His health is good, except for some occasional conflict with an asthmatic condition he has had for many years, and his appearance shows that Chapel Hill and a less occupied life agree with him.

But the influences of yesteryear are not blotted from his life.

The respect in which he was held in Washington still is marked prominently in the tributes to him by inscriptions on pictures, plaques, and the many other personal possessions he has with him here.

And he, too, can still call off names and cite the family background or some other point of interest or experience of Alamance County residents today as easily as he could through the years in Congress. His district, then, was his family, and he hasn't broken his personal ties, though today he is not the slightest bit interested in votes.

My Fight for Civil Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADAM C. POWELL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 29, 1963

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, much has been said in recent months regarding the necessity of passing an effective civil rights bill. This urgency has been recognized as essential for America's proof to the world that she believes in democracy.

The question of civil rights is no longer the problem of Negro people—it is the problem of all the people of the United States of America. Many fear that the United States may be finished as a great power in the eyes of the world unless she solves this problem and solves it now.

However, on November 7, 1944, when I was elected to the 79th Congress of the United States of America, I pledged myself to dedicate my efforts to the task of making democracy work. From the very beginning of my term, I introduced bills relating to underprivileged and minority groups and utilized every opportunity provided me to remind my colleagues of the importance of this issue. Now as we come to the time when Americans generally turn their hearts and minds to this all-important challenge of America, I would like to take this opportunity to review my record in this matter as evidenced by bills introduced and remarks made in the House of Representatives.

The material follows:

MY FIGHT FOR CIVIL RIGHTS

79TH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

Armed Forces

H.R. 2708 (Mr. POWELL): A bill to prohibit race segregation in the Armed Forces of the United States after the termination of hostilities in the present war and the beginning of the demobilization.

District of Columbia

House Joint Resolution 84 (Mr. POWELL): Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President to the people of the District of Columbia.

Fair employment practices

What we are interested in is a permanent FEPC—a permanent act of this Congress which will forever, in wartime and peacetime, rule out discrimination in public and private employment.

It is the cheapest and lowest form of politics to play upon any subject as delicate as is the subject of race in connection with legislation which is distinctly of a nonracial character. This bill should stand upon its own merits. It should be passed on its own merits or rejected on its own merits.

"I am opposed to this bill because it fundamentally negates the entire American tradition of the freedom of contract. I will never subscribe to the philosophy that the end justified the means. We are out to win this war, but not just another victory. We want to win a permanent, people's democratic victory. We cannot gain a moral victory with immoral means. This bill is immoral. * * * Its passage would mean that in the 'land of the free and the home of the brave' we have reverted to slavery, not just of the blacks but of the entire American working class" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 31, 1945, pp. 652–653).

Lynching and violence against the individual

H.R. 1747 (Mr. POWELL): A bill for the better assurance of the protection of persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching.

Poll tax and voting rights

H.R. 2183 (Mr. POWELL): A bill making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

"This Nation will never achieve full stature until the whole South is free. The South can never start the upward march to political freedom until the chains of poll taxes are broken. * * * Two dollars is a lot of money to 6 million sharecroppers in the Southern States who average less than 6 cents per day. Two dollars is a lot of money to men who at the end of a year's work are told that they still owe the planter money" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 12, 1945, p. 5983).

Racial discrimination

H.R. 1743 (Mr. POWELL): A bill to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry.

Labor (antilabor legislation)

"Naturally, no American citizen wants unrest and dissension; nevertheless, this is America and among the things our men fought for were not only that a world might be made safe for democracy but also America. Democracy gives to a man the right not only to say what he wants to, when he wants, but also the right to stand together with his fellow citizens and demand the things he should have. Any attempt to take any of these things away from American workers is winning the war for Hitler."

"Generally speaking, this legislation denies the basic right of labor to strike. It will force American workers to work. It will prevent them from getting together their forces to strike if necessary.

"Put this bill in operation and American workers * * * would be chained to the wheels of economic salvery" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Dec. 11, 1945, p. 11836).

79TH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

H.R. 5990 (Mr. POWELL): An amendment to the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for 1947.

"Provided, That no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used for any agency, office, or department of the District of Columbia which segregates the citizens of the District of Columbia is employment, facilities afforded, services performed, accommodations furnished, instructions, or aid granted on account of the race, color, creed, or place of national origin of the citizens of the District of Columbia."

Public accommodations

H.R. 7220 (Mr. POWELL): A bill to assure to all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States full and equal privileges with respect to public conveyances and places of public accommodations, resort, entertainment, amusement, assemblage, and institutions.

School lunch programs

An amendment to the School Lunch Act of 1946 to provide that "no funds made available * * * shall be paid or disbursed to any State of school if, in carrying out its functions under this title, it makes any discrimination because of race, creed,. color, or national origin of children or between types of schools, or with respect to a State which maintains separate schools for minority and for majority races, it discriminates between such schools on this account.

"We should see that this bill guarantees that the health of America's poorest citizens, the people of the minorities, be protected. I am sure the author of the bill intended this; I am sure all of us who are in favor of the bill want it. It does not in any way alter the existing educational pattern of some States; it does not mean equal education, which is another subject to go into some other time. I know we do not in some States spend equal amounts of money for education, but I am sure that no one can be found to say that we would not want to spend equal amounts of money for food. We are spending vast sums through UNRRA for Europe, and we should. We cannot do any less for our own American citizens.

"I am merely offering this amendment in the hope that we will be humane enough to see that minority races have the same opportunity in the free-lunch program as do those of the majority race.

"This is a program for the children of the United States; and the children who need it whatever race, color, or creed should have equally the rights and benefits of it" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 20, 1946, p. 1494).

Segregation in interstate transportation

H.R. 1925. (Mr. POWELL): "The Supreme Court of the United States has just handed down a decision which marks the most important step toward winning the peace since the conclusion of the war. The decision abolishes separation of races on interstate transportation. It strikes at the heart of the un-Christian, undemocratic hypocrisy of some Americans. * * * It is ridiculous that Negro veterans who have fought all over the earth for democracy, returning to the United States must ride in inferior, separate Jim Crow cars which prisoners of war from Germany are allowed first-class accommodations on all trains. It is a travesty that we can fight two wars to make a world safe for democracy in one generation and do nothing whatsoever about our own democracy here. When I say here, I mean here in the Halls of Congress. We have not passed a single win-the-peace law since the conclusion of the war. We have sat by and allowed the Supreme Court to do what we are paid to do."

District of Columbia

House Resolution 30 (Mr. POWELL): Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress among the electors of President and Vice President to the people of the District of Columbia.

H.R. 805 (Mr. POWELL): To assure to all persons within the District of Columbia full and equal privileges of places of public accommodation, resort, entertainment, and amusement.

Armed Forces

H.R. 279 (Mr. POWELL): A bill to prohibit race segregation in the Armed Forces of the United States after the termination of hostilities in the present war and beginning of demobilization.

Equal employment

H.R. 3105 (Mr. POWELL): A bill to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry. Also, H.R. 806.

Interstate transportation

H.R. 280 (Mr. POWELL): A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act so as to prohibit the segregation of passengers on account of race or color.

Lynching and mob violence

H.R. 278 (Mr. POWELL): A bill for the better assurance of the protection of persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching, and for other purposes.

Segregation in Government cafeterias

House Resolution 143 (Mr. POWELL): Directing the Committee on Education and Labor to conduct an investigation with respect to (1) the exclusion of Negroes as patrons of the public portions of the restaurants and cafeterias in the U.S. Government buildings in the District of Columbia, and (2) the exclusion of Negro employees as patrons of the restaurants and cafeterias in the U.S. Government buildings in the District of Columbia.

80TH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

District of Columbia

H.R. 6227 (Mr. POWELL): To provide for home rule and reorganization in the District of Columbia.

H.R. 4951 (Mr. POWELL): To assure to all persons within the District of Columbia full and equal privileges of places of public education, accommodation, resort, entertainment, and amusement, and for other purposes.

H.R. 627 (Mr. POWELL): An amendment to this bill offered by Mr. POWELL to provide a new section in the District of Columbia Charter Act entitled "Functions Relating to Civil Rights."

Armed Forces

H.R. 4952 (Mr. POWELL): To prohibit race segregation in the Armed Forces of the United States.

Poll tax

H.R. 5261 (Mr. POWELL): Making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

Civil rights

In a general statement about failure of the 80th Congress to act:

"Now we have come to the period of the Great Crisis. Two billion, who can either be our enemies or our friends, look askance at the kind of democracy we practice in America and are saying 'If that's what you want to force on us, no thanks.' Sure, we have the atom bomb but it cannot kill two billion people. Or maybe some of our leaders would like to try. Away with the Marshall plan, Truman doctrine, Mason and Dixon's line, the North, the South, black and white, and let the American plan have a chance. Let us practice at home what we preach abroad." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, March 24, 1948, p. A1871.)

Armed Forces segregation and Negro patriotism

H.R. 4952 (Mr. POWELL): To prohibit racial segregation in the Armed Forces of the United States.

"I make no excuse, when I present this amendment, for the patriotism of my people, the Negro people. Back in the beginning of this Republic, the first blood that was shed that America might be free was shed on March 5, 1773, on Boston Common by a black man, Crispus Attucks. From the days of then until the days of now Negro people have been the most loyal minority in this democracy. The Negro people will stand ready at all times to defend this Nation, but they are saying, 'We want some of the democracy here now at home that you are trying to sell abroad to other people that you ask us to go ahead and fight for. We have proven our loyalty. We are asking for democracy now'" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, March 15, 1948, p. 4543).

81ST CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

Federally financed housing

Statement in support of a civil rights amendment to the Housing Act of 1949:

"Let me speak to you very frankly as a Negro and let me tell you great northern liberals that regardless of what Uncle Tom Negroes may inform you, the Negro people would rather continue living in the slums fighting for their God-given civil rights than to have public housing and be Jim Crowed, segregated and discriminated against.

"How long will you continue to say every time a civil rights amendment is brought up, 'It will kill the bill?' How can you be so consistently dishonest by promising people civil rights at campaign time and then repeatedly defeating civil rights on this floor?" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 24, 1949, p. 12186).

Armed Forces

H.R. 23 (Mr. POWELL): To prohibit race segregation in the Armed Forces of the United States.

District of Columbia

House Joint Resoluiton 43 (Mr. POWELL): Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President to the people within the District of Columbia.

H.R. 24 (Mr. POWELL): To assure to all persons within the District of Columbia full and equal privileges of places of public education, accommodation, resort, entertainment, and amusement.

Fair employment

H.R. 21 (Mr. POWELL): To prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry.

H.R. 4453 (Mr. POWELL): Same purpose.

Interstate transportation

H.R. 22 (Mr. POWELL): To amend the Interstate Commerce Act so as to prohibit the segregation of passengers on account of race or color.

Lynching and mob violence

H.R. 115 (Mr. POWELL): For the better asssurance of the protection of citizens of the United States and other persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching.

Poll tax

H.R. 117 (Mr. POWELL): Making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

Labor relations

Statement about pending congressional action on a Labor Relations Act:

"The Taft-Hartley law was the No. 1 election issue. There were 106 Members of the House who were here in the 80th Congress who are not here now. They voted for the Taft-Hartley law. If there is not an indication of the thinking of the American people, I do not know what is. A majority of the American people sent most of us to this Congress to repudiate and wipe out the Taft-Hartley law and to give them back the kind of a law which functioned in America under the name of the Wagner Act. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. Where are the 106 former Members who are not here now? They voted for the Taft-Hartley law and the electorate purged them on November 2." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Apr. 27, 1949, p. 5165.)

81ST CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

Armed Forces

Statement in support of an antidiscrimination amendment to the Selective Service Act of 1948:

"Six years ago when I first came to this body I was the first to introduce legislation to abolish discrimination and segregation in the Armed Forces. At that time discrimination and segregation were rampant and rife in all branches of our military service. I have consistently kept up the fight. When this particular bill came before us in 1948 I led the movement that kept the House in session over 1 week. During the past 6 years we have seen considerable progress and today in our armed services, in the Coast Guard—which, of course, is really not a part of the Armed Forces but in time of war is a part of the Navy—and in the Navy, and to a certain extent in the Air Corps, there is but little discrimination and little segregation. In our Army, however, the President of our Nation and the committee which he appointed, * * * have come up against some stubborn opposition. The time has come now for the Congress to act.

"We are here to do that which education has not done. We are here to implement education. We are here to speed up the timetable of progress. * * * I believe the time has arrived for us to implement the educational processes which have been going along so well, because there is nothing further which can be done in the field of education. The President has spoken. The Fahy Committee report has been written and now it is up to the Congress to act.

"When we had the battle of the Belgian Bulge, Negro men who had been restricted to certain menial capacities were called up out of transportation and out of porter's work and given guns. Black and white stood together and fought for democracy. When victory came the Negroes were left in Europe and the whites paraded on Fifth Avenue. Is that democracy? Now, in peacetime, I ask that we here will do that which at least we owe to the citizens of this Nation, to our conscience and to the world, given men the right to serve side by side with their fellow citizens in all branches of our services" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 24, 1950, p. 7678).

Fair employment practices

Statement in opposition to an amendment to remove the penalty provision of the proposed FEPC legislation introduced by Mr. POWELL (H.R. 4453).

"If this amendment succeeds, then we will have nothing but a statement of policy.

"Those who are against any kind of FEPC will support the * * * amendment, then it is obvious that it is nothing but a subterfuge to kill FEPC. I can assure you that the people of this Nation who are in favor of FEPC are not in favor of the * * * substitute about which they know nothing. They are in favor of H.R. 4453 which has been before them for 6 years, since the 79th Congress" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 22, 1950, p. 2221).

Housing—discrimination in housing

Statement in support of a civil rights amendment to the Housing Act of 1950:

"It is time we took the bit in our teeth and took a positive stand on this issue. When this amendment to bar discrimination in housing came up before, it was defeated by the sponsors of housing on the ground that it would defeat final passage and that such amendments must be ruled out and brought only as civil rights bills. Since then we have voted on a civil rights bill. We know what happened, the FEPC bill was completely emasculated. We can no longer compromise. Now we must take a stand even if we run the risk of defeating final passage. There can be no compromise with wrong" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Mar. 22, 1950, p. 3877).

District of Columbia

Statement in support of an antidiscrimination amendment to the District of Columbia Appropriations Act:

"This is an amendment that I have offered for 6 years. The amendment which, if adopted will clean up our Capital.

"This amendment has been defeated each year, but I am happy to say the record shows an increasing number of yeas in support of it.

"When we consider the Capital of our Nation, and more than that, the Capital of world democracy, we should submerge these local and sectional differences and try to legislate in Washington, D.C., a capital whose atmosphere would be in keeping with the sentiments expressed yesterday on 'I Am an American Day,' a capital in keeping with the principles of government that we are trying to sell to the peoples of the world through the Marshall plan, a capital that would not be a world disgrace. All the money that we voted for today when we adopted the conference report on the Marshall plan was simply money poured down the drain, unless we prove to the peoples of the world that here in Washington, D.C., we are willing to practice what we preach. It is bad enough to practice native fascism sectionally but inexcusable to practice it right here in the Capital. The Marshall plan is nothing but lipservice to democracy unless we back it up with the practice of real democracy.

"Democracy that is dual—one way for dark and one way for white—is worse than no democracy at all, for it is a farce" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD May 23, 1950, p. 7543).

82D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

Armed Forces

"During the 6 years that I have been in the House I have always offered an antisegregation amendment to every bill that has come before us pertaining to the Armed Forces. I rise today to state that I will not do this during the period now—the period when we are at war. The thing that is important to us now is victory, victory at all costs, except the cost of losing our civil liberties.

"During the 6 years that I have fought for the abolition of segregation in the Armed Forces, step by step we have seen great improvement; and I am happy to state today that men of my racial group are serving with great distinction and courage in the Korean conflict. Before the Korean conflict Paul Robeson said that Negro people would not take up arms against Soviet Russia. The very next morning I stood in the well of this House and said the Paul Robeson not stating the truth concerning the peoples of my group, that when the call to arms came, we would answer the same as anyone else, as they always have done. Time has proven that I was correct. * * * Segregation is vanishing in the Armed Forces.

"Before June 25, the Korean conflict, my aim was the abolition of segregation in the Armed Forces, and my record for 6 years substantiates that, but now we are at war and we must win. We must not give aid and comfort to our enemies, and on the other hand we must not lose any vestige of democracy that we have already won. In fact, we must go forward.

"Personally, during this session of Congress, I intend to press for all civil rights bills and intend to fight, by the way of amendments, for increased democracy on the home front. I intend to support during this war every single piece of legislation aimed at victory for our way of life. For the duration only, I will not offer any antisegregation bills as amendments to bills pertaining to the Military Establishment as long as progress continues and there are no violations of the order abolishing segregation.

"However, if there are any flagrant abuses, if there are any cases where segregation and discrimination do come to the forefront, then I will fight the slightest injustice, and if this injustice continues as a pattern, then I will be forced to come back to this floor and again raise the issue" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 14, 1951, p. 649).

83D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

Armed Forces

H.R. 562 (Mr. POWELL): To prohibit race segregation in the Armed Forces of the United States.

"Mr. Chairman, 9 years ago when I came to this House I introduced an amendment to abolish segregation in the Armed Forces and each time this bill or any bill concerning the Defense Department came up I did likewise. When the Korean conflict began I made a speech saying I would not introduce such an amendment during this conflict. I have introduced each year my bill which this year is H.R. 562, to prohibit race segregation in the Armed Forces of the United States.

"One-half of the Negroes now serving in the U.S. Navy are serving as messmen, nothing more than manservants to the admiral clique. It is in absolute defiance of the President's orders. I am bringing this particularly to the attention of President Eisenhower. Intelligent, ambitious Negroes are boycotting the U.S. Navy because they are not interest in making the world safe for democracy by shining shoes, nor are they interested in fighting communism with frying pans. The last vestige of aristocracy in America is the gold braid of the U.S. Navy. Generals of the Army no longer have manservants. This is a modernized, 20th-century form of slavery.

"In the second place, integration is not proceeding in the Pentagon, among the civilian personnel. * * *

"One last criticism: The military does not provide any Reserve Officers' Training Corps for Negroes in three States of the Union—Georgia, Mississippi, and Arkansas. Yet from these States scores of thousands of Negroes are drafted, but none of them with any chance of being commissioned as officers. The result is that there is a shortage today or qualified Negroes for commissioned Army assignments. The military must, therefore, provide immediately ROTC training in these three States.

"Finally, I want to point out that we have segregation on the run. A new bill is coming out of my committee—the Committee on Education and Labor—next week, which will give the President of the United States complete power to integrate schools on Army posts. This bill will give this power by virtue of leaving the problem up to the base commander of each Army base."—(CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 2, 1953, p. 7971).

Civil rights

H.R. 2295 (Mr. POWELL): To provide means of further securing and protecting the civil rights of persons within the jurisdiction of the United States.

District of Columbia

House Joint Resolution 71 (Mr. POWELL): Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President to the people of the District of Columbia.

H.R. 169 (Mr. POWELL): To assure to all persons within the District of Columbia full and equal privileges of places of public education, accommodation, resort, entertainment, and amusement, and for other purposes.

H.R. 170 (Mr. POWELL): To prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry.

"Mr. Speaker, I am placing on the clerk's desk today discharge petitions for two of my bills, H.R. 169 and H.R. 170. * * *

"The great gap between our professions and our practices must be closed. This is the one great contributing factor to the increasing lack of respect by the American citizenry for the U.S. Congress, and of world citizenry for the U.S. leadership.

"As we plunge deeper into the second half of the 20th century, we find that not a single civil-rights bill has passed the U.S. Congress under the leadership of the Republican or of the Democratic Party, except the provision which I was successful in inserting in the Federal school-lunch program. The hour has arrived to remedy this situation for the good of our country as a whole.

"Our Nation is the least liked nation in the world today, in Anglo-Saxon Europe and amongst the 2 billion peoples of the colored races of the rest of the world. We are least liked—despite the billions that we have squandered under various aspects of the Marshall plan—for many reasons, but the major reason that I have found, as a result of many months of travel throughout the world, is that the world knows we are trying to get them to follow a kind of democracy that we are not practicing at home. * * *

"No single thing will assure the peoples of the earth that we are resuming the greatness that once was ours, in terms of the spirit and in terms of ethical values, than to let them know that Washington, D.C., is one place in America where any human being can have the right to live as a free citizen—let them know that America is a place where each and every citizen, regardless of his color, creed, national origin or ancestry, can have the right to exercise the talents God has given him and the training that he has accomplished.

"We cannot continue to endure as a nation with loud professions and little deeds. We cannot continue as a first-class power as long as we have second-class citizens. Our foreign policy is valueless unless our domestic policy undergirds it.

"The great crusade of right against wrong demands that we do even that which individually we do not agree with, but which corporately we are certain is for the best of our land, and our world" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 23, 1953, pp. 7114–7115).

LYNCHING AND MOB VIOLENCE

H.R. 561 (Mr. POWELL): For the better assurance of the protection of citizens of the United States and other persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching, and for other purposes.

POLL TAX

H.R. 560 (Mr. POWELL): Making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION

H.R. 563 (Mr. POWELL): To amend the Interstate Commerce Act (U.S.C., title 49, sec. 3(1)), so as to prohibit the segregation of passengers on account of race or color.

SCHOOL ASSISTANCE UNDER THE IMPACTED AREAS PROGRAMS PUBLIC LAW 815 AND PUBLIC LAW 874

"I am against subsidizing with Federal funds, any form of segregation. I want to point out that under Public Law 874 the sons and daughters of Negro men serving in our Armed Forces are not allowed to go to schools which Federal funds built; that only the sons and daughters of white soldiers and white officers are allowed to go.

"Under Public Law 874, there has been a tremendous waste of the taxpayers' money to support separate schools on the basis of race.

"I have a number of complaints in my office from families of servicemen who are forced to send their children to separate schools outside the military posts. * * * They are serving their country in the armed services, and, as a penalty for such service, they are forced to send their children, who have never previously been exposed to segregation, to schools for colored in the communities surrounding the posts. At all of these forts, there are perfectly good schools on the posts, but they are for the white children only. * * *

"It is bad enough when segregation in schools comes about because of local boards of education, but it is infinitely worse when it is supported by action of the Congress of the United States. * * *

"The fundamental question facing Members of this body is simply this: Shall we continue to use tax money collected from the entire country to support a wasteful system of segregation in schools such as those located in Arlington County and nearby Maryland? * * *

"I believe that we should do everything possible to help out the local communities of this country so that the services provided for U.S. citizens will be uniformly high in all parts of the country, but I strongly oppose spending New York, Illinois, or New Jersey tax money to support segregated schools in Virginia, Maryland, and South Carolina, or anywhere else.

"I am against squandering Federal millions to maintain prejudice and to subsidize segregation" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 18, 1953, p. 1212).

National Housing Act

Statement in support of nonrestriction by race, creed, color, or national origin.

"Communism wins only when democracy fails, and communism can win by default regardless of whether we are a great colossus with one foot in Oak Ridge and the other in Fort Knox. The idea is fallacious that communism can be destroyed by gold and by atomic bombs; it can only be destroyed by the greater idea of democracy. Democracy is the finest idea man has ever dreamed of, and it is being defeated by the worst idea man ever concocted. Democracy is being defeated by communism globally today because of our failure to put it into practice.

" 'Piecemeal legislation,' you call it. All legislation is piecemeal. 'Education,' you say, will solve the problem. How long? The world tempo has been so increased that there is no longer time for education to solve our problems. We do not know what holocaust will be visited upon us within the next 30 days or the next year. We have made tremendous technical progress in America, but in terms of moral and ethical progress there is a distinct law. Education cannot make up this lag; it is up to us, the elected Members of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, by legislation at every opportunity we have for the good of our Nation and our world that we hold up as a shining symbol of ethical and moral progress; that we let the 2 billion colored peoples of the earth know that we are not trying to sell a kind of democracy to the rest of the world that we are refusing to practice here.

"Let us have a bipartisan foreign policy backed up by a bipartisan democracy policy. You cannot have a successful bipartisan foreign policy with a bipartisan domestic Jim Crow policy" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 25, 1953, p. 1429).

83D CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

Interstate transportation

H.R. 7324 (Mr. POWELL): Providing relief against certain forms of discrimination in interstate transportation.

White House Conference on Education

Statement on the value of the proposed conference and acknowledging the Supreme Court decision of 1954 outlawing segregation in public school education.

"This bill is long overdue. After many trips to various portions of the earth on committee business, I have come back to the Committee on Education and Labor and repeatedly asked that we have some type of modus operandi to arrive at a Federal concept of education, an American concept of education and the proper relationships between State educational bodies and our Federal Government.

"We have floundered through these years without any clearly defined American philosophy of education. That is why we have the conflicts, the tensions, and the irritations that constantly crop up in our land.

"This White House Conference may easily be the first step toward bringing about a harmonious working together of the 48 States, retaining their individual philosophies of education, but working together on a Federal basis. This is the most serious problem facing our Nation. It demands our best. This bill has become much more important over the weekend because of the decision of our Supreme Court. Despite the fact that there are many Members of this body whom I personally respect, you cannot call the decision of the Supreme Court unconstitutional.

"We have it. It is a fact. We must go on from here now and see what can be done to make this great shining hour of democracy a more brilliant, a more luminous hour for all our people. We should not here in this body, especially, take this shining hour of democracy and allow it to be tarnished by the oratory of a few who are still living in the 19th century * * *.

"So let us go on from here today to greater heights. Let this great body, of which I am proud to be a Member, lift up the arms of our Government, whether it be the judicial, the executive, or the legislative arm" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 19, 1954, p. 6859).

84TH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

Employment

H.R. 690 (Mr. POWELL): To prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry.

Interstate transportation

H.R. 691 (Mr. POWELL): Providing relief against certain forms of discrimination in interstate transportation.

Antisegregation Day

H.R. 3016 (Mr. POWELL): Making May 17 in each year a legal holiday to be known as Antisegregation Day.

Civil rights

H.R. 389 (Mr. POWELL): To provide means of further securing and protecting the civil rights of persons within the jurisdiction of the United States.

"Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Congress is a 19th century body in a 20th century world. In the field of civil rights we are still conducting ourselves along the pattern of yesterday's world. Tremendous changes are taking place in our country eradicating the concept of second-class citizenship. Yet the U.S. Congress has done absolutely nothing in this sphere. We are behind the times. We are a legislative anachronism. In an age of atomic energy, our dynamic is no more powerful than a watermill.

"For 10 years, my colleagues and I have introduced civil rights amendment after amendment, civil rights bill after bill, pleading, praying that you good ladies and gentlemen would give to this body the glory of dynamic leadership that it should have. But you failed and history has recorded it.

"I am proud to be a Member of the Congress of the United States. I am proud to be a Member of the legislative branch of the U.S. Government and I know you are too. But I beseech you to transform this emotion of pride into the deed of leadership. This is an hour for boldness. This is an hour when a world waits breathlessly, expectantly, almost hungrily, for this Congress, the 84th Congress, through legislation to give some semblance of democracy in action. Our President and our Supreme Court cannot be all this by themselves and, furthermore, we should not expect it. We are derelict in our duty if we continue to plow looking backward. No man is fit for this new world, for this new kingdom of God on earth, who plows looking forward.

"I would like to serve notice that some of us intend after a reasonable time of waiting for our committees and our committee chairmen to act to use every parliamentary device we can to bring before this Congress civil rights bills of worth and value." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 2, 1955, p. 1084–1085).

District of Columbia

House Joint Resolution 22 (Mr. POWELL): Proposing an amendment to the Constitution empowering Congress to provide by legislation for representation in the Congress of, and for granting the right to vote for Presidential and Vice Presidential electors to, the people of the District of Columbia.

H.R. 3457 (Mr. POWELL): To eliminate certain practices involving racial or religious discrimination in the District of Columbia.

Poll tax

H.R. 1600 (Mr. POWELL): Making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

Scholarship assistance to capable students

H.R. 2179 (Mr. POWELL): To increase the supply of scientific and technical manpower in the United States by providing a system of scholarships for college and graduate level study of scientific subjects, to be administered by the Commissioner of Education.

H.R. 6176 (Mr. POWELL): To increase the supply of scientific and technical manpower in the United States by providing a system of scholarships for college and graduate level study of scientific subjects to be administered by the Commissioner of Education.

84TH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

Federal assistance for school construction

H.R. 7535 (Mr. POWELL): An amendment that "school facilities of the States are open to all children without regard to race, in conformity with the requirements of the U.S. Supreme Court decisions: except that if a State plan does not so provide, it shall not prevent payment of funds authorized under this act to such State for use in counties or other political subdivisions within the States that are operating their schools in conformity with the said Supreme Court decisions."

"The May 17, 1954, decision of the U.S. Supreme Court declared that segregation in public education was unconstitutional. This was followed by the May 31 order that all provisions of Federal, State, or local law requiring or permitting segregation in public education must yield to the principle announced in the 1954 decision. In spite of this clear pronouncement by the Court, the Federal agencies still refuse to withhold funds which certain defiant States are using to extend segregation in the public schools * * *

"In other words, the Supreme Court drew up a great guidepost with a sign pointing 'This way to democracy through integration.' Failure of the Congress to include my amendment will place this body in the position of ignoring the clear requirements of the U.S. Constitution * * *

"One of the most ridiculous arguments made by many of my colleagues is that my amendments will hurt the Negro people. When I ask how do they know, they tell me, 'Well, we know the Negro.' This is as stupid as for me to stand up before an audience of Irishmen on St. Patrick's Day and tell them that I know the Irish, or to tell a group of Italians of the Order of Columbus that I know Italians. These men who say they know the Negro do not even know the white man. During the very week that the State of Virginia by a vote of 2 to 1 thrust education back into the Dark Ages and voted to scrap public education, the school board of Arlington, Va., voted that they would integrate.

"Negro people have waited many, many years for this hour of democracy to come and they are willing to wait a few more years rather than see a bill passed which will appropriate Federal funds to build a dual system of Jim Crow schools in defiance of the law" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 24, 1956, p. 1191, 119293).

"We have before us a series of amendments that by no stretch of the imagination can be called extremism, or punitive, but amendments that are aimed at helping the States and school districts to integrate.

"I am sure that we all agree that whenever there is a constitutional Executive order, judicial decision, or legislative action, immediately it is encumbent upon all the other branches of the Government to yield to whatever that decision, order, or law may be. We implemented the Supreme Court decision for 57 years in Plessy against Ferguson, which was the doctrine of separate but equal. We in this House and in the other body passed amendments to the draft bill, the Hill-Burton Act, the Federal school lunch program, implementing the Supreme Court decisions. Now we come to a new decision, a decision of integration, and this is the first test whether we are going to abide by the Supreme Court decision as a legislative body.

"Any vote against the Powell amendment is a vote in favor of segregation. * * *

"Now, I would just like to close with this one thought. In the last line of Elizabeth Browning's "Sonnets From the Portuguese," there is this magnificent thought: 'God's realities always exceed man's fondest dreams'. We have before us the American dream. It is a dream of one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all, and I believe that you should vote according to that American dream" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 3, 1956. p. 11757).

Civil rights

"Today marks the first anniversary of the African-Asian Conference held in Bandung, Indonesia. I was privileged to be present. I rise today to commemorate that occasion by addressing myself to the problem of how we can win the uncommitted nations.

"The Asian-African Conference was a great parliament of the world's religions. The concept of brotherhood was stressed repeatedly. One speaker said: 'If our religion, whatever it may be, does not allow us to get along with our brothers, regardless of what his religion may be, then our religion cannot be of much value.'

"We are a privileged people, privileged to live at one of the great crossroads that every now and then the force of history thrusts upon an unwilling world. Which way we should take depends entirely upon the individual choices made by American people up and down the main streets of our villages and hamlets and in our towns and cities. Capitol Hill cannot do it for us. The Supreme Court cannot be our personal witness. Individual, personal, moral witness must be made. The faith of our forefathers is not enough but the ferment of our forefathers is a deadly necessity." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 18, 1956, p. 6594, 6595).

"The world is moving with a startling rapidity that transcends not only the visual but even the imaginative. With our Yankee courage, our Madison Avenue know-how, our Christian heritage and the bulwark of the Bill of Rights, in back of us, using our 25 million colored citizens as a spearhead, we can launch a drive for peace and for full equality now in the Far East. Only through such a bold maneuver can we win. History will pass us by if we do not" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Apr. 19, 1956, p. 6598).

Civil rights

H.R. 887 (Mr. POWELL): To provide means of further securing and protecting the civil rights of persons within the jurisdiction of the United States.

"Strip the opposition to this bill of all hypocrisy, dishonesty, and subterfuges and only one reason stands out why anyone is opposed to this bill and that is because a minority in this country has made up its mind that under no circumstances is it going to allow colored citizens the right to vote—even in a Federal election. Clothing their arguments in sheep's garments of high-sounding phrases, nevertheless, the heart of their approach is one of hypocrisy and dishonesty. The tragedy is that so many Members of this body, from both sides of the aisle and from areas outside of the southern section, are susceptible to the arguments being presented" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 14, 1957, pp. 9192–9193).

School construction

H.R. 1213 (Mr. POWELL): To authorize Federal assistance to the States and local communities in financing an expanded program of school construction so as to eliminate the national shortage of classrooms.

Scholarship assistance to capable students

H.R. 5030 (Mr. POWELL): To increase the supply of scientific and technical manpower in the United States by providing a system of scholarships for college and graduate level study of scientific subjects, to be administered by the Commissioner of Education.

Supreme Court decision on public school segregation

Statement in observance of the third anniversary of the decision.

"On this third anniversary we are aware, of course, that the Supreme Court's words have yet to bear tangible fruit in some parts of our Nation. We are aware of bitterness and violence and of unconcealed defiance of the supreme law of the land. We cannot, and must not, ignore these manifestations of resistance, for the denial of his rights to even one of our citizens must be of concern to all. But neither, Mr. Speaker, should we be plunged into despair. Whatever the roadblocks, there can be no question in which direction we are moving. We are moving ahead.

"May 17, 1954, was truly a landmark in the history of human freedom. Let us salute this anniversary with pride and with renewed determination that its promise will surely be realized in our own land and throughout the world," (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 16, 1957, p. 7117).

National Defense Education Act

Antidiscrimination amendments to title proposals considered under the act: title II for scholarships, title III on loans to students and title VI on fellowships for graduate education.

"I feel that the philosophy underlying this excellent piece of legislation is that we are out to aid the individual. The school construction bill we had under consideration before was to aid the States. Therefore I have designed amendments to apply at the precise moment that an individual comes forward to seek a scholarship, to ask for a loan, or to look for a graduate fellowship. At that moment the individual comes forward, then there shall not be any discrimination based upon race or color. That would include about 25 million of our American citizens, Mexican-Americans, Japanese-Americans, American Indians, Puerto Ricans, and Negroes.

"There would not be any discrimination based upon religion, which would include mainly our Roman Catholic brethren and Jewish brethren.

"There would not be any discrimination based upon national origin, which would include those born abroad. Two of the outstanding contributors to our nuclear physics program today are in this category. One is of Italian birth and the other of German birth.

"Lastly, there would be no discrimination based upon sex," (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, August 8, 1958, p. 16723).

Blind individuals

H.R. 9702 (Mr. POWELL): To protect the right of the blind to self-expression through organizations of the blind.

Civil Rights

H.R. 12536 (Mr. POWELL): To secure, protect, and strengthen the civil rights accruing to individuals under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

H.R. 10296 (Mr. POWELL): To amend part III of the Civil Rights Act of 1957.

Fair employment

H.R. 9704 (Mr. POWELL): To prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry.

Housing

H.R. 12538 (Mr. POWELL): To provide that Federal funds shall not be used for loans, grants, or other financial assistance to provide housing with respect to which there is any discrimination against occupancy on account of race, religion, color, ancestry, or national origin.

Interstate transportation

H.R. 12535 (Mr. POWELL): Providing relief against certain forms of discrimination in interstate transportation and facilities furnished or connected therewith.

Lynching and mob violence

H.R. 9701 (Mr. POWELL): For the better assurance of the protection of citizens of the United States and other persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching, and for other purposes.

Poll tax

H.R. 9707 (Mr. POWELL): Making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

National Guard

H.R. 9705 (Mr. POWELL): To eliminate discrimination and segregation in the National Guard and Air National Guard, and to prohibit the use of the National Guard and the Air National Guard to aid or abet the violation of Federal law.

86TH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

Economic and social development in less developed countries

H.R. 6693 (Mr. POWELL): To promote the foreign policy of the United States and help to build essential world conditions of peace by the more effective use of U.S. agricultural commodities for the relief of human hunger, and for promoting economic and social development in less developed countries through the United Nations or its appropriate agencies.

Armed Forces

H.R. 5277.

"This continuous peacetime draft is a new thing in our country and one that requires a hard look at the conditions which surround our Armed Forces.

"The armed personnel in the 13 Southern States amounted to more than 43 percent of the total. Yet we know that areas outside those 13 States subject Negroes to discrimination. Also we know that colored people other than Negroes are discriminated against in some parts of this country. So I would estimate conservatively that 50 percent of the armed personnel of our Government in this country is being trained in a discriminatory environment.

"I say that the Federal Government has no right to subject citizens to such discrimination. * * *

"I hold it to be an essential duty of this Government to prevent discrimination against members of the Armed Forces. Of course, this House knows that I do not favor discrimination anywhere, but at the very least we should protect our soldiers and sailors against it. * * *

"The ignoble practice of segregation has no legitimate place in a democracy. If it still persists in some area of this country, at least those who have been raised in the freer areas should not be subjected to it by the Federal Government.

"One-half of our armed personnel is now being unfairly punished by the Federal Government because of the conditions of segregation which they must endure as a part of their military service.

"This is unfair, unpatriotic, and unwise. I call upon my colleagues from all parts of the country to support H.R. 5277 so that we may put an end to such an abuse of our young citizens.

"If they are trained in a free environment they will know better the importance of defending freedom" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Mar. 24, 1959, p. 5111–2).

The blind

H.R. 1878 (Mr. POWELL): To protect the right of the blind to self-expression through organizations of the blind.

Civil rights

H.R. 619 (Mr. POWELL): To secure, protect, and strengthen the civil rights accruing to individuals under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

H.R. 618 (Mr. POWELL).

"The Committee on Education and Labor yesterday tentatively approved a bill-of-rights amendment to the new labor-management bill. It is unconscionable to think that any bill of rights can exist without there being included a guarantee of civil rights. There are 2,500,000 white workers in an undemocratic ghetto from which are excluded all Negroes, Puerto Ricans, Jews, and, in some instances, Catholics. Anyone who votes for a labor-management bill that includes a bill of rights without any rights of admission guaranteed for all Americans is flirting with the label of hypocrisy. Therefore, I am offering such an amendment to remedy this anti-American situation." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 7, 1959, p. 13594).

Equal protection of the laws

H.R. 913 (Mr. POWELL): To effectuate and enforce the constitutional right to the equal protection of the laws, and for other purposes.

H.R. 617 (Mr. POWELL): To assure to all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States full and equal privileges with respect to public conveyances and places of public accommodation, resort, entertainment, amusement, assemblage, and institutions.

National Guard

H.R. 910 (Mr. POWELL): To eliminate discrimination and segregation in the National Guard and Air National Guard, and to prohibit the use of the National Guard and the Air National Guard to aid or abet the violation of Federal law

Fair employment

H.R. 908 (Mr. POWELL): To prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry.

Voter Registration Commission

H.R. 7957 (Mr. POWELL): To provide for the establishment of a Federal Voter Registration Commission to provide, in certain instances, for the registration of citizens of the United States for the purpose of voting in Federal and State elections, and for other purposes.

Housing

H.R. 1053.

"Today the Civil Rights Commission started hearings in New York City, and the good people of Virginia have started desegregation. This, therefore, should be a day for sober reflection. Are we not witnessing increasing heroic honesty in the South and increasing cowardly hypocrisy in the North?

"May I say that the Powell type of amendment is just as applicable to the denial of Federal funds in New York City because of segregation there as it is in any other area in defiance of the Supreme Court. Also, I concur with the president of Notre Dame, Father Hesburgh, a member of the Civil Rights Commission, that in the North some areas practice discrimination in housing more than many areas in the South. Legislation to remedy this has been introduced by me and the number of the bill is H.R. 1053. It will prohibit discrimination prior to construction and during the lifetime of publicly financed housing by putting guarantees in the application for FHA insured mortgages" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 2, 1959, p. 1592).

Lynching and mob violence

H.R. 914 (Mr. POWELL): For the better assurance of the protection of citizens of the United States and other persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching, and for other purposes.

Poll tax

H.R. 912 (Mr. POWELL): Making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

Public schools and desegregation

H.R. 7958: (Mr. POWELL): Authorizing appropriations for the operation of public schools in the several States which would otherwise be closed by State action intended to prevent compliance with certain orders of courts of the United States.

School construction

H.R. 909 (Mr. POWELL): To authorize Federal assistance to the States and local communities in financing an expanded program of school construction so as to eliminate the national shortage of classrooms.

86TH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

School construction

Amendment providing an antidiscrimination clause in the proposed school construction bill H.R. 10128:

"The school facilities constructed with the assistance of payment received under this act shall be available to students without regard to race, creed, color, national origin, or religion, in accordance with the Supreme Court."

"There are those who say this amendment will kill the bill.

"Who is going to vote against the bill if the Powell amendment is in there? Those who are opposed to Federal aid to education will. If they are in the majority we are going to defeat the bill anyway. Many sountherners have told me they do not want the bill in any form.

"In the next place there are those who say my amendment is hurting the educational future of little Negro children. I would like to say that on every visit I have made to the South, and I have made many in recent months, every group I have talked to, every group of students, for instance, I talked to, has unanimously without dissent been in favor of this amendment. Every single church organization, including the National Baptist Churches, the Council of Bishops and the African Methodist Church are in favor of this amendment. The delegations to the NAACP national convention coming from the Southern States voted unanimously last year without any dissent in favor of this amendment.

"Therefore * * * the only recourse we have to impose these conditions or to guarantee that the Supreme Court decision is followed is by adopting this amendment. A vote against this amendment is a vote against the Supreme Court. A vote against this amendment is a vote against civil rights.

"I ask in conclusion that we adopt this amendment and get on to the business of having education in compliance with the law of the land which is 6 years old already" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 26, 1960, p. 11296).

Fair employment

87TH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

African Freedom Day

House Resolution 63 (Mr. POWELL): Expresses the sense of the House of Representatives with respect to the struggle of the African peoples for independence and nationhood, and recognizing April 15, 1959, as "African Freedom Day."

Ambassadors and Foreign Ministers

H.R. 6726 (Mr. POWELL): Make it a crime punishable by a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment for 2 years, or both to discriminate against Ambassadors, public ministers and their servants.

Apprenticeship program

H.R. 8219 (Mr. POWELL): Withdraws Federal support and approval from apprenticeship programs which deny individuals an equal opportunity to participate on account of race, color, or creed.

Civil rights

H.R. 1231 (Mr. POWELL): Authorizes the Attorney General to institute proceedings for preventive relief, including an application for an injunction, (1) upon the written complaint or information on oath of any person threatened with loss of the right to equal protection of the laws by reason of race, color, creed, or national origin, who is unable to proceed in his own behalf, against any person or persons acting or conspiring to deprive him of the right to equal protection, and (2) upon the written request of State authorities, against two or more persons conspiring to hinder such State authorities from securing to any person equal protection of the laws.

Gives the district courts jurisdiction over such proceeding, regardless of the non-exhaustion of other remedies, and makes the United States liable for costs the same as a private person. Provides that existing rights or remedies are not impaired [amending 71 Stat. 637].

H.R. 540 (Mr. POWELL): Omnibus Human Rights Act—Makes the Civil Rights Commission permanent. Directs the Attorney General to increase the personnel of the Federal Bureau of Investigation or Justice Department used to investigate civil rights cases.

Establishes a congressional Joint Committee on Civil Rights to make a continuing study of such matters.

Imposes a fine and/or imprisonment for any person to interfere with the exercise or enjoyment of another's civil rights. Increases the penalty to a maximum $10,000 and 20 years' imprisonment if death or maiming is the result of such wrongful conduct.

Enumerates rights, privileges (including right to vote), and due process protected. Penalizes an attempt to entice another into slavery or an attempt to sell another into involuntary servitude.

Prohibits discrimination in interstate transportation and punishes violators hereof.

Federal Equality of Opportunity Employment Act—Declares the right to employment without discrimination because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry to be a civil right. Declares it to be an unlawful employment practice for either an employer, or a labor organization to discriminate against an individual because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry.

Establishes a seven-member Equality of Opportunity in Employment Commission, to investigate, hold hearings, and issue orders for the prevention of unlawful employment practices. Provides that the Commission shall have the power to petition any U.S. court of appeals or district court for the enforcement of any order and grants the court jurisdiction to proceed in a determination of the case.

Federal Antilynching Act—Declares the right to be free from lynching to be a right of all citizens. Imposes a fine and/or imprisonment on any person who is a member of a lynch mob or who instigates or commits a lynching where death, maiming, or other serious physical or mental injury or damage to property results and on governmental officers of employees who neglect their duty in knowingly failing to prevent or punish lynching. Authorizes civil actions for injury or death as a result of a lynching.

Federal Anti-Poll-Tax Act: Makes it unlawful for any person to levy, collect, or require the payment of a poll tax or otherwise interfere with any person's right to vote in any national election.

Death penalty

House Joint Resolution 64 (Mr. POWELL): Constitutional amendment—Proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to abolish the death penalty under the laws of the United States, any State, or any other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Education

H.R. 264 (Mr. POWELL): Authorizes funds for the operation of schools closed as a result of State action to prevent local compliance with desegregation court orders.

Employment

H.R. 262 (Mr. POWELL): Federal Equality of Opportunity in Employment Act—Makes it an unlawful employment practice (1) for an employer to discriminate in employment because of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry, or to obtain assistance in hiring from sources discriminating for such reasons; (2) for an employment agency to fail or refuse to properly classify or refer for employment because of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry, or to force an employer to discriminate against an individual.

Establishes a seven-member Equality of Opportunity in Employment Commission, appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate (1) to prevent any unlawful employment practice; (2) to investigate charges of unlawful employment practices and eliminate same, and (3) to restrain unlawful employment practices and take affirmative action to redress persons aggrieved thereby. Prohibits Commission members filing charges from participating in the hearing or trial. Provides procedure for judicial review and court enforcement of Commission orders.

Empowers the President to effectuate the purposes of this act with regard to Government employment.

Equal protection of the laws

H.R. 547 (Mr. POWELL): Civil Rights Act—Title I. Declares it to be the intention of Congress that no one should be deprived the right to the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Constitution because of race, color, religion, or national origin.

Title II: Authorizes the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, to assist States and local governments in eliminating segregation in public schools. Requires the Secretary to make reports to Congress on the progress made.

Provides that the Secretary shall employ specialists to assist in plans for eliminating segregation in public education. Permits reimbursement to local officials and representatives carrying out authorized functions of the Secretary for travel expenses and subsistence.

Authorizes $2,500,000 per year for 5 years for carrying out the purposes of title II.

Title III: Authorizes grants to State and local governments to assist in meeting the cost of additional educational measures undertaken in an effort to eliminate segregation in public schools.

Title IV: Provides that the Secretary shall prepare tentative plans for the elimination of segregation in public education and forward such plans to the State Governor or appropriate official for concurrence.

Provides that where State and local officials do not agree to the plans submitted hearings are to be held after which the Secretary shall prepare and issue an approved plan for the elimination of segregation.

Title V: Authorizes the Attorney General to institute for or in the name of the United States proceeding for preventive relief against State officials to enforce compliance with the approved plans for integration.

Title VI: Authorizes the Attorney General to institute for or in the name of the United States proceeding for relief against any individual who deprives or threatens to deprive persons of, the right to equal protection of the laws by reason of race, color, religion, or national origin.

Title VII: Provides that the district courts shall have jurisdiction of proceedings instituted hereunder. Provides that nothing in this act shall be construed to impair existing legal rights or remedies already available.

Fair labor standards

H.R. 6887 (Mr. POWELL): Extends protection of Fair Labor Standards Act to employees of large hotels, motels, restaurants and laundries with gross sales of $1 million annually.

Great white fleet

House Congressional Resolution 66 (Mr. POWELL): Expresses the sense of Congress on the use of a Great White Fleet in support of American foreign policy.

Housing

H.R. 544 (Mr. POWELL): Fair Housing Practices Act—provides that Federal funds shall not be used for financial assistance to provide housing with respect to which there is any discrimination on account of race, religion, color, ancestry, or national origin.

Immigration

H.R. 543 (Mr. POWELL): Grants natives of British Guiana, British Honduras, the British Virgin Islands, and the West Indies Federation unlimited access to the immigration quota for Great Britain.

H.R. 549 (Mr. POWELL): Provides that individuals born in British Guiana, British Honduras, the British Virgin Islands, or the West Indies Federation shall be nonquota immigrants under the Immigration and Nationality Act [amending U.S.C. 8:1101 (a) (27) (c)].

Impacted areas assistance and National Defense Education Act

H.R. 9000 (Mr. POWELL): Extends the program of aid for schools in areas affected by Federal activities for 2 years. Extends the National Defense Education Act for 2 years.

"In summary, this package carries a total for education in the United States for the next 2 years of approximately $902,992,000.

"I am extremely sorry that the Powell amendment banning funds to schools in defiance of the Supreme Court decision is not a part of the impacted areas portion of this legislation. Federal money is being spent for totally Federal projects in areas that have become impacted because of Federal work, most of them due to defense installations. It is shocking and totally inexcusable to have the children segregated in these schools. At the proper time next year, I shall press for action. I also believe that this entire phase should be carefully reexamined by my committee during the forthcoming year, because it is in danger of becoming an education pork barrel rather than really reaching the children who need this assistance; namely, school construction, maintenance, and teachers' salaries.

"I regret, too, that the forgiveness clause, as written, is a part of the National Defense Education Act because I, for one, would like to see this forgiveness clause completely changed, so that all people who obtain loans under this act and who teach for 5 years in public or private school shall be forgiven their loan. This would encourage more teachers to go into private and public teaching. The way it is now constituted, it waives 50 percent of the loan for those who go into public school teaching only.

Also, I believe that the disclaimer affidavit should be abolished; and here, the gentleman from California [Mr. HIESTAND] offered in committee an amendment which will take care of this problem without forcing our educators to be placed in an untenable position.

"I promise that during the coming year proper study and consideration will be given to both of these important portions of NDEA" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 6, 1961, pp. 17095–96).

Interstate transportation

H.R. 1229 (Mr. POWELL): Provides that all persons shall be entitled to equal privileges of any public conveyance operated by a common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, without discrimination or segregation based on race, color, religion, or national origin. Subjects any person who denies or attempts to deny to any person such privileges to a fine of $1,000 for each offense. Permits action for damages or other relief in a U.S. district court without regard to the sum or value of the matter in controversy.

Juvenile delinquency

"I am positive there is no one in the United States today who would dispute that juvenile delinquency is perhaps the most tragic evidence of social disorder we can imagine. It is evidence that we have not given our children the stable, sensible, and meaningful society we like to think we have. For the past 15 years we have been following a pace of change accelerated every day by the advance of science and technology. We have found little room in our busy lives for cushioning the impact of change on our young. We have abandoned them to hopelessness, cynicism, and desperation, and each year we reap larger and larger harvests of mental illness, delinquency, and crime.

"It is time, indeed, we stopped applying a bandage here and there according to what part of the body politic breaks out next. It is time, instead, to take the medicine of determination that is all we really need to improve the mental and moral health of our children.

"Juvenile delinquency, of course, has its ramifications in inadequate housing, inadequate job opportunities, lack of education, and discrimination in many areas. So does any social evil impinge one upon the other. The bill before you takes no wishful look at what better housing in a better neighborhood could do, or what an adequate educational system might accomplish. The bill has framed a proposal within the reference of where we are today, not where we might be—if * * * I suggest that when we go further into this matter, we do so with our hearts; that not only our minds be attuned to this end and that we view it with not only the assent of our minds but the consent of our hearts." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 30, 1961, pp. 16459–60).

Lynching and mob violence

H.R. 546 (Mr. POWELL): Federal Anti-Lynching Act.—Defines lynching as the assemblage of two or more persons which shall, without authority of law, (1) commit violence upon the person of any citizen because of race, creed, color, national origin, ancestry, language, or religion, or (2) exercise by physical violence any power of correction over any person in the custody of a peace officer or charged with any criminal offense for the purpose of preventing the trial or punishment not authorized by law. Sets the maximum penalty for lynching at $10,000 fine and/or 20 years imprisonment. A State or local officer failing through neglect to prevent a lynching or to apprehend or prosecute any member of a lynching mob, shall be punished by a $5,000 fine and/or 5 years imprisonment. Any governmental subdivision failing through neglect to prevent a lynching or an abduction followed elsewhere by a lynching shall be liable for $2,000 to $10,000 in damages recoverable in a civil action. The interstate transportation of persons with a view to lynching is made subject to the penalties provided in the Lindbergh kidnapping law (death or life imprisonment).

Manpower resources

H.R. 7396 (Mr. POWELL): Provides for a program of occupational training and retraining of the Nation's labor force. Directs the Department of Labor to make studies and then develop training and skill development, programs utilizing the resources of industry, labor, educational institutions and State and local agencies. Grants weekly retraining allowances equal to unemployment compensation and relocation allowances to persons offered jobs in other areas. Provides for on- and off-the-job training and vocational training for the unemployed.

National Guard

H.R. 263 (Mr. POWELL): Prohibits a State National Guard from receiving Federal benefits if the State practices discrimination and segregation based on race, creed, or color in determining assignments or duties of members.

Prohibits units or members of the National Guard from being used to aid or abet the violation of any Federal law [amending U.S.C. 32: 108].

Narcotics

H.R. 9153 (Mr. POWELL): Authorizes the Surgeon General to make grants-in-aid to States and political subdivisions thereof in order to assist in solving their narcotic drug problems. Provides special grants for post-hospital addict care programs. Directs the Surgeon General to prescribe general standards for a program of posthospital care, treatment, and rehabilitation for narcotic addicts.

Poll tax

H.R. 1230 (Mr. POWELL): Federal anti-poll tax. Makes it unlawful for any State, municipality, or other governmental subdivision to require payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting at a Federal election.

Public conveyance

H.R. 541 (Mr. POWELL): Provides both civil and criminal penalties for any person who discriminated against another person because of his race, color, creed, or national origin with respect to accommodation in, any public conveyance or place of public accommodation.

Servicemen

H.R. 548 (Mr. POWELL): Makes it a crime punishable by a fine of $1,000 and/or 1-year imprisonment to discriminate against members of the Armed Forces because of race, color, or creed [adding U.S.C. 18: 245].

Student aid

H.R. 4930 (Mr. POWELL): Provides for low-interest loans for medical and dental students under the National Defense Education Act. Requires such loans to be evidenced by a rate and to bear interest of 3 percent beginning 1 year after the borrower ceases to pursue a full-time course.

Provides for grants to medical and dental schools of $1,000 per year for each student at the school receiving a loan hereunder.

H.R. 6762 (Mr. POWELL): Authorizes the Commissioner of Education to award 3,000 undergraduate scholarships in American institutions of higher education to certain students from Africa, Asia, and Latin America. Directs the Commissioner to allocate such scholarships on the basis of the higher educational needs of each nation in the aforementioned areas.

"This simple and direct legislative proposal can do much to meet some of the greatest challenges and opportunities for American educational leadership that we have yet faced in our time. This scholarship program for African, Asian, and Latin American students can provide a new beginning—and its effect can become truly massive—in the development of wise leaders and educated citizens among all peoples. * * *

"We must provide now the educational sustenance that is demanded in the name of humanity and of our common cause. The 'revolution of rising expectations' is going on all around us, and we can help make it a constructive transformation for good or we can ignore it—and someone else will help in their own way and for their own ends. What is needed now is education—that 'critical mass' of education that will permit the peoples of the less-developed areas of Africa, Asia, and Latin America to provide their own self-renewing leadership and education for the future. * * *

"In meeting the challenge of education for the young people and adults of Asia, Africa, and Latin America, I am convinced that very helpful insights are to be had from the experience of our own areas of Hawaii and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, as well as from the evolving West Indies Federation. These can enhance our scholarship program for the less-developed and newly emerging nations, on the one hand, as living demonstrations of bootstrap economic development and, on the other, of intercultural communication and understanding and of the development of responsible governmental leadership. * * *

"Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would close with the observation that this Nation which values its freedom so highly that it can give away well over $23 billion in foreign military aid grants in the last decade alone, can surely find it possible to support this modest educational program that, at a cost of about $100 million a year, may be even more for freedom and progress everywhere. And let us all remember that independence is not an end in itself, but only a beginning. The revolution of freedom is always unfinished business" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 2, 1961, p. 6577–6578).

Territories of the United States

Guam—H.R. 5716 (Mr. POWELL): Provides for the election by the people of the territories of Guam and the Virgin Islands of a Deputy to the House of Representatives.

Virgin Islands—H.R. 545 (Mr. POWELL): Provides that the people of the Virgin Islands be represented by a Delegate in the House of Representatives.

Virgin Islands—H.R. 5716.

Welfare and pension plans

H.R. 7234 (Mr. POWELL): Welfare and Pension Plans Disclosure Act Amendments—Amends the Welfare and Pension Plans Disclosure Act with respect to the method of enforcement. Makes bribery, embezzlement or false statements concerning employee benefit plans a Federal crime.

87TH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

Equal pay for women

H.R. 11677 (Mr. POWELL): To prohibit discrimination on account of sex in the payment of wages by certain employers engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce and to provide for the restitution of wages lost by employees by reason of any such discrimination.

Manpower resources and capable students

H.R. 8399 (Mr. POWELL): Relating to the occupational training, development, and use of the manpower resources of the Nation, and for other purposes.

"In setting H.R. 8399 No. 1 on his priority list for domestic legislation, the President pointed out that this country cannot 'countenance the suffering, frustration, and injustice of unemployment, or let the vast potential of the world's leading economy run to waste in idle manpower, silent machinery, and empty plants.' * * *

"Despite recent indications of some recovery from the recession and a decrease in the unemployment rate, there still remains large numbers of workers who have exhausted, even extended, unemployment insurance benefits—those whose skills have become obsolete; the unskilled, especially those without high school education; older workers; minority groups; and the youth. * * *

"The fact that we are in the midst of the cold war only increases the need for the programs this bill will provide. The present struggle requires the maximum use of all our manpower, with no waste of the skills and ability to produce that are now available in the ranks of our long-term unemployed, and which can be fully exploited and utilized when these unemployed are trained for the skills needed today and tomorrow" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 27, 1962, pp. 2734–2735).

Negro history

House Joint Resolution 635 (Mr. POWELL): To authorize the President to proclaim a week in 1963 as National Negro History Week.

Public health service facilities

H.R. 10217 (Mr. POWELL): Repeals the provisions of the Hill-Burton Act which permits Federal assistance for hospitals which discriminate against persons on the basis of race, creed or color [repealing U.S.C. 42:291 e(f)].

Student aid

H.R. 9743 (Mr. POWELL): Authorizes the appropriation of $130 million for fiscal 1963 and $145 million for fiscal 1964 for making student loans under the National Defense Education Act. Repeals the limitation relative to the maximum amount of Federal capital contribution to any institution. Increases the number and amount of loans to medical and dental students and lengthens the period of repayment for such loans. Provides loans for interns.

Territories of the United States

Puerto Rico—House Joint Resolution 626 (Mr. POWELL): Constitutional amendment—proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting representation in the electoral college to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Virgin Islands—H.R. 11709 (Mr. POWELL): Amends the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands concerning the election of senators to the Legislature of the Virgin Islands.

Welfare and pension plans

H.R. 8723. "This Congress must assure the millions of men and women who are the beneficiaries of these plans, and their families, that their money is well handled and their promised benefits properly safeguarded" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 6, 1962, p. 1557).

The Moon Race: Go or Not, the Cost Will Be About the Same

OF

HON. GEORGE P. MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 1963

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I submit an article entitled "The Moon Race" by Howard Simons which appeared in the October 29 issue of the Washington Post.

This is a thought-provoking article which explains that any cut in the lunar program or even a slowdown will not save us money in the long run. In fact, stretching out the program will actually raise the cost of Project Apollo.

The article follows:

THE MOON RACE: GO OR NOT, THE COST WILL BE ABOUT THE SAME

(By Howard Simons)

Whatever official Washington finally decides about the moon race—to go or not to go, or to slow down—the cost will be roughly the same.

It has been estimated that the U.S. moon program will cost $20 billion.

But even before Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev took his nation out of the race—temporarily, at least—American space agency officials were telling Congress this wasn't really so. The point that National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials were making was that the manned lunar landing, itself, will cost between $1 billion and $3 billion.

The rest of the $20 billion is earmarked for big rocket boosters, launching pads, technical and scientific know-how, unmanned exploration, and tracking stations. And, these will be needed whether Americans travel to the moon's surface or not.

Doubt has been expressed in some quarters that NASA will be able to get Americans to the moon in this decade and for $20 billion.

Informed sources yesterday said that in recent weeks NASA officials have reappraised the moon program in the light of rising costs and schedule slippages. Their conclusion: the moon effort will not cost more than $20 billion and the 1970 target date still looks good.

To meet both the fiscal and the calendar goals, however, will require some program changes. These are now being made. Though the informed sources would not comment on the nature of the program adjustments, they did say the changes will be announced soon.

Unless the United States wants to abandon space exploration altogether or leave space superiority to the Russians, there seems little value in abandoning the manned lunar landing.

This is the view of many space experts who hold that the manned lunar landing, in spite of all the attention focused upon it, has been merely a symbol.

But because of this symbol, the United States is now racing to build bigger boosters than the Russians have thus far demonstrated. Unless this development continues, the Russians will continue to dominate space.

Moreover, in the view of these experts, although the pace of the U.S. space program has been set by real political needs, the ultimate objectives have always been there. Thus, there are military and scientific and practical applications of space near the earth. And beyond the moon there are the planets.

In effect, what these experts maintain is that with or without Soviet sputniks, Americans would have wanted to explore the heavens. The only question is whether to do it in a hurry.

Slowing down NASA's effort to get men to the moon within this decade brings as much horror to many space experts as does the suggestion of abandoning this goal outright. This is so because they say that it will cost the American taxpayer more to slow down than to keep on a steady pace.

NASA officials estimate that a slowdown in the sense of chopping a few hundred million from their budget request this year would raise the total cost of Project Apollo $2 billion to $3 billion. Not everyone agrees with the NASA officials.

But few persons argue with the notion that a slowdown or stretchout would cost the moon program some of its best scientific and technical talent, who would quit to seek other jobs.

Commission on International Rules of Judicial Procedure

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN F. SHELLEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 29, 1963

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to offer for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the report of the California State Bar's Committee on International Rules of Judicial Process which appeared in the July–August 1963 edition of the Journal of the State Bar of California.

It is a matter of pride to me that the California bar recognizes the importance to the States of the work being done by the Commission and Advisory Committee on International Rules of Judicial Procedure, established by the act of September 2, 1958.

The Congress now has before it a bill, H.R. 7051, introduced by Chairman CELLER, of the Judiciary Committee, on June 10, 1963, which embodies the amendments in our Federal statutes recommended by the Commission in its Fourth Annual Report, House Document No. 88, 88th Congress, 1st session.

A draft Uniform Interstate and International Procedure Act was presented to the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and has been adopted by the Conference.

That part of the Commission's work which will be of most value to the individual businessman engaging in the international trade which is so vital to our economy, or to the individual citizen who must prove a foreign document, lies ahead.

Identical bills, S. 2131, introduced on September 10, 1963, by Senator HART of the Senate Judiciary Committee, H.R. 8650, introduced on September 30, 1963, by Chairman CELLER of the House Judiciary Committee, and H.R. 8832, introduced on October 15, 1963, by a member of that committee, the gentleman from New York Mr. JOHN V. LINDSAY, would extend the life of this valuable Commission for another 5 years beyond its present expiration date of December 31, 1963.

The article follows:

INTERNATIONAL RULES OF JUDICIAL PROCESS

To the Board of Governors:

The committee has continued this year its study of the problems of judicial assistance and cooperation between the United States and other countries. A meeting was held during the State bar convention in Los Angeles. The subjects of discussion were the proposed amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 4(i) and 28(b) and the proposed Uniform Interstate and International Procedure Act. It was the feeling of the committee that the changes in the Federal rules were highly desirable. The committee's attention was, however, directed to a controversy that existed concerning the provisions of 4(i) in relation to making service in a foreign country by mail. Material on this matter has been obtained and placed before the committee for study.

As to the Uniform Interstate and International Procedure Act, the members of the

YEAR END REPORT FROM SENATOR DODD

From our Nation's Capital, I extend to you a sincere wish for happiness during the Holiday Season and peace and prosperity in the New Year.

JOHN F. KENNEDY - IN MEMORIAM

The Holiday Season, sacred alike to those of the Christian and Jewish faiths, and rich in tradition for all Americans, comes to our nation's capital this year at a time of deepest grief.

John F. Kennedy, our friend and our President, has passed into history. His image need no longer be veiled or shrouded by the mists of partisanship or contention.

He was a man ideally equipped by nature and by training for the leadership of this nation and of the Free World in its crisis of survival.

He was born to wealth. He could have spent his days in idle pleasure and luxury or in the pursuit of some worthy but pleasant endeavor. Instead he chose the most difficult, the most demanding and the most burdensome of all careers--the path which led him to the Presidency of the United States and to that unforgettable November afternoon in Dallas.

There was a marvelous balance and proportion in John Kennedy that was not a product of our age but rather the result of a supreme lifetime effort to develop the qualities necessary to rise to the problems of our age.

He was thoughtful and reflective, yet he was a man of decision and action. He had great confidence and self-assurance, but there was nothing of conceit or arrogance in him. He was serious and solemn, yet he possessed a deep and rich vein of humor, which always flickered just beneath the surface and frequently came into view, lighting up his face and warming all around him.

He was always in the center of action, yet he had the capacity to look at himself objectively and dispassionately as though from a distance.

He demanded excellence of himself and made vast sacrifices to achieve it, yet he had a limitless compassion for the shortcomings of others.

He was a man of strong convictions, one who threw an almost superhuman effort into the struggle to have his convictions prevail; but he was never intolerant of the views of others, never dogmatic, always modest in victory and philosophic in defeat.

He could meet almost any man on his own level. He was scholar and athlete, soldier and writer, hero and intellectual, statesman and politician, a family man and a solitary man. Few American hearts were so narrow or hardened that John Kennedy could not join them on some common ground.

He was a blend of the idealist and the pragmatist - idealistic in the goals he set for American society, but eminently practical in his efforts to achieve those goals.

He had a fierce love of country which manifested itself not in hollow diatribes but in a total commitment of mind, spirit and body to the high purpose of making our nation strong and secure and of making our society conform more closely to our ancient national ideals.

It is a profound tragedy to see this beloved man, this friendly man, this husband, this father, brutally cut down in the flower of his life. It is a deeper tragedy to see a great life, a unique life, destroyed, wantonly and senselessly, in the midst of vast achievements, and on the threshhold of completion of a great design for human betterment to which he had consciously dedicated and disciplined his life.

The depth of our loss can be measured in some small way by the outpouring of emotion which plunged this nation and most of the world into grief. What cannot be measured is the full meaning of this tragedy for our country and for the causes we uphold in the world.

For in John F. Kennedy as President there was a singular joining of the man and the office. He had the intellect to perceive coolly and clearly the problems of the nation; the ingenuity to evolve solutions to those problems; the energy to press those solutions to a conclusion; the outward charm to win the hearts of people everywhere and the inner strength to win the respect of leaders of men.

He had three years of experience in the most powerful and demanding position on earth. He had mastered the job. He had the confidence of the people, the allegiance of our friends, the respect of our foes. On his shoulders rested the hope of free men everywhere.

All this --- laid in the dust by the bullets of a deranged assassin. The deeper tragedy, then, is the loss to our country and to the world. Every man, woman and child is wounded and harmed by this dreadful act.

From all sides and from all places there are reports of monuments being dedicated to the memory of President Kennedy. It is appropriate that this should be so. Let memorials be raised in all corners of this land which he loved so well and which loved him in return.

But I suggest that it is in pushing forward the great national causes to which he devoted his life that we can best pay tribute to our fallen leader.

In the midst of the Civil War, Abraham Lincoln said something that I think expresses a thought in all of our hearts. He was grieving over the loss of his beloved friend and ally Congressman Owen Lovejoy of Illinois. He was asked what he thought of a proposal to raise a statue in memory of his friend. He replied, "Let him have the marble monument, along with the well-assured and more enduring one in the hearts of those who love liberty, unselfishly, for all men."

It is in the hearts of the American people and grieving millions throughout the world that the truest memorial to John F. Kennedy resides.

Today in the White House a new President, Lyndon Johnson, has taken up the manifold burdens of our nation.

He, like his predecessor, is a man of great ability and high purpose who has devoted his entire adult life to the service of his country.

His first utterance as President was a plea for our help and for the help of God. He asks this help, not in any partisan cause but in a national cause, the cause of a strong and free America, the cause of equal rights for all, of improving the nation's schools, of reforming our tax policies, of creating jobs for all, the cause of moving forward as a united people to end bigotry and hatred and to take up the unfinished business before our nation.

The Congress and the people must give him this help, so that from an increased patriotism on the part of each of us we shall repair the terrible loss which has befallen all of us.

As we gather with our families in this Holiday Season, as we reflect upon the past year and look ahead to the new year, let us resolve to rise to the challenge which a youthful, buoyant, John F. Kennedy placed before us on his first day as President:

"Ask not what your country can do for you: ask what you can do for your country."

G.O.P. Groups See Chance To Rebuild Party in South

POLITICS 10/30/66

By JOHN HERBERS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29—Two national Republican organizations said today the nomination of "demagogic candidates" in Southern Democratic primaries had provided the Republicans with an opportunity to build a strong, nonracist party in the South.

Republicans for Progress and the Ripon Society said in a joint statement that the nomination of segregationists for Governor in Arkansas, Georgia, Alabama and Maryland and for Congress in Louisiana had offended many "forward-looking Democrats and independents" in those states.

"These disaffected Democratic voters are natural recruits to a Republican crusade to save the South from those who condone terror, violence and defiance of law and order," the statement said.

The white backlash that resulted in segregationist victories this year will soon be "a dusty footnote in the history books," the groups said. "It is urgent that the Republican party seize its opportunity and rally responsible Southerners to fight for the leadership of a new South."

Integration Steps Urged

The statement accompanied publication of a 129-page report on the growth of the Republican party in the South in recent years, entitled "Southern Republicanism and the New South." The report points out that much of this growth has resulted from an influx of racists and recommends steps for integrated parties in the South.

"If the Republican party bets on the forces on the way up—the Negro, the moderate white middle class, the teacher—it will continue to grow," the report says. "Yet, should the Republican party choose instead for short-term gains to court segregationist whites, or Birchite extremists, it will surely pay a heavy penalty for decades."

Republicans for Progress, headed by Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati, is composed of Republican laymen, former officeholders and members of the Eisenhower Administration. It has been conducting a continuing study of the party in the South. The Ripon Society is composed of young Republican progressives with national headquarters in Cambridge, Mass. It was founded in Ripon, Wis.

In the statement, the organizations noted that Representative Charles L. Weltner, Democrat of Georgia, had withdrawn as a candidate for re-election because he could not support the Democratic nominee for Governor, Lester G. Maddox, a segregationist.

"Today, many Southerners, both white and Negro, share the distress of Congressman Weltner," the Republicans said. "If the Republican party is to rally these men and women to its banners in 1966 and the years ahead, it must offer them a real choice, not merely an echo of Democratic racism."

The statement failed to point out that some of the Republican nominees in the South are also segregationists. Representative Weltner has said that Mr. Maddox's opponent, Representative Howard Callaway, also supports segregation but uses "code names" for it.

The authors of the statement, however, suggested that candidates like Mr. Callaway could be drawn into a more moderate position.

"Failure by Republican candidates to differentiate their positions on race from those of their all-out segregationist Democratic opponents may result in large-scale nonvoting by forward-looking Southern voters," the statement said.

"Republican chances of defeating Lester Maddox depend heavily upon the ability of the Republican gubernatorial candidate, Congressman Callaway, to rally the support of racially moderate Georgians. Political pragmatism and moral imperatives coincide to require that the Republican candidates such as Callaway cast their lot with those who are fighting for a new South."

The statement said both national parties should formulate programs to combat racism, North and South. Congressional leaders, it said, should announce their intention to see that any candidate for the House or Senate who runs "an outspokenly racist campaign" will be denied committee chairmanships in the 90th Congress.

In the report, the authors list these recommendations for combating racism:

¶That the Republican National Committee require any state party having a discriminatory clause in its party platform or rules to repeal the provision without delay.

¶That the party on all levels make a "concerted effort" to see that a significant number of the new Negro registrants are Republicans.

¶That the national committee reactivate its minorities division and place staff workers in the field to recruit racial minorities.

The report was written by John C. Topping Jr., John R. Lazarek and William H. Linder, all members of the Ripon Society. Their recommendations were endorsed by both organizations.

Johnson Must Fit Legislation To Dominant Dixie Democrats

KC 1/23/67

By MARJORIE HUNTER

(Copyright 1967 by The New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON — Administration strategy in the months ahead is likely to rest heavily on tailoring legislation to fit the Southern Democratic bloc in the House.

Southern Democrats now hold the balance of power in Congress. No one is more aware of this than a man who grew up in that lively school of politics, Lyndon Baines Johnson.

Without Southern Democratic votes, the administration cannot hoep to salvage many of its Great Society programs. Without Southern Democratic votes, Republican efforts ot block or alter administration programs will be futile, too.

It is all a matter of arithmetic: There are now 245 Democrats and 187 Republicans in the House.

The administration can count on 140 to 170 Democratic votes, depending on the issue. It might also win 10 to 35 liberal or moderate Republican votes, again depending on the issue.

In either event, without sutstantial Southern Democratic support, the administration would fall short of the necessar 216 majority if all members wer present and voting.

Republicans too cannot go it alone. A certain number of liberal Republicans have voted more often with the Democrats than with their own party. But even with no Republican defections at all, at least 30 Democratic votes would be needed to trim or alter administration programs.

Until recently it had been assumed that most of the 83 southern Democrats, more in tune with the Republicans than with liberals of their own party, would automatically vote with the Republicans on most domestic issues.

But many southern Democrats are showing signs of growing resentment over repeated statements by Republican leaders that they will not actively court Southern Democratic votes in the House.

Republican leaders wa,t to carve out an image of their own, particularly in the South, where they have picked up congressional seats and other political offices in recent years. Hoping to make further inroads in the South, they feel they would be giving Sluthern Democrats a "free ride" by forming an open coalition witht hem.

Said one Republican leader:

Said one Republican leader:

"Southern Democrats could keep right on asking 'Why elect a Republican? I vote just as conservatively as any Republican.' "

Most Southern Democrats are conservative, some far more than many Northern and Western Republicans. Also, there is general hostiilty to President Johnson and his GreatSociety throughout much of the South.

But many Southern Democrats, unwilling to be taken for granted by Republicans, are casting around for the best bargaining position.

"There will bet imes when the administration and the Republicans will be damn glad to have votes from us," said Rep. Joe D. Waggoner Jr. of Louisiana, one of the most conservative of the Southern Democrats.

There is as yet no consensus among the Southerners as to ho best to make their influence felt.

There has been talk of creating a loosely knit organization, with staff and researchers, patterned somewhat along the lines of the Democratic study group, composed of about 140 House Democratic liberals.

Rep. Alton Lennon, D-N.C., favors an even more organized conservative organization, open not only to Southern Democrats but to other Democratic conservatives, largely from border states.

So far, the idea of setting up an organization has met with little favor among Southern Democrats.

"I don't want anybody telling me how to vote," said Rep. Basil Whitener, D-N.C.

Rep. Omar Burleson, D-Texas, one of the most popular of the Southern conservatives, also is opposed to such an organization.

Democrats Seeking To Mix Delegates?

2/17/67

By GENE ROBERTS

(Copyright 1967 by the New York Times Co.)

A move is developing among some Democratic national committeemen to close the doors of the 1968 convention to any Southern delegation that does not have Negro members and does not promise to uphold federal civil rights laws.

The plan is outlined in a seven-page set of proposals that is awaiting action in March by the special Equal Rights Committee of the Democratic National Committte.

The proposals are still regarded as confidential by their authors—members of an equal rights subcommittee headed by Mrs. Mildred Jeffrey, Democratic committeewoman from Michigan. But they are being quietly circulated in the South and are delighting white liberals and Negroes.

FIGHT LOOMS

However, the proposals promise to touch off a major fight from segregationist Democrats.

State Senator Edgar A. Brown, a member of the Equal Rights Committee from South Carolina, called the proposals "obnoxious" and said they were certain to cause "dissension, division and controversy" within the party.

One of the proposals would make it "prima facie evidence of discrimination" for any state with a population that is more than 20 per cent Negro to select a convention delegation that has less than 10 per cent Negro representation.

Another proposal would bar convention seats to delegations that do not present a document —signed by two top officers of the state Democratic party — pledging support for the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

THIRD PROPOSAL

A third proposal would allow the credentials committee to seat a rival integrated delegation if any regular delegation refused to desegregate or to sig nthe proper pledges.

Louis Martin, deputy director for minorities of the Democratic National Committee, said it was unfortunate that the proposals had been circulated in the South.

He said they were only "working proposals" prepared by a

"three-member subcommittee headed by Mrs. Jeffrey and that it was possible that other proposals are being drafted for the March meeting of the special Equal Rights Committee. Mrs. Jeffrey could not be reached for comment.

However, sources in the South said they unlderstood that there was enough support within the full Equal Rights Committee to get the proposals placed intact before the Democratic National Committee at its March 9 and 10 meeting in Washington.

The proposals are written as if majority approval by the Equal Rights Committee was only a formality.

The national committee appointed the panel in January 1965 to carry out an "Equal Rights" resolution adopted by the 1964 Democratic National Convention after a dispute arose over the seating of rival Mississippi delegations.

Other national committee members of the equal rights panel are: Mrs. Helen T. Gunsett, Ohio; Eugene L. Wyman, California; Stephen L. R. McNichols, Colorado; Mrs. Eugene M. Locke, Texas; Mrs. Mary E. Fantasia, Massachusetts, and E. Franklin Jackson, District of Columbia.

Brown, who said he could not recall being invited to any meetings of the Equal Rights Committee, said a major convention fight could develop if the proposals were forwarded to the convention's credentials committee.

"I'll sign no such damned thing," Brown said of the provision requiring a state party to say that it "fully supports" compliance with the Civil Rights and Voting Rights acts.

Other proposals would:

1. Bar any delegate, who has, at any time since the 1964 Democratic National Convention, in any way obstructed or urged or cooperated in the obstruction of, any person from registering or voting in elections in that state on grounds of race or color.

2. Ban delegates chosen from election districts "drawn for the purpose of avoiding Negro representation" or chosen from conventions that have not been "fully advertised."

DEMOCRATS FACE LOSSES IN SENATE

POLITICS

Of 23 Up for Re-election in '68, Half Are in Trouble—Ages and War Factors

5/29/67

By JOHN HERBERS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 28—On the office wall of the junior Senator from South Dakota is a framed certificate bearing two printed words: "Why Vietnam?" Beneath these is bold handwriting that proclaims: "To George McGovern in my search for peace not only in Vietnam but in all the world. Lyndon B. Johnson."

Mr. McGovern, a Democrat, is one of the most outspoken Congressional critics of President Johnson's policies in Vietnam. He received the certificate at the White House during the early stages of the Vietnam buildup when the President was still trying to pacify the Senate doves.

The Senator is no longer invited to the White House to discuss the war, but the certificate survives as a symbol of the political troubles that are piling up for Mr. McGovern and other Senate Democrats.

Of the 23 Senators of Mr. Johnson's party who are up for re-election next year, more than half may either be forced to retire or face difficult opposition in winning a new term, a matter of growing concern to the national party.

The war, age, crumbling state party organizations, resurgent Republicanism, public disaffection with the Johnson Administration and personal problems are afflicting the Democratic class that was elected in 1962 when the Democratic party was in its ascendancy under the leadership of John F. Kennedy. That year, the Democrats gained four Senate seats, a tremendous victory for an off-year election.

Senator McGovern acknowledges that he is in trouble for several reasons. He is young—age 44—vigorous and a hard worker. But he has chosen to be a dove while representing a constituency that is mostly hawkish, and he said in a recent interview that his mail contained a mixture of complaints about his stand on Vietnam and of condolences for the consequences of his courage.

Probably a greater handicap, however, is the fact that South Dakota is predominantly Republican. Senator McGovern won by only 597 votes in 1962 after almost single-handedly building a Democratic party in that state.

Because of a deep dissatisfaction with the Johnson Administration in South Dakota, the Republican party there is on the rise. Although Senator McGovern has opposed the Administration's farm policies and disagrees with the President on Vietnam, he said any Democratic candidate was likely to have trouble in 1968, barring a great change in the political climate.

Other Senators who advocated a reduced military effort in Vietnam face political problems at home. Frank Church of Idaho is the subject of a recall petition started by groups on the far right. Wayne Morse of Oregon has suffered a drastic loss in popularity, according to a recent poll and makes frequent trips to Oregon in an effort to mend fences.

J. W. Fulbright of Arkansas, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, has been the subject of much criticism in his home state because of his stand on Vietman. Former Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who endorses the President's Vietnam policy, has said he is considering running for Mr. Fulbright's seat.

A recent statement by 16 doves advising Hanoi that most of the American people either favor the President's war policy or advocate an even greater military effort was intended in part to reduce the political opposition against those who face re-election next year.

Age, however, may be a larger threat to more Senators than the war. The average age of the 23 Democrats is 64. Five will be past 70 at the time of

Senator George McGovern

Dodd, also of Connecticut, for alleged misuse of funds.

"Either way Senator Ribicoff votes, he will offend Democrats back home," the party official said.

Daniel B. Brewster of Maryland is in trouble within his own state party, and his position was not enhanced by a recent divorce and remarriage, party sources said. He is also expected to face strong Republican opposition.

A. S. Mike Monroney, who will be 66 next year, is said to be worried about a surge of Republican strength in Oklahoma.

To help those up for re-election, the Senatorial Campaign Committee has allocated about $15,000 for each Senator for use this year. Most of the money, part of the $700,000 raised at a party dinner held here recently, will go to pay for the Senators to make additional trips home for fence mending.

McGovern's Plans for 1968

WASHINGTON, May 28 (UPI)—Senator McGovern said today that he would run for re-election next year as a "ballot mate" of President Johnson's despite his criticism of the Administration's Vietnam policies.

In a televised interview on the Columbia Broadcasting System's Face the Nation, he stood by his recent description of the war as "the most tragic diplomatic and moral failure in our national experience" and his charge of a "credibility gap as wide as the Grand Canyon" in the Administration.

But he said that he agreed with most of the President's domestic programs. He also praised Mr. Johnson for "commendable restraint" in the United States war effort and said that it had taken "a considerable amount of courage and some real imagination and vision" to push for improved East-West trade relations at this time.

Arizona will be 91, Ernest Greuning of Alaska 81, Lister Hill of Alamaba 74, Frank J. Lausche of Ohio 73 and Sam J. Ervin Jr. of North Carolina 72.

Party leaders are not so worried about their possible inability as they are about the fact that American voters are becoming younger and in recent years have shown a tendency to turn out officials of advanced age.

Six of the 11 Republicans whose terms expire next year will be 70 or older. George D. Aiken of Vermont will be 76, Wallace F. Bennett of Utah 70, Frank Carlson of Kansas 75, Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois 72, Bourke D. Hickenlooper of Iowa 72 and Milton R. Young of North Dakota 71.

Most of the Republicans, however, are from traditional Republican states and are likely to be succeeded by Republicans, whereas most of the Democrats could be easily replaced by Republicans.

George A. Smathers of Florida has announced he will not seek re-election because of a health problem.

Joseph S. Clark of Pennsylvania is reported to be in deep trouble, primarily because his chief base of support, the Democratic organization in Philadelphia, has crumbled.

Edward V. Long of Missouri is faced with the recent charge of Life magazine—which he denied—that he used his office to try to keep James R. Hoffa, president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, out of jail.

A high party source said Abraham A. Ribicoff of Connecticut has been placed in a precarious position by the Senate move to censure Thomas J.

Wallace Is Pleased by Receptions in Wisconsin and Michigan

By DONALD JANSON

Special to The New York Times

MILWAUKEE, June 18 — George C. Wallace returned to Alabama today, encouraged by friendly receptions to campaign appearances this weekend in Wisconsin and Michigan.

The former Alabama Governor, visiting the 11th and 12th states on a national tour to enlist support for his unannounced Presidential candidacy, was most pleased with the response last night in Michigan. He said it demonstrated that his appeal was not racist.

Some 500 members of the upper peninsula Association of American Legion posts and their wives cheered his attacks on big government, antiwar demonstrators and court restrictions that he said "hamper" the police in their efforts to prevent a "breakdown" of law and order.

Doors Kept Locked

Uniformed policemen stood guard at each end of the speakers table and all but one door to the sprawling Escanaba High School building were locked while Mr. Wallace addressed a Legion banquet. The action was taken at the insistence of the six Alabama state troopers whom Mr. Wallace brought along.

Mr. Wallace sought to associate himself with the Legion by telling of his own membership in Alabama and by declaring that the "ivory tower theoreticians" and "anarchists" who opposed his views also hated the views of the Legion.

The audience, quiet at first, quickly warmed up and laughed frequently at Mr. Wallace's sallies against the "liberal press" and "misuse" of academic freedom and the right to dissent.

They cheered when he declared that if he were President "the intellectual incompetents who say the right of dissent gives you the right to give aid and comfort to our enemy in Vietnam should be treated for what they are, traitors to our country."

As he has since he began his spasmodic tour in April, Mr. Wallace directed his plea to the "little man" who he contends is being sharply restricted by guidelines for living laid down by Federal agencies and is being misinformed by "liberal thinkers" of the Eastern establishment whose influence he said rules both major political parties and makes his third party effort necessary.

"I used to be a cab driver," he said. "I find that today they know more about why ve're in Vietnam than some of those Yale professors.

"They knew by instinct that Castro was a Communist when The New York Times was calling him the Robin Hood of the Caribbean," he went on.

"The average man in the street knows what's going on and he's getting mighty sick and tired of having the intellectual giants laying down guidelines for everything he does."

Gets a Rising Ovation

The Legionnaires gave him a rising ovation, interspersed with shouts of "hooray for Wallace!" At Legion drum and bugle corps exercises at an Escanaba athletic field later, a crowd of 1,000 rose to applaud the Alabamian.

The crowd at an open house in a Milwaukee hotel ballroom the night before was smaller but more boisterous. More than 300 persons gave Mr. Wallace prolonged cheers when he told his listeners that he would take his "movement" "the length and breadth of the land to give the people a choice in 1968."

Mr. Wallace was proudest of the reception in Upper Michigan. He pointed outl ater that the area has almost no Negroes and no race problem, that his appeal could not be "racist" as his opponents so often contend.

Despite friendly receptions, weekend foray demonstrated no groundswell of support. Turnouts at the airport and at the open house in Milwaukee were small. And any joy sparked in the Wallace camp by the Escansba visit was tempered by a boycott by a sizable segment of legionnaires who would have been on hand if Mr. Wallace had stayed home.

Edward J. Dundon, judge advocate of the upper peninsula association, sought in vain to have the Wallace speech canceled. He and a group he put at "50 to 60" boycotted the banquet. Joseph Paul, a former state commander of the Legion, dropped out as toastmaster and a Michigan Congressman, two State Senators and a State Representative declined to attend the Legion parade because Mr. Wallace had been invited to review it.

The Alabamian took the hassle in stride. He said he provoked controversy everywhere he went and that it had become "a status symbol."

The next stop on Mr. Wallace's campaign trial will be a "pre-harvest festival" on Friday at McComb, Ohio, and an address to the Arkansas Press Association in Hot Springs on Saturday.

Wrestler Becomes Evangelist

FORT WORTH, Tex. (UPI) —Tommy Phelps traded grunts and groans for prayer and Scripture quotations. Mr. Phelps, once known as "Nature Boy," had long blond hair and wore tights and wrestled for a living. Now his hair is black and he wears a suit and tie and he is an evangelist.

A WALLACE DRIVE OPENS IN CAROLINA

POLITICS

Group Formed in Columbia Is Arranging Speeches

7/2/67

Special to The New York Times

COLUMBIA, S.C., July 1—A George C. Wallace "Stand Up For America" group is arranging speaking engagements in South Carolina for the former Alabama Governor.

Five members of the state House of Representatives, four Democrats and one Republican, were among the sponsors for the first meeting of the group this week.

Serving on the steering committee is a national director of the John Birch Society, Dr. Thomas H. Parker of Greenville.

At the organizational meeting here, Mayor Jerry Varn of Ehrhardt, who helped erect the first "Impeach Earl Warren" billboard in the country near his small town almost five years ago, was at the head table.

Bill Jones, manager of the Wallace campaign headquarters in Montgomery, made it clear that the new group, called the Wallace Forum Association of South Carolina would officially sponsor speeches and other appearances by Mr. Wallace.

The first is scheduled July 18 in Greenville, a conservative Piedmont textile center, and others are scheduled in Columbia in November and in Charleston early next year.

G.O.P. 'Front' Denied

Frank B. Best of Orangeburg, owner of the conservative-oriented radio station WDIX, is chairman of the Wallace Forum Association. He denied as "simply not true" a charge by Elmer E. Bessinger, a segregationist who is chairman of the South Carolina Independents, that the new group was a "front" for the state's Republican party.

The Republican state chairman, Harry S. Dent, also denied that his party was involved in the Wallace movement.

Mr. Dent said Mr. Bessinger apparently had been rejected by Mr. Wallace and was trying to use the Republican party as a "whipping boy to dethrone a rival pro-Wallace group in this state."

The Republican leader said a statement of charges by Mr. Bessinger on Republican involvement was "replete with

Mr. Dent said Mr. Bessinger apparently had been rejected by Mr. Wallace and was trying to use the Republican party as a "whipping boy to dethrone a rival pro-Wallace group in this state."

The Republican leader said a statement of charges by Mr. Bessinger on Republican involvement was "replete with gross errors and exaggerations."

Mr. Bessinger announced last week that he would work to have the South Carolina Independents certified as an official party. He wants to run a slate of candidates for county and state offices on a ballot with Mr. Wallace at the top. Mr. Bessinger led a 1964 drive to get Mr. Wallace's name on the ballot by petition. The move was dropped after the nomination of Barry Goldwater by the Republicans.

The South Carolina Wallace organization is patterned after that of Virginia. It was set up after a meeting last month in Columbia between T. Coleman Andrews Jr. of Richmond and members of the South Carolina Steering Committee.

Mr. Andrews, the son of the former Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the Eisenhower Administration, heads the Wallace organization in Virginia. He is a member of the Virginia Legislature who says he quit the John Birch Society because of criticisms of former President Dwight D. Eisenhower made by Robert Welch, the society's founder.

At this week's meeting, Mr. Best told the group:

"This is not a Wallace Campaign Committee, but eventually this may develop."

The meeting opened with a prayer and a standing pledge of allegiance to the United States flag, which was flanked behind the head table by the Confederate flag and the state flag of South Carolina.

teen-agers as well as older men and women and working people. It was a group that might have been found at a typical midweek church meeting in a small Southern town.

Mr. Jones said "high type" people would run the Wallace campaign in South Carolina. But, he said, "the tone of the campaign and the issues on which he stands" will be determined by Mr. Wallace "if one of the major parties fails to get his message."

FORUM REPORTS

No. 1 GEORGIA DEMOCRATIC PARTY FORUM October 16, 1967

MEMBERSHIP DRIVE STARTING

Several copies of our newly-printed flyer are enclosed. Members may obtain more from the Forum office. We're now ready to roll! If each member will get another Georgian to join each month, we'll soon have the biggest roster of loyal Democrats ever put together in the state. Send and give these flyers to your friends. See that interested organizations circulate it. Local Democratic clubs will want to encourage their members to join so that they'll have a say in our statewide movement. In subsequent Newsletters we will acknowledge these efforts to promote the Forum, so let us know what you're doing.

MADDOX TO CHOOSE DELEGATES

Reversing progressive steps of the previous administration, Governor Maddox pushed through a rules change which now allows him to appoint Georgia's delegates to the Democratic Party's National Convention, now set for late August in Chicago. Forum Chairman, E. T. Kehrer said of this in a public statement: "The Maddox takeover of the Georgia Democratic Party is now virtually complete" and went on to indicate that the Forum will "see that loyal Democrats in Georgia are adequately represented at the national convention if Mr. Maddox is unable or unwilling to do so."

FORUM EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE FORMING

As provided for at the founding meeting in May, Forum members in each county are to select from one to six persons to serve on the statewide Executive Committee, the number to be determined by the county's population. If this hasn't been done in your area, write us about the necessary steps to get your representation chosen in time for a late fall meeting.

MADDOX WATCHERS SEE MOVE TO GO ALL-OUT FOR WALLACE!

That was a headline recently, not unlike others we've been seeing in recent months. It now seems certain that the question is not whether Maddox will support Wallace, but in what way and when. Will he come out openly, or just continue to use sign language or code words which everyone understands - while on alternate days he claims to be a good Democrat?

STANDARDS FOR STATE DELEGATIONS PROPOSED

Headed by Governor Hughes of New Jersey, an Equal Rights Committee has proposed guidelines to the Democratic National Committee which would require that convention delegates commit themselves to support the nominees of the convention. Also, they have proposed standards by which delegations would be judged in terms of racial representation. If a state is found to be in violation, Governor Hughes said his committee will recommend to the Convention Credentials Committee that its delegation be barred and that the vacant seats be filled "with a delegation broadly representative of the Democrats of that state." Translated into Georgia terms, this means watchbirds watching the watchers every which-a-way!

THE FORUM AND THE FUTURE

You can feel it in the air - and on the newsprint! An election year is fast approaching: One which will be determinative for Georgia and the Democratic Party. Since the Forum's launching in May we've watched the Dixicrat ghosts of yesterday come alive again to cast a pall over Democratic Party prospects in 1968. Any doubt as to the return of separatism and a vacuum in leadership has been removed by weekly - and sometimes more frequent - murmurings from the Party's titular leader who seeks to rekindle a Dixicratism we'd hoped was gone with the wind. Thoughtful and progressive-minded Georgians will not be left stranded again, however. A new current, first evident in the write-in movement, is moving through the state. It knows that right-wing Republicanism is only dressed up Dixicratism. Georgians who believe in the principles and ideals of the Democratic Party will not be isolated from the mainstream this time. National leaders know there's a different drum beat in Georgia today than just the worn-out Dixicratism of the Griffins and Talmadges. The Georgia Democratic Party Forum is slowly but surely building a statewide fellowship of moderate and liberal thinking citizens who believe that the Democratic Party is the best instrument for continued progress. As the lines are drawn in the coming Presidential year, we may emerge as one of the few statewide forces willing and ready to support the national ticket. While we take no pleasure in the return of a myopic, region-bound stance to official party echelons - neither will we stand idly by while the party of FDR and JFK is once more subverted in Georgia. State Chairman James Gray (a reactionary Republican disguised as a Dixicrat) says that Georgia Democrats may not conduct a vigorous campaign for the presidential ticket if the national party does not grant concessions to Southern views. Does he think we've forgotten that it was only Governor Sanders in 1964 who worked vigorously for the national ticket? Or where Mr. Gray himself was in 1964? He and his kind can just go on off to Spain now if they're going to quibble about whether they're Democrats or not. At least from overseas it would be more difficult for him to give help under the table to his political cousin, Ronald Reagon, who might be carrying the Republican banner.....All of which adds up to an obvious imperative for the Forum to move ahead to create the apparatus necessary to fill the void next year. It may be, as one high-ranking state party official put it, that the most we can hope for is for our titular leader to sit on his hands, wearing his Wallace button only on Tuesdays and Thursdays. But this isn't enough for good Democrats who want to get out and work for the ticket. The Forum has declared itself as committed to the national party and, furthermore, for as equally progressive a platform as we had in 1964, and we intend to fill the gaps if the old guard can not or will not.

THE 1964 DEMOCRATIC PARTY PLATFORM: PROMISE & PERFORMANCE

EDUCATION: "The demands on the already inadequate sources of state and local revenues place a serious limitation on education. New methods of financial aid must be explored, including the channeling of federally collected revenues to all levels of education."

Action: $1.3 billion in the first year for aid to educationally deprived children from low-income families and grants for books, research, and training. Signed into law, April 11, 1965.

Republican Party Vote: 73% of House Republicans against final passage.

VOTING RIGHTS: "The rights of all our citizens must be protected....We are firmly pledged to continue the Nation's march towards the goals of equal treatment for all Americans."

Action: Provisions to enforce the 15th Amendment and authorization of federal registrars where local officials discriminate against potential Negro voters. Signed into law, August 6, 1965.

Republican Party Vote: 85% of House Republicans voted to kill the bill.

HOUSING: "The goals of our housing program must be a decent home for all Americans."

Action: Expanded housing program, including rent supplements for low-income families, housing rehabilitation grants and public housing for the handicapped. Signed into law, August 10, 1965.

Republican Party Vote: 97% of House Republicans voted to kill the bill. 87% of House Republicans and 47% of Senate Republicans voted against final passage.

MEDICARE: "We will continue to fight until we have succeeded in including hospital care for older Americans in the Social Security program."

Action: A basic hospital insurance program under Social Security, a voluntary health insurance program and a 7% increase in old age and survivors benefits. Signed into law, July 30, 1965.

Republican Party Vote: 93% of House Republicans voted to kill the bill. 53% of House Republicans and 52% of Senate Republicans voted against final passage.

MANPOWER TRAINING: "We must develop fully our most precious resource - our manpower. Training and retraining programs must be expanded."

Action: Extension and expansion of the Manpower Development and Training Act and a new job development program. Signed into law, April 26, 1965.

Republican Party Vote: 71% of House Republicans voted against final passage.

MINIMUM WAGE: "The coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act must be extended to all workers employed in industries affecting interstate commerce....agricultural and migratory workers must be given equal protection and economic encouragement."

Action: Extension of coverage to 8.1 million new workers and minimum wage coverage for agricultural workers. $1.60 per hour effective 1968. Signed into law, September 23, 1966.

Republican Party Vote: 72% of House Republicans voted to kill the bill.

ANTI-POVERTY: "We will carry the War on Poverty forward as a total war against the causes of human want."

Action: Expansion of Economic Opportunity Act. Signed into law, October 9, 1965.

Republican Party Vote: 90% of House Republicans voted to kill the bill. 82% of House Republicans and 69% of Senate Republicans voted against final passage.

APPALACHIA: "We will move forward with programs to restore those areas, such as Appalachia, which the Nation's progress has by-passed."

Action: A 6 year $1.1 billion economic development program for the depressed 11-state Appalachia region (includes Georgia). Signed into law, March 9, 1965.

Republican Party Vote: 81% House Republicans and 69% Senate Republicans against final passage.

(Editorial Note: This is just a sampling. Need we say more?)

BO CALLAWAY TRIES TO REWRITE HISTORY: Endeavoring to explain away his defeat, the sometime Republican gubernatorial candidate has implied that there were sinister persons at the helm of the Write-In Georgia movement who really wanted Maddox. Since the Forum was originally an outgrowth of the W.I.G. undertaking, would this seem to be substantiated by our editorial viewpoint on the opposite page? Bo goes on to suggest that the little people "who voted for the write-in didn't know what, in effect, they were doing.", the implication being, and sometimes stated by Bo, that he was somehow or another the lesser of two evils. We have yet to meet such people, for it was our experience that the little people saw Bo for the dressed-up Dixicrat he is, a part of the sorry Republican record above, who would only have served to make right-wing politics more palatable than the present incumbent is able to do.

FULTON COUNTY FORUM MEMBERS: Until other local Democratic Party county structures are formed (probably by Forum members), it's only in Fulton that you can actually join and work within the official Democratic Party. Be sure you're a member of the Fulton County Democratic Party and that you keep your dues paid up!

EMBLEM REJECTED

NDP registration papers returned

BY DAN DOWE
News staff writer

MONTGOMERY

The Alabama version of the National Democratic Party was back at the starting gate today—without a donkey to ride upon.

The Huntsville-based political organization, which apparently hopes to capture both presidential electors and Democratic convention delegates, pledged to President Johnson, had its registration papers returned Tuesday by Secretary of State Mabel Amos.

MRS. AMOS' action was based on an attorney general's opinion that the National Democratic Party, which filed for registration in Alabama Jan. 12, has an emblem which is too similar to those of two other parties to be acceptable.

The new party's emblem is a donkey, surrounded by a circle in which the words, "The National Democratic Party," are imposed.

Chief Asst. Atty. Gen. John Bookout held that both the donkey and the word "Democratic" in the emblem are "very likely to mislead substantial numbers of voters."

Bookout's opinion cited an Alabama law which forbids the secretary of state from certifying any new party emblem "which is likely to mislead any voter."

THE ALABAMA Independent Democratic Party, which filed its papers Dec. 6, has already adopted a donkey as an emblem. The party, headed by David Vann of Birmingham, hopes to place a slate of electors pledged to President Johnson on the general election ballot if former Gov. George Wallace captures the electors of the regular Democratic Party in Alabama.

And the regular party, which has the word, "Democratic," under its traditional rooster emblem, also figured in the attorney general's opinion.

The next step in attempting to register the National Democratic Party is up to chairman Alvis Howard Jr. of Huntsville. He conceivably could win certification without an emblem, since three other parties have already done so.

Or he could submit an emblem which includes neither a donkey nor the word "Democratic."

PUBLIC NOTICE

For purposes of electing delegates to the Democratic National Convention who are representative of the Democrats of Georgia and who will support and work for the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Nominees of the Democratic Party, announcement is hereby made of the convening of -

THE GEORGIA CONVENTION OF LOYAL NATIONAL DEMOCRATS

Dempsey Hotel - Macon, Ga.

August 10, 1968

10:30 A.M.

WHO MAY PARTICIPATE?

All registered Georgia voters who are members of the Democratic Party and who will signify their intentions to support and work for the 1968 Presidential and Vice-Presidential Nominees of the Democratic Party. Membership in the Georgia Democratic Party Forum is not required.

WHO IS SPONSORING THIS CONVENTION?

Seventy members of the statewide Executive Committee of the Georgia Democratic Party Forum met in Atlanta on June 29th and determined that the Maddox delegation to the Democratic National Convention should be challenged. The Forum's Steering Committee met in Macon on July 6th to determine the date and place for this convention.

WHY A CHALLENGE?

Because loyal Georgia Democrats have had no voice in the selection of delegates, nor is the Maddox appointed and led slate in any way representative of the Democratic Party in Georgia. Maddox has hand-picked a group who will operate under the unit rule and do his bidding. Maddox is openly for the candidate of another party and has indicated that he may not support any Presidential nominee of the Democratic Party. Furthermore, he has suggested that not only might he walk out - he would run! Neither Mr. Maddox nor many of his appointees meet the test in the Call for the Democratic National Convention which says that delegates shall be "bona fide Democrats who have the interests, welfare and success of the Democratic Party at heart" and who will "participate in the Convention in good faith." The inclusion of only three Negroes as voting delegates (out of 64 voting delegates), and a total of only six out of 107 delegates and alternates, is hardly in conformity with the requirement of the Special Equal Rights Committee which said that delegations must be "broadly representative of the Democrats of the State."

WHAT PROCEDURES WILL BE FOLLOWED IN MACON?

It will be recommended to the Macon Convention that a procedure be adopted calling for a caucus period at which time participants from each Congressional District (areas proportioned according to population) will select four delegate nominees and one alternate, the slate from each District to be voted upon in plenary session after an opportunity has been provided for further nominations from the floor. Consideration will also be given to those few of the Maddox appointees who may meet the criteria of the Convention Call and who will consent to their nomination.

WHAT ABOUT THE CANDIDATES?

The Democratic Party Forum takes no position as between various announced Democratic Party presidential candidates, but welcomes to the Macon Convention all loyal Democrats who will signify their intention to support the Party's nominees. Those elected in Macon to go to the Democratic National Convention will be free to vote their preference if seated.

WHO ELSE IS GOING TO MACON?

Loyal Georgia Democrats from all parts of the State have been involved in planning for the Macon convention. For information on key persons in your area, write the Georgia Democratic Party Forum. Talk with your friends about going. Arrange car pools to Macon. Watch for word about chartered busses, or have some organization you belong to arrange one. We should be finished by 5:00 P.M., so you can get home the same day.

COME TO MACON AND HELP PUT THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY BACK IN THE HANDS OF LOYAL GEORGIA DEMOCRATS. DON'T LET LESTER MADDOX SPEAK FOR US IN CHICAGO!

Two-Party Drive Roars Across Mississippi; Phillips Tops Slate!

Stanford Morse Seeks Lt. Governorship; 20 Vie for Legislature

The challenge of the century confronts the voters of Mississippi!

For the first time, they have the opportunity to vote for the two-party system. If they do, they will win the power to make the national political parties compete for their votes in future elections, and at the same time, set the pace in a South already afire with two-party gains.

At the head of the two-party ticket is Rubel Phillips—former chairman of the State Public Service Commission, proven administrator, articulate conservative.

The candidate for lieutenant governor is Stanford Morse—two-term State Senator, vital force in the legislature, leader in obtaining reapportionment.

Backing up the state-wide ticket are 20 legislative candidates—businessmen, community leaders, exceptionally qualified by experience and training for the offices they seek.

The Mississippi campaign has already won national attention, and, almost certainly, more will be forthcoming as the press seeks information on the "new" South.

Issues in the campaign have been crystallized. In addition to state objectives—such as Phillips' plank for a state merit system—the issues are identical to those in many Southern states: The need for competitive, two-party government; recognition that the liberal Democrat Party no longer represents the Jeffersonian concepts of Southerners; and, of course, the issue of "The Kennedys."

The vote in the Mississippi gubernatorial contest could reveal whether the Kennedys can take the South for granted in 1964, as they have in the past. The contest is important to Republicans, also, for it is a well-recognized axiom that victories at lower levels of government build the organization and spirit necessary to capture higher offices—in this case, the supreme office, the presidency.

In this edition, the first of a planned series spotlighting 1963 campaigns in Southern states, we salute the two-party forces in Mississippi, and congratulate the Republicans and discerning Democrats who made it possible to field the outstanding ticket.

'Freedom of Choice Dinner' Is a Hit–

Mississippi Hears Tower Lash Kennedys

"John F. Kennedy is going to be the first one-term president since Herbert Hoover," Senator John Tower (R-Texas) told the more than 700 people who packed the convention hall of the Edgewater Gulf Hotel in Biloxi recently.

Tower was the featured speaker at the Mississippi Republican Party's "Freedom of Choice Dinner," honoring 1963 Republican candidates.

"Kennedy's approach to our problems is to either nationalize them, subsidize them, or suppress them," Tower charged. "Certainly these are not the real solutions to the problems that face us today."

South Rises Again

Tower told the packed house that their presence was proof that the South had risen again.

"The Republican Party reflects the beliefs of the Southern people," the Texas Senator said. "The Democratic Party has abandoned the principles of Thomas Jefferson. You are not leaving the Democratic Party, my friends, it left you a long time ago.

"Don't let anyone fool you. The majority of Americans are conservative," Tower said, "and they look to the Republican Party for a return to Constitutional government.

"The liberals in this country are well organized and well financed. We conservatives must overcome this barrier and become better organized and better financed if we expect to win the battle. If we do not do this soon, we may not have a country left."

Need Courageous Stand

"When I first went to Washington I was frightened about what was going on there," Tower continued, "but today I am simply terrified.

"We need people in public office who are willing to say that our problems are problems that we can solve ourselves," Tower charged. "They must stand up and say, 'we don't want your help, Uncle Sam.'

"I wish that Kennedy would use some of the same pressure that he is using on businessmen against the Soviet arms build-up in Cuba," Tower urged.

SCENES AT TOWER DINNER

'Newsweek' Sees Miss. Election 'Most Important' Event of 1963

"The most important political event of 1963 is likely to be the statewide election in Mississippi." These are not the words of a proud Mississippian or even of a Southerner, but are contained in an article in Newsweek magazine by Raymond Moley, a political expert of countless seasons of political experience.

Writing on the expanding Republican Party in the South, Moley expressed his belief that the GOP may, for the first time since the turn of the century, elect a Republican governor in a Deep South state.

"Republican leaders I have met in this extended tour of the South are young, respected citizens more interested in creating a strong Republican Party than in anything they may get personally," Moley writes.

Moley notes in his article that recently the former head of the state Young Republican organization was elected to the Mississippi Legislature. "The Democratic Party in the state is genuinely alarmed," he wrote.

"I hear constantly from these party workers that it is about time to end the long captivity in the Democratic Party," Moley says. Women, too, are finding that political loyalty should mean something far more than blindly voting for a label, Moley wrote.

Political parties aim their platforms and actions at areas where there's two-party competition—those are the votes they have to work for!

'Fight for Mississippi's Future'–

For Governor—Rubel Phillips

Rubel Phillips is one of those young men who seem to be born with an aura of success around them. His first political success was being elected president of all his high school classes. Following in succession, he was elected president of the entire student body in his senior year and later, president of the University of Mississippi Law School.

After obtaining his law degree in 1951, Rubel returned to his native Alcorn County and was elected Circuit Clerk. During his four-year term he was elected president of the Mississippi State Association of Circuit Clerks.

He's a Winner!

In 1955, only 10 days after his marriage to Margaret James, Rubel announced his candidacy for Public Service Commissioner from the northern district. What happened in this whirlwind campaign? Naturally, Rubel was elected and went on to be named by the fellow board members as chairman of the Mississippi Public Service Commission.

Rubel believes that unless the Kennedy Dynasty is stopped soon, all government authority will be transferred to Washington, and the last vestige of local rights and local responsibilities will be destroyed.

"Shall we cling blindly to a party label that has long since discarded the principles Mississippians cherish?" he asks "Shall we throw off the yoke of Socialism the Kennedys are tightening around our necks?"

In calling for a mass movement of Mississippians into the Republican Party, Rubel says, "We must have the courage to fight for Mississippi's future under a new banner that champions individual freedom, private enterprise, and the kind of Americanism our forefathers fought for."

Rubel's platform includes a strong plank for the establishment of a merit system for state employees. "Our state employees should be free to devote full time to their jobs and should not be required to participate in the governor's race," Phillips asserted.

Hits One-Party Rule

Rubel feels and has stated that one-party rule leads inevitably to corruption and abuse of power at the expense of the people. "My election will bring healthy competition into Mississippi politics, competition that will result in more efficient government at all levels," the 38-year-old Jackson attorney stated.

The father of two young sons, Rubel has dedicated himself to the restoring of Mississippi's honor and to the stopping of Mississippi's service as "whipping boy" for the Kennedys.

Leader in Reapportionment Fight–

For Lt. Governor—Stanford Morse

In the Mississippi Senate, as in all governing bodies, there is found a small corps of men who are recognized for their outstanding leadership ability. One of these men presently serving in the Mississippi Senate is Stanford E. Morse, Jr., of Gulfport.

Senator Morse, one of those men who seem destined to rise to the highest ranks of government, is the Republican nominee for the office of Lieutenant Governor of Mississippi.

Served Two Terms

Senator Morse, who is now in his second term in the Mississippi State Senate, representing Harrison and Stone Counties, was a leader in the fight for the reapportionment plan which was approved by Mississippi voters in the recent referendum.

In making his announcement, Senator Morse stated:

"I am aware of the reluctance of many Mississippians to give up the Democratic label. However, we must admit that the Democratic Party offers absolutely no hope for the people of Mississippi. The Democratic Party of our fathers and grandfathers has been destroyed. It no longer exists.

Matter of Principle

"Party label cannot be more important than our principles and our honor. I would willingly wear any label that would help us save our state from the New Frontier and from the brothers Kennedy.

"The only possible way by which we may exercise any influence in national affairs is to have a strong two-party system in our state. A Republican victory in Mississippi this year would do more for our state than the election of a hunded unpledged electors. I believe a majority of our people will agree."

Seven Seek Mississippi Senate Seats

CHARLES 'BUDDY' KLUMB

Copiah-Lawrence

Charles 'Buddy' Klumb, Crystal Springs lumberman and the State GOP Finance Chairman, is the Republican nominee for State Senator from the 47th district composed of Copiah and Lawrence Counties.

In making the announcement Klumb stated, "It is a feeling of deep concern for the future of our state and nation and a sense of moral obligation to fight to preserve our heritage of freedom that prompts my decision to seek public office. Too long have businessmen sat idly and complacently by and failed to fight for the future of our children, our state and our country."

Klumb further stated, "My decision to seek the nomination as a Republican is based on the simple, inescapable fact that John F. and Robert Kennedy are Democrats and only a strong two-party system in the South will bring about their defeat."

JOHN W. HOLMES

Sunflower County

John W. Holmes, an Indianola insurance man, is the Republican nominee for State Senator from Sunflower County.

Holmes says that he will seek the post because he believes that his 10 years experience with the Sunflower County Farm Bureau Organization has acquainted him with the many problems facing farm people; and his experience while serving on the Board of Aldermen in Indianola has given him an insight into the problems facing the municipalities.

Holmes is a World War II veteran having served in the South Pacific. He is a graduate of the University of Mississippi, holding a Bachelor of Business Administration degree, with a major in Banking and Finance.

W. S. 'MONK' FOWLER

Attala-Winston-Choctaw

W. S. (Monk) Fowler, a prominent Kosciusko businessman and retired Naval Commander, is the Republican nominee for District 34, Post 1, Mississippi Senate. This district is composed of Attala, Winston and Choctaw Counties.

Fowler has a distinguished military record which includes the Silver Star. Commander Fowler was credited with sinking more enemy submarines than any other U. S. flyer in history, and was recognized for this heroic feat in a number of national magazines.

"There is a dire need for true, dedicated Americans to serve their country," Fowler said. "If our country is to be saved from the evil forces from within and without, we must put aside our petty differences and work with zeal to straighten out the sad state of affairs in which we find our government."

"We Americans are at last awakening to the fact that our country is heading in the wrong direction," Fowler said, commenting on the grassroots movement that is evidencing itself in every part of our nation for a return to constitutional government.

"Every Republican vote is another nail in the political coffin of the Kennedy dynasty," Fowler said.

WILLIAM A. POWE

Forrest County

William A. Powe, Forrest County, who built a thriving business in Cuba only to see it seized by Castro, is the Republican nominee for the Forrest County Senate Post.

He is the first Republican senatorial candidate in the history of Forrest County.

Powe went to Cuba as a young man and developed sugar and farm equipment businesses. Castro took all Powe's holdings when he seized power, and Powe returned to Forrest County where he is now a businessman and tree farmer.

Powe, a prominent civic leader, stated, "I have chosen to run as a Republican because it is the conservative party. That is the party I want to be associated with. I don't want to be associated with the party of the Kennedys, Stevensons, and Adam Clayton Powells."

Powe, a district governor of Rotary International, ruled out the Democrat Party and the unpledged elector plan as the solution to Mississippi's political problems. "Only the Republican Party . . can assure us of private enterprise, sound money, and constitutional government," Powe stated.

JOHN ROBERT ARNOLD

Oktibbeha-Noxubee

John Robert Arnold, a Starkville businessman and farmer, is the Republican nominee for the Senate Seat representing Oktibbeha and Noxubee Counties.

"I choose to run as a Republican," Arnold stated, "believing that the establishment of a two-party system is vital to our state's destiny as it prepares for a period of tremendous growth."

"The freedom of individual choice has been our greatest heritage since the founding fathers had the courage and foresight to break away from the old and make new choices. I believe that the citizens of Oktibbeha and Noxubee Counties are ready and willing to break with the past and elect the best candidate, regardless of party label."

Arnold, the father of three children and a graduate of Mississippi State University, is the President of Howard Furniture Manufacturing Company of Starkville and is a cattle and cotton farmer in nearby Sessums, Mississippi.

JOE A. MOORE

Jackson County

Joe A. Moore, the State Vice-Chairman of the Mississippi Republican Executive Committee, is the Republican nominee for District 6, Post 1, representing Jackson County, for the Mississippi Senate.

Moore, a well-known South Mississippi Attorney, is a graduate of the University of Mississippi Law School and is active in the American Legion.

"The time has come for a nation-wide grassroots movement back to constitutional government," Moore stated, "and this move can best be accomplished through the Republican Party."

"For years the people of Mississippi and the South have been tied hand and foot to a party that no longer exists," Moore charged. "We must cast off the yoke of the Democratic Party and all join into the movement toward the Republican Party."

J. W. "JUDY" KING

Jones County

Julius W. (Judy) King of Laurel, is the Republican nominee for Senate Seat, District 5, Post 1, representing Jones County.

King, in making his announcement, said, "Having always been interested in the affairs of our people and this country, I can no longer stand on the sidelines and watch while we are completely overrun by the Kennedys."

"Therefore, I am offering my services as your state senator to represent you in the manner in keeping with the principles and traditions of this state and country prior to falling under the control and influence of the free-spending Kennedy administration.

"In the interest of morality and political integrity, I feel that it is time for us to take the party label that more nearly reflects our thinking. I want to be your Senator, so I am offering my candidacy as a Republican, for I believe if you elect me it will serve as an ultimatum to the Kennedys that the South has had enough!"

28 Southerners Named To Important Posts for 1964 GOP Convention

U. S. Rep. William E. Miller, chairman of the Republican National Committee, has announced the appointment of 28 Southerners to committees for the 1964 Republican National Convention, opening July 13, 1964 in San Francisco.

Included in the posts held by Southerners are three committee chairmanships: W. W. Wannamaker, Jr., South Carolina, heads the Committee on Concessions and Special Exhibits; Mrs. Ike S. Kampman, Jr., Texas, Convention Theme and Program Entertainment, and Robert R. Snodgrass, Georgia, Radio and Television.

Eight on Rules

Southern states placed eight representatives on the important Committee on Rules. They are Marvin Mostellar, Ala.; Winthrop Rockefeller, Ark.; Anthony S. Battaglia, Fla.; Fred LaRue, Miss.; J. E. Broyhill, N. C.; Mrs. A. Dabney Barnes, S. C.; Harry C. Carbaugh, Tenn., and Nile Straughan, Va.

Seven Southerners were appointed to the Committee on Call. They are Tom F. Brown, Fla.; Mrs. Capers Rice, Ga.; Ted H. Hardwick, Ky.; Charlton H. Lyons, Sr., La.; Erby L. Jenkins, Tenn.; Albert B. Fay, Tex., and Horace E. Henderson, Va.

Committee on Contests

John T. Diederich of Kentucky was appointed to the strategic Committee on Contests.

Others who received appointments and their committees: Mrs. Fred V. Lucas, Ky., Badges; Mrs. W. L. Jameson, Jr., Ark., Concessions and Exhibits; Mrs. Dorothy J. Lewis, La., Convention Hall Appearance; Mrs. Frank E. Williams, Fla., who is also assistant chairman of the Republican National Committee, Program Planning; Mrs. Louis G. Rogers, N. C., Housing; Mrs. Irene B. Baker, Tenn., Periodicals and Photographers; Mrs. Tom Abernethy, Ala., Press; Mrs. James F. Hooper, Miss., Tickets, and Mrs. Hazel K. Barger, Va., Transportation.

Here's How ALL Southerners Can Help Miss. Get Two Parties!

Everyone—no matter how little time he has—can help Mississippi obtain a two-party system!

If you're an out-of-stater, mail this edition of the "Challenge" to friends in Mississippi and ask their consideration of the Republican candidates. Encourage others to write their friends, too.

If you're a resident of Mississippi, volunteer your services to the Republican county chairman or the "Phillips for Governor" Headquarters. If you don't know the address, write Mississippi Republican Party, 514 Lamar Life Building, Jackson.

Even if your time limitations and physical capacities are such that you can't "ring doorbells," contributions in the form of "talking it up" with friends, letters to friends and the newspapers, etc., can be of immense value.

Your help, in whatever way you feel possible, when coupled with that of others, will be the crucial factor in the campaign!

Here Are Candidates For Miss. House

ROBERT E. BAKER

Jackson County

Robert E. Baker is the Republican nominee for Post #3, Mississippi House of Representatives from Jackson County.

Baker believes that the need for industrial development and the protection of state and individual rights are important issues in the forthcoming campaign. He maintains that we must face the problems 'head on' and seek solutions to these pressing problems.

He is a native of Ocean Springs, a World War II submarine veteran, and a graduate of LSU. He is presently a certified public accountant, practicing in Ocean Springs.

His past experience includes ten years in budget and cost control work with a major industrial concern.

W. T. 'TATE' STOKELY

Sunflower County

W. T. (Tate) Stokely, of Drew, Mississippi, is the Republican nominee for Post 2, Sunflower County, House of Representatives.

Stokely, 48, was born and has lived in Sunflower County most of his life. He is the owner of City Furniture Company in Drew. He is a member of the Methodist Church and serves on the board of finance, and has served on the Board of Aldermen of the city of Drew.

"I am basing my candidacy on my experience as a businessman and my ability to serve the people of Sunflower County in an honest and straightforward manner, subject to the will of the voters in the November election."

HAROLD DAVIS

Forrest County

Harold Davis, a prominent Hattiesburg businessman, is the Republican nominee for House Post #1, Forrest County.

In this county, where a good Republican vote is always in evidence, Davis feels that his chances are excellent and now is the time for a Republican victory.

Davis is known throughout the county for his outspoken sentiments for conservative government and is determined to run an outstanding campaign.

ROME EMMONS

Forrest County

Rome A. Emmons, a Hattiesburg business leader and an officer in the Forrest County Republican Party, is the nominee for House Post #2, Forrest County.

Emmons, who was one of the organizers of the Republican movement in Forrest County, says that the time now is ripe for a state-wide Republican victory. "This is the year that the Republican Party in the South will emerge as a factor to be contended with," he said.

HUGH M. ARANT

Leflore County

Hugh M. Arant, of Minter City, is the Republican nominee for Post 2, Mississippi House of Representatives, Leflore County.

Arant, a 35-year-old farmer, has been active in the GOP for the past two years.

"I believe that the principles on which our forefathers founded this great nation still hold true today," Arant said and pledged himself to a government where individual initiative and individual opportunity prevail.

Arant states that he will do everything in his power to oust the Kennedys and pledges himself to helping elect a conservative president in 1964.

SWAN YERGER—Hinds County

Swan Yerger, a Jackson attorney, is the Republican nominee for Post 4, Hinds County (in the City of Jackson) for the House of Representatives.

Yerger, a past president of the Jackson Junior Chamber of Commerce, listed his platform which included a strengthened free enterprise system, economy in state government, and strict enforcement of the state prohibition law as long as it remains the law of this state. He stated that he would support legislation to enact a rigid liquor control law on a local county-option basis.

Yerger also pledged his cooperation to the plan of conservatives in this state and throughout the country to defeat the Kennedy dynasty.

Yerger is a native of Jackson and is a fifth generation Mississippian. He attended the Jackson Public Schools, Virginia Military Institute, Ole Miss, and the University of Virginia Law School.

He is married to the former Virginia Palmer of Pine Bluff, Ark, and is a member of the First Baptist Church.

GEORGE PERSONS

Hinds County

George Persons, a 38-year-old Jackson businessman, is the Republican nominee for Hinds County, Post 5, Mississippi House of Representatives. Persons stated that a vote for him is a vote for states' rights, local self government, and a plan to put good business sense back into Mississippi government. "I intend to fight any law that would help the Federal Government take away any more of our remaining rights," Persons concluded.

Persons comes from an outstanding family of conservative statesmen. Persons' uncle, Gordon Persons, was Governor of Alabama from 1951 to 1955. Another uncle, Wilton Persons, was an aide to former President Eisenhower.

Persons, the first Republican to announce for the Legislature in Hinds County, is president of Answerphone, a telephone answering service.

Competition in government is like competition in business—it brings you the best product for the least cost.

L. L. (MACK) McALLISTER

Lauderdale County

L. L. (Mack) McAllister, Mississippi's only Republican legislator, will be seeking re-election this fall. McAllister is the Republican nominee for the House post inside the City of Meridian from Lauderdale County.

McAllister won his seat in the Mississippi lower house last February 19, in a special election. He won out over a field of three Democrats and became Mississippi's first Republican Legislator in over 39 years.

McAllister said that his election was "a step in the right direction" toward the establishment of a two-party system for Mississippi.

McAllister, a former state chairman of the Mississippi Young Republicans, is a 30-year-old certified public accountant.

ROBERT W. PELTON

Jackson County

Bob Pelton, of Pascagoula, is the Republican nominee for House Post #1, Jackson County.

Pelton, who is employed in real estate and insurance, has been very active in the Americanism Committee of the American Legion. For this outstanding work, Pelton has been recognized in many state and local newspapers.

A two-party system works like the Constitution—it provides a system of checks and balances, each Party watching the other, making sure each fulfills its obligations.

KENNETH SADLER—Harrison County

Kenneth Sadler, a Gulfport Insurance man, is the Republican nominee for Post #2, Harrison County, Mississippi, House of Representatives.

Sadler, the President of the West Harrison County Young Republican Club, is typical of the young, energetic community leaders who are seeking office on the Republican ticket in Mississippi this fall.

"Our future in the South and for our nation lies in the Republican Party," the well-known businessman told a recent audience.

"The people of the South are ready to throw off the shackles of the Democratic Party," Sadler said. "They deserve and will receive something better than they have been getting from the Democratic Party."

WALLACE SHERWOOD

Jackson County

Wallace Sherwood, a Pascagoula advertising man, is the GOP nominee for House Post #2, Jackson County.

Sherwood is presently serving as the president of the Pascagoula Young Republican Club and was a recent delegate to the National Young Republican Convention, held in San Francisco.

CHARLES H. MEADOWS—Simpson County

Charles H. Meadows, a Magee radio executive, is the Republican nominee for the Mississippi House of Representatives from Simpson County.

Meadows, the former President of the Mendenhall Junior Chamber of Commerce, stated that the problems that face Mississippi in the next four years will be ones which will require great deliberation. "We must see that capable men are elected to our state legislature," Meadows said.

Meadows, a very active civic worker, feels that a two-party system is a "must" if Mississippi is to move ahead.

WILSON McKINSTRY—Tippah County

Wilson McKinstry, of Blue Mountain, is the Republican nominee for the House seat from Tippah County.

McKinstry said in making his announcement, "I have no apology for taking my stand with those able and courageous men who are already out in front in a fight to establish a two-party system in Mississippi."

Pledging his support to the Republican Party, McKinstry said that he believes that every Republican victory in the South will contribute to an end of the misrule of the present administration.

Stating that he wanted to go on the record as opposing the overthrow of constitutional government, McKinstry said that he held strong convictions on this matter and if elected would fight for a return to constitutional government.

Two-Party Drive Forges Ahead Throughout Dixie!

The 1962 elections were a turning point in the political history of the South.

Southern voters not only elected five new Republican Congressmen, but installed two-party officials in state, county and municipal offices throughout the South. The drive is in high gear, and, just this year, Republicans have chalked up six impressive triumphs, including:

Georgia—Elected still another State Senator.

Mississippi—Elected State Representative.

Florida—Elected 12 more state legislators, tripling GOP delegation.

South Carolina—Elected first Republican city councilmen in North Augusta.

Texas—Elected still another State Representative.

North Carolina—Swept High Point municipal elections, winning mayorship and all eight council seats.

JFK's Record of Deceit

"To plan a deficit . . . would increase the risk of inflationary pressure, damaging alike to our domestic economy and to our international balance of payments." So said John F. Kennedy a year ago. Earlier, during the 1960 campaign, he said "Of couse we Democrats have programs. . . . But they will not be wasteful programs."

Here's JFK's record of deceit on spending:

Fact #1—He submitted a $98,800,000,000 budget for the coming fiscal year, at the same time purposefully planning a $12,000,000,000 deficit.

Fact #2—Some examples of Kennedy spending for "productivity:" $2,100 to study behavior patterns of the barren-ground caribou; $16,800 to study social behavior in termites; $65,400 to study the behavior and ecology of the wantering albatross . . . etc. . . . etc. . . . etc. . . .

this report from the standpoint of the administration's program.

Sincerely,

LAWRENCE JONES
(For Robert E. Giles).

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 14, 1963.

Hon. WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
Chairman, Committee on Commerce,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter of May 9, 1963, enclosing for the comment of the Department of State a copy of S. 1459, a bill to authorize the President to proclaim regulations for preventing collisions at sea.

The Department of State wishes to express its support of the bill. The revision of the regulations for prevention of collisions was formulated by the Conference on Safety of Life at Sea, 1960. Representatives of the United States participated in the work of revision and the decision of the Conference to submit the revised rules for consideration by the governments which have accepted the present rules. The Conference also invited the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization, when substantial unanimity has been reached as to acceptance of the revised rules, to fix a date on and after which they shall be applied by the governments which have accepted them. Enactment of S. 1459 will permit submission of notice of acceptance by the United States. The procedure of formulation and submission to the Congress for authorization of the President to proclaim the regulations is the same as used for the adoption of the currently effective regulations which were prepared at the Conference on Safety of Life at Sea, 1948.

The Bureau of the Budget advises that from the standpoint of the administration's program there is no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,

FREDERICK G. DUTTON,
Assistant Secretary
(For the Secretary of State).

THE GENERAL COUNSEL OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, August 19, 1963.

Hon. WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
Chairman, Committee on Commerce,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to your request for the views of this Department on H.R. 6012, a bill to authorize the President to proclaim regulations for preventing collisions at sea.

Except for minor technical changes which are acceptable to the Department, H.R. 6012 is identical to a draft bill which the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives on April 8, 1963. The purpose of the proposed legislation, which was explained in more detail in the letters of transmittal, is to authorize the President to proclaim the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea which were approved by the Fourth International Conference on Safety of Navigation at Sea, 1960. These regulations, which have received the approval of 15 nations to date, would replace the 1948 international rules which were approved by a similar conference and which were incorporated into the statutory law of this country by the act of October 11, 1951 (65 Stat. 406). The proposed bill would not affect existing navigation rules applicable to the inland waters of the United States, the Great Lakes of North America, or rivers emptying into the Gulf of Mexico.

The Department urges early and favorable consideration of the proposed legislation by your committee.

Prior to the transmittal of the proposed legislation to the Congress, the Department was advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there was no objection to its submission from the standpoint of the administration's program.

Sincerely yours,

G. D'ANDELOT BELIN,
General Counsel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H.R. 6012) was read the third time, and passed.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION RECORDS CONCERNING GOV. GEORGE C. WALLACE, OF ALABAMA

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I have read in this morning's press that the senior Senator from Oregon is not one of the favorites of the Governor of Alabama. I wish to make it clear that a mutuality of disrespect exists between the two persons concerned. My record will speak for itself.

I say, most respectfully, that, in my judgment, Khrushchev does not have a more effective ally in the United States than the Governor of Alabama, because the course of action that the Governor of Alabama is following against human rights is typical of Communist strategy.

However, I have been informed from several sources this morning that the Governor of Alabama has raised some question concerning the psychiatric soundness of mind of the senior Senator from Oregon. I am perfectly willing to let my record on that score speak for itself. But I would have the RECORD at this time show the following information:

Official records concerning the Governor of Alabama will show that Governor Wallace entered active military service on October 20, 1942, and was honorably discharged on December 8, 1945, with the grade of sergeant in the Army Air Corps. His military specialty was that of flight engineer, with nine combat missions completed in B-29's—a brilliant military record of dedicated service to his country.

He participated in the offensive against Japan and earned the Air Medal plus Area and Good Conduct Medals.

During service, he was hospitalized from April 1, 1943, to June 3, 1943, for acute cerebral spinal meningitis. He was also hospitalized in September 1945 for severe anxiety state, chronic, manifested by tension states, anxiety attacks, anorexia, and loss of weight. It does not appear that he was disciplined for any infractions while in service.

He filed claim for compensation in June 1946 and in December 1946 was granted service-connected disability for psychoneurosis, for which an evaluation of 10 percent was assigned.

He was last examined by the VA in November 1956 when he gave his age as 37, and stated he was married, had three children, and was occupied as a circuit judge. He was tense, restless, and ill at ease, frequently drummed the desk with his fingers, changed position frequently, sighed occasionally, and showed a tendency to stammer, resulting in the diagnosis of anxiety reaction. The 10-percent rating was continued.

His accreditive representative is the American Legion.

Since Governor Wallace has not been examined since November 1956 it would seem to be appropriate for him to volunteer to be examined at this time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business for the consideration of the nomination on the Executive Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination on the Executive Calendar.

FEDERAL MARITIME COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ashton C. Barrett, of Mississippi, to be a member of the Federal Maritime Commission for the term expiring June 30, 1967.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the confirmation of the nomination?

Mr. GRUENING. There is.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, there is objection. I only wish that I might be here supporting the nomination of Mr. Ashton C. Barrett instead of opposing it. But based upon the evidence, presented during 2 days of hearings before the Commerce Committee, to which the nomination of Mr. Barrett for another term on the Federal Maritime Commission was sent by the President, I cannot agree with the majority of that committee that confirmation should follow.

The individual views expressed by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], are set forth in Executive Report No. 2 as are my individual views on this nomination.

Mr. President, Mr. Barrett testified before the committee on July 12 and again on July 19 of this year. The record of hearings has been printed. The transcript of the hearings constitutes a rather remarkable document in many ways. It deserves the reading of every Senator.

Mr. Barrett is a resident of Mississippi. He was warmly supported by my two friends the Senators from that State [Mr. EASTLAND and Mr. STENNIS]. They recommended him highly. I know him to be a gracious gentleman, a kind gentleman, and a very real gentleman. My objection is only based on the ground that I do not believe he is qualified for the position for which he was named. I think the evidence on that score is amply set forth in the printed record of the hearings.

My colleague [Mr. GRUENING] and I have a very special interest in the opera-

PRIVATE TALK BETWEEN PRESIDENT KENNEDY AND SEN. RUSSELL AT WHITE HOUSE
Two Men Walked Away from Medal Presentation Ceremony for Discussion

Russell Marks 30th Year in U.S. Senate

FEATURE Page

By JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (AP)—Sen. Richard Brevard Russell, D-Ga., rounds out 30 years of Senate service Saturday, primed to meet what he calls a new assault on that body's constitutional traditions.

Russell, 65, seasoned in a dozen previous filibuster battles, captains Southern opponents of civil rights measures ready to talk to death a proposed rules change.

Bipartisan liberals bent on giving a majority the right to shut off debate are seeking to change the rule which requires that two-thirds of those voting approve such action. Russell sees this as a threat to the Senate's claim to being the last bastion of free expression on earth.

"IN MY 30 years' service, I think I have made some contributions toward maintaining the Senate as the greatest stabilizing force in our government in preserving our Constitution," he said. "I hope to continue doing so."

To the public, generally, Russell appears to be more of a champion of a sectional view than of the Constitution. But the Russell who operates behind the scenes is completely a "Senate man" who moves in a broad spectrum of national affairs.

Those who disagree with Russell's views — particularly his espousal of segregationist policies — admire him as a gentleman and respect him as a tactician.

Russell is chairman of the Armed Services Committee and is a power on two of the Senate's other most important committees — Appropriations and Space. He is a member of the Senate-House Atomic Energy Committee.

FROM THIS vantage point, he has a finger on almost every government decision, including foreign policy matters which involve the Pentagon, as most of them do these days. He is one of the select few in Congress briefed on Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) activities.

Administration leaders from President Kennedy down have learned that Russell is a quick man with a "no" if he doesn't like what is going on.

When Kennedy briefed congressional leaders at the White House before he announced his quarantine action against Cuba, Russell spoke up for a more drastic course. He said that while the quarantine plan might any action he felt must be undertaken.

Chairman J. William Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee supported Russell's stand for an invasion.

The President told the group that he was going on television in 45 minutes and already had sent a copy of his speech to British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan.

"Well," Russell exploded, "if you had told us that before I wouldn't have wasted my time raising the issue."

Because of his demonstrated independence and his long experience, Russell exerts wide influence on the course of legislation. He is a key member of the Democratic Policy Committee which passes on all bills before they reach the Senate floor.

When he was the Senate majority leader, Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson used to "check it with Dick" before final decisions were made. Democratic leader Mike Mansfield of Montana follows the same practice.

THIS IS because the Georgian represents, as clearly as any

As he has grown older, the man who supported Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal with votes for Social Security, the National Recovery Act, and the Tennessee Valley Authority has become more conservative.

In earlier days Russell wrote the first version of farm parity payments, supported federal aid to education and fought for universal military training. One of the accomplishments of which he is most proud is the origination of the school-lunch program.

Because he had become the outstanding spokesman for the South, Russell — who wasn't even there—got 263 votes in the 1948 Democratic Convention for the presidential nomination that went to Harry S. Truman. Russell declined to join party bolters and stayed regular.

IN 1952 Russell went after the presidential nomination full tilt. His 292 convention votes out of about 1,200 merely served to point out that he was regarded as too sectional to be the nominee.

Except when Civil Rights is the issue, this feeling doesn't exist about Russell's legislative of them do these days. He is one of the select few in Congress briefed on Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) activities.

Administration leaders from President Kennedy down have learned that Russell is a quick man with a "no" if he doesn't like what is going on.

When Kennedy briefed congressional leaders at the White House before he announced his quarantine action against Cuba, Russell spoke up for a more drastic course. He said that while the quarantine plan might get the offensive missiles out, the only way to topple Castro was for the United States to strike in force.

"I think we should go in there and clean them out," he told Kennedy.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk protested that the President could not order a "sneak attack" such as the Japanese made on Pearl Harbor.

RUSSELL replied heatedly that Kennedy had put Castro on notice in two speeches that the United States would act to prevent any aggressive buildup. He pointed to a resolution Kennedy had signed which gave the President Congress' backing for lation. He is a key member of the Democratic Policy Committee which passes on all bills before they reach the Senate floor.

When he was the Senate majority leader, Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson used to "check it with Dick" before final decisions were made. Democratic leader Mike Mansfield of Montana follows the same practice.

THIS IS because the Georgian represents, as clearly as any one man can, the brand of conservatism that has linked Southern Democrats with Republicans in a coalition that often controls Senate action on controversial measures.

REMARKS OF SENATOR RUSSELL AT FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION AT JASPER, GA., 1963

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD some remarks I made in the beautiful little city of Jasper, Ga., in the mountains of north Georgia, to a group of people who had gathered to commemorate the Fourth of July, Independence Day.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF SENATOR RICHARD B. RUSSELL AT FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION, JASPER, GA., 1963

We are gathered here today to commemorate one of the most significant incidents of all human history. This is American Independence Day, the birthday of the greatest, the richest, the most powerful Nation of the earth.

I sometimes feel that we do not take this day and the event it commemorates as seriously as we should. Many seemingly consider it only as a paid holiday. Millions of fine Americans have no roots that run back to July 4, 1776, and must muster their enthusiasm solely from the history book. I am sure that in this audience there are many who have had handed down by word of mouth many of the legends of that thrilling period and can remember many stories that they heard in childhood from the old folks about the experiences and achievements of those of their blood.

Sir Winston Churchill, the world's greatest living statesman, said of the event we celebrate that "The great principles of freedom and the rights of man which are the joint inheritance of the English-speaking world and which through Magna Carta, the Bill of Rights, habeas corpus, trial by jury and the English common law find their most famous expression in the Declaration of Independence."

The Declaration was followed by the adoption of that written charter of our liberties, the Constitution of the United States. Another outstanding Englishman, one of Churchill's predecessors, Sir William Gladstone, said of our Constitution that it was the most remarkable document produced by the human intellect at a single stroke.

We take great pride in these two documents, but let us never forget that the eloquent words of the writers only found vitality when fertilized by the blood of the fighters.

It is appropriate that we meet on July Fourth in the city of Jasper and in the county of Pickens, for these were the names of two of the notable heroes of our successful Revolution.

William Jasper enlisted in a regiment of the Continental line and was assigned to the defense of Fort Moultrie in Charleston Harbor. During the fierce bombardment by the British Fleet in June 1776, the flag was shot from its staff. Jasper, in the face of deadly fire, attached the flag to a cannon sponge staff and finally remounted it upon the ramparts of the fort.

For this act of outstanding bravery, he was presented with a sword and offered a commission. He declined the commission to accept a dangerous assignment as a scout.

He died a hero's death while planting the colors of his regiment upon Spring Hill redoubt in the ill-fated assault on Savannah by French and American forces under D'Estaing and Lincoln in 1779.

Andrew Pickens was one of the great partisan leaders of the Revolution, who so inspired the confidence of the people that he was always able to raise considerable forces. His greatest victory occurred when the patriots under his command and that of Col. John Clark destroyed the British and Tory Army under Colonel Boyd at Kettle Creek in Wilkes County, Ga.

It is unnecessary to go into greater detail of the 7-year night of sacrifice and suffering which gave force and effect to American freedom. No two soldiers more truly symbolize the spirit of the Revolution than Sgt. William Jasper and Gen. Andrew Pickens.

Our Nation is less than 200 years old and two centuries are but a breath in the story of the human family. In that relatively short period of time, 13 weak and struggling colonies scattered along the Atlantic seaboard have crossed the continent to the Pacific, accepted Hawaii and Alaska into the sisterhood of States and developed into a greater and more powerful Nation than pictured in the wildest dreams of the most optimistic of the Founding Fathers.

The United States withstood the shock of the greatest and most destructive fratricidal strife of history, a war that left one-fourth of the Nation in ashes and desolation with the finest of its human seed corn buried on a hundred fields of battle. We have emerged triumphant from a number of other wars, including two great world conflicts. As the predominant factor in bringing victory we have been inescapably cast in the role of world leadership. We have survived and made progress despite the truth in Will Rogers' homespun statement that the United States "Has never lost a war nor won a conference."

We have withstood the effects of our own folly in scattering our national wealth and resources recklessly about the earth, though this largess has placed us at the mercy of our beneficiaries who hold enough dollar credits to deplete Fort Knox of gold and to deprive our paper currency of the support of any precious metal.

Providence has indeed been good to us. By adhering to our Constitution and the principles of morality and honesty of our Founders, we have created on earth a new way of life. Call it what you please—the free enterprise system, the capitalistic system, or the American way of life—it has generated a dynamic force that has moved life on this earth forward further in the 180 years of our existence than it had ever moved in any other 2,000 years.

It has given us a civilization which has all but abolished poverty and enables 6 percent of the people of the earth to own more automobiles, television sets, washing machines, and other laborsaving and pleasure devices than are owned by the other 94 percent of those who inhabit this planet.

Our system holds out to all of our people the incentive of the right to own and control private property. This has been one of the great instruments of our stability. Another inalienable right of the American people has been the right to choose one's associates and to me this is one of the most important of all of our inalienable rights.

THE DANGER FROM WITHOUT

The only external threat to our peace, prosperity and security is the consuming ambition of international communism to achieve world domination and thereby to bring the Iron Curtain down around the last single inhabitant of this globe.

It is unnecessary for me to discuss with you the difference between the American and the Communist philosophies of government. The difference between spirituality and atheism, between freedom and slavery, between the right to own property and of free movement as against being chained to the wheel of the state is too clear to require elaboration. Our cold war adversary has no regard for the principles of honor, decency and justice that we have been taught to respect. They teach that the lie is noble if spoken to promote world communism.

By sacrificing the desires of their people to participate in the blessings of modern-day civilization, the men in the Kremlin have devoted the great resources of the part of the world that they control to building military might. They have forgone all else in order to arm themselves to the teeth with destructive nuclear weapons and powerful engines to deliver them through space.

The only language that world communism understands is the language of strength, of power, of might. In order to avoid either slavery or the terrors of a nuclear war, we have sought to maintain an American striking force so destructive as to deter aggression against the free world.

Despite the admitted achievements of the Soviet in launching both men, women and vehicles into space, there is little doubt in my mind that today we have the military strength to completely destroy the Iron Curtain countries even if they were to strike us.

The maintenance of this military might is most expensive, as all of you taxpayers well know. I believe, however, that the American people are willing to make any necessary contributions to maintain military superiority to defend our priceless freedoms and the way of life that is the envy of the world.

INTERNAL DANGERS

A British political scientist, Lord McCauley, after studying our form of government said, in 1854, that the American Republic would be as fearfully plundered and laid waste in the 20th century as the Roman Empire was in the 5th and 6th centuries, but the Huns and vandals would be generated within our own institutions.

We undoubtedly are confronted with the danger of so riveting our attention to threats from abroad that we will neglect to maintain the internal bulwarks necessary to our existence as a free people.

This Nation achieved its greatness by adhering to the political philosophy of Thomas Jefferson. Jefferson taught that the best governed people were the least governed and that if man would protect his freedoms, the powers of government, particularly the control of the police power, should be locally maintained. Out of this grew the doctrines of States rights and local self-government which were accepted without question during the years we were achieving our greatness.

Today, we are faced with a concentrated attack upon the philosophy of local self-government. An insatiable Central Government places the hand of Federal power on nearly every activity of man and would concentrate all control over the daily lives, actions, movements and property rights of our people in a gigantic, impersonal, monolithic, centralized government on the banks of the Potomac.

In my opinion, the greatest danger which confronts the freedoms won by the sword and safeguarded by the Constitution is in the acceptance by the American people of the constantly reiterated suggestion that they can get something for nothing if they will only place all of their liberties and all that they have in one pair of hands.

On this day above all others, let us review the lessons of the past. The shores of history are littered with the wreckage of states that achieved greatness but were destroyed when the people listened to the siren song of those—often well intentioned—who told them they were better custodians of the rights, liberties and property of the people than the people themselves.

BILL TO DESTROY RIGHTS

We have today pending in Washington a bill masquerading under the false title of civil rights which, if enacted, would destroy innumerable rights that we enjoy only because heroes of the past were willing to shed their blood to secure them.

Time will not permit me to deal with this bill in detail, but I will discuss one or two of its most evil features.

One provision of the bill levels an all but mortal blow at the right of a man who owns property to decide how that property shall be used. Under the definition of civil rights in the bill proposed by the President, no person operating a business, whether large or small, would have any right to select those that he will invite to do business with him. In the name of equality, this bill would give to one person the right to compel another to do business with him against his will. I challenge anyone to find any equality in such a situation.

To break it down into simple terms, the President's bill defines civil rights as requiring the owner of a small cafe to take down his sign, "we reserve the right to refuse service to anyone," and accept all comers unless he is to be subjected to the harsh penalties of Federal power.

This distorted concept of equality means that, if you are a barber or operate a beauty shop, you have no right to invite those you wish to receive as customers but, while you are denied that right, any person may present himself and demand that you cut his hair or administer a beauty treatment.

Under the President's bill, the operator of a motion picture show, a motel, a hotel or a swimming pool must completely integrate on the desire of any person who presents himself despite the policies of the business that has been built through the efforts of an individual and has succeeded through his ingenuity.

Under this misnamed bill everyone operating a business would live in constant fear of the Attorney General, the FBI, the hundreds of U.S. marshals under his command and, indeed, the Armed Forces of the United States, if necessary, who might descend upon your premises to compel you to receive unwanted customers without regard to the effect upon property rights or your livelihood.

Instead of this being a civil rights program, it is a threatened crime against the whole philosophy of liberty for which our Government stands. In the dark days of the Reconstruction, such a bill was passed to punish the South, but the Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional in 1873.

Also mind that in July 1959, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit held that a person "operating a private restaurant was at liberty to deal with such persons as he might select and that the commerce clause and the 13th and 14th amendments of the Federal Constitution did not operate to prevent proprietors from excluding Negroes."

But law and justice seem to mean nothing when votes are scented.

All of us understand how even those in high position feel called upon to play politics at times, but I assert that the administration in this case has gone beyond any reasonable bounds.

When white citizens protest against the Supreme Court decision in the school cases, they are immediately told that those decisions are "the law of the land" and that, if they protest too vigorously or violently, the armed might of the United States will be summoned to subdue them. Our Negro citizens, who are conducting daily demonstrations against the "law of the land" as established by the Supreme Court in the civil rights cases in 1883, are encouraged to increase the number and violence of their demonstrations by the belief that the Attorney General, the FBI, the hundreds of U.S. marshals, and the Armed Forces of the United States will protect them in their actions. The President of the United States cites these demonstrations as reasons for a legislative stampede to change this "law of the land." He solemnly presents that all this is done in the name of American equality and justice.

THE GENOCIDE PROVISION

The genocide clause of the bill which would permit the President or one of his appointees, if they decided that there was any discrimination in one case, to withhold the payment of veterans benefits, social security payments, aid to dependent children, to the blind, to the old and helpless within an entire State is the most inhuman suggestion that has been made in legislation in the history of this Republic.

For studied cruelty, this genocide clause goes beyond the plans devised by Charles Sumner and Thad Stevens in the days of Reconstruction. They only proposed to shoot the able-bodied men who had borne arms or had participated in the Government of the Confederate States. The genocide provision of the administration's bill could make certain the starvation of the old, the sick, the blind, dependent children, the war veteran with the scars on his body received in defending his country and could even deny social security benefits to those who had contributed to the fund for a long period of time.

Lest I am charged with extreme statements, I would point out that this construction was placed upon this provision by the President himself when the sadistic group called the Civil Rights Commission recommended that he withhold all Federal programs from the State of Mississippi. I quote from the President's letter to the chairman of this group under date of April 19 of this year:

"Another difficulty is that in many instances the withholding of funds would serve to further disadvantage those that I know the Commission would want to aid. For example, hundreds of thousands of Negroes in Mississippi receive social security, veterans, welfare, school lunch and other benefits from Federal programs—any elimination or reduction of such programs obviously would fall alike on all within the State and in some programs perhaps even more heavily upon Negroes."

The President inferred in this letter that he might withhold these funds but for the adverse effect it might have on the Negroes in Mississippi. However, in a press conference on the same day, in answer to a question asked on his appearance before the American Society of Newspaper Editors, he made this statement:

"I don't have the power to cut off the aid in the way proposed by the Civil Rights Commission and I would think that it would probably be unwise to give the President of the United States that kind of power."

What caused him to change his mind between his constitutionally correct position of April 19 and his abominable civil rights message of June 19?

Let us throw the mantle of charity around the President's about-face by assuming that this is the part of the Presidents' message that Representative ADAM CLAYTON POWELL claims to have written and that the President, in his frantic haste to pass the bill, did not realize the inconsistency of his position.

EXCESS POWER VESTED IN ATTORNEY GENERAL

Time will not permit me to discus in detail other vicious provisions of the President's bill. I will say in passing that it proposes to vest in the President's brother, the Attorney General of the United States, an appointive officer, greater powers over the lives of our people than have ever been possessed by any President heretofore. It would empower him to assemble a veritable army of lawyers to bring suits at his discretion in any school case.

The President said jokingly that he appointed his brother to be Attorney General in order that he might get on-the-job-training. It must not be overlooked that the President's brother is his political right arm and considers every problem under the magnifying glass of raw political power and its use.

I have never known any elective official, much less an appointed bureaucrat that I would trust with such power and the Attorney General to date has certainly not demonstrated any unusual qualities that would entitle him to be the first appointed official to be vested with powers over our people that are more far-reaching than any that history has known since the suppression of the doctrine of divine right of kings.

This bill is ten times a greater provocation than that offered the South before our forebears undertook to separate from the rest of the Nation in the 1860's.

We will not repeat the mistake of our Fathers by undertaking to secede for two reasons—one practical, the other sentimental. As for the practical reason, the rest of the Nation still outnumbers us about 5 to 1 and we found out through bitter experience that one Southerner could not whip five Yankees. In addition, this time the Feds have the atomic bomb.

The best reason is that Southerners have contributed to the majestic growth of this country by our toil and genius and to its preservation by shedding our blood whenever called upon to defend this land. It is our country in more ways than one and we will strive to preserve it.

So let us pray that we may face these internal attacks upon our system with the resolution and courage that inspired William Jasper and Andrew Pickens.

As one of your representatives in Washington, I propose to fight these outrageous measures with all of the power of my being. If we are overwhelmed, you will find me in the last ditch.

Let us invoke the assistance of the Supreme Guardian that has looked after us thus far along the road with the prayer that He will see us through this danger as in times past when our fathers sought guidance on bended knees.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I should like the RECORD to show that I have just returned from Atlanta, Ga., where I attended some meetings yesterday. There I found the people of the great State of Georgia, which the Senator represents in part in the Senate, completely together in the sentiment which he expressed in the speech he delivered there. If I were he I would feel that the State was standing completely undivided with respect to the position he took. I congratulate him upon that fact.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank my distinguished friend from Florida. However, I believe I can point to a number of places where his generous statements would not completely apply within the State.

CONGRESSIONAL SERVICE OF HON. ROBERT F. SIKES, A REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE STATE OF FLORIDA

WASHINGTON TO GEORGIA

A recent television discussion between Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and myself concerning the railroad crisis was broadcast by WAGA-TV. This was another in a series which began with an interview of Under Secretary of State Averell Harriman, which appeared on WSB-TV. The next in the series will be an interview with Sargent Shriver, Director of the Peace Corps.

A BID FOR AERO-SPACE INDUSTRY

A group representing the Forward Atlanta Program of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, will visit Washington on August 27 to meet with the Georgia delegation. The purpose is to formulate an aggressive and co-ordinated program to obtain space-oriented industry for Atlanta.

I am vitally interested in the effort, for this type of industry means good jobs and good salaries for the people of the Fifth District. All of us here are anxious to offer whatever services we can from Washington.

TAX BILL TO BE CONSIDERED SOON

The Ways and Means Committee has finally hammered out a tax measure which should come to the House for consideration in the next few weeks.

The bill will come to the Floor under what is known as a "closed rule." This means that the bill cannot be amended and must be accepted in whole, rejected in whole, or returned to Committee.

I am in the process now of reviewing the Committee reports. The decision which must be reached is two-fold: First, in regard to the revisions, the good measures must be weighed against some of the questionable changes. Second, all Members must be concerned about a larger deficit as a result of rate cuts. Obviously, a cut will stimulate our economy. On the other hand, any increased deficit must be guaged against the possible adverse effect upon the soundness of our economy.

WHAT'S NEXT FOR RAPID TRANSIT?

There is little hope for the passage of a mass transit bill in this Session of Congress. Although several days of hearings have been held by the Rules Committee, H.R. 3881 will probably remain before it until after action on taxes, civil rights and other proposals.

It's probably just as well, for I am afraid it would face hard going in the House. As you recall, the Senate has passed a Mass Transit Bill, with both of Georgia's senators voting for it.

Perhaps the next Session will prove a better time for this much needed program for Atlanta's future.

HOW ARE WE DOING?

This cheery greeting came in the mail last week:

"Congressman Weltner: Wouldn't it be ghastly if the electorate were literate and could understand what the quacks, charlatans and shysters that compose Congress were doing with their money? Be of good cheer, however, this is not and will not be the case. Next to the Presidency, Congress is our most egregious disgrace."

THE NEWSLETTER AND THE FUTURE

This Newsletter will be published monthly. We have added 1,000 names to the mailing list since the first issue. Will you please send me, as soon as possible, the names and addresses of anyone you feel might be interested in receiving the Newsletter?

I would also appreciate comments and suggestions from you concerning the content.

HOUSE VOTES TAX REDUCTION

The "tax cut", H.R. 8363, passed the House on September 25 by a vote of 271 to 155. I voted for the bill. The cut will release over $11 billion to the private sector of our economy. These billions can put the nation's industrial complex to work at full capacity. They can finance a frontal attack on the problem of unemployment through economic expansion.

They can stimulate the growth of the Gross National Product.

I have a few copies of a report which explains the major provisions of the tax bill. If you would like a copy, please write me.

Now, our bill goes to the Senate for consideration. It looks as if it will be December before it comes out of the Senate Finance Committee. Let's hope it will be passed before New Year's Day.

EXPANSION OF ATLANTA OFFICE SERVICES

Sara V. Craig, who has served in the Washington Office, will return to Atlanta and assume primary responsibility for our District Office. Mike Burns, Legislative Aide in the District Office, will continue in that capacity.

The "casework" will be one of Sara's primary duties. I also plan for her to act as an additional direct contact from me to the people of the District. The District Office will be fully aware of everything going on in the Washington Office. Consequently, it will serve as a readily available source of information to everyone at home.

The District Office is located in Room 327 in the Old Post Office Building. Phone 523-5041. Sara and Mike are ready to serve you.

TELEVISION PROGRAMS

The first television programs from Washington were two-minute news reports. In mid-summer, it seemed that longer programs, featuring prominent men in Government, would allow depth presentations of subjects of interest.

Since taking this new tack, we have presented interviews with W. Averill Harriman, W. Willard Wirtz, Hale Boggs, and R. Sargent Shriver. Co-operation has been heartening, and broadcasters at home (WETV, WAII, WSB-TV, and WAGA-TV) have given freely of time to what is, I hope, a useful public service.

The next program is scheduled for WSB-TV (Channel 2) on Saturday, October 5, immediately after the World Series Game at approximately 5:30 p.m. Secretary of Commerce Luther H. Hodges will be my guest. The discussion will be one of vital interest ... Atlanta and international trade.

I would like your suggestions for programs and people for the future.

MAJOR LEGISLATION SINCE THE LAST NEWSLETTER

A reader suggested that the Newsletter include a resume of completed legislative action. Such a recap will become a regular part of our report.

8/23 - Foreign Assistance Act of 1963 (H.R. 7885)

I voted to recommit this bill to the Committee on Foreign Affairs (Roll No. 132) with direction to reduce the authorization. This was, in effect, a cut of approximately one half billion dollars from the Committee's bill of $4.08 billion. The motion to recommit (the "cut") passed by a vote of 222 to 188.

When the time came to either pass or defeat the Foreign Assistance Act of 1963, I voted for it (Roll No. 133).

9/10 - The Mental Retardation Facilities and Community Mental Health Centers Construction Act of 1963 (S. 1576)

The bill provides for $70 million in matching funds over a three-year period for the construction of research centers and facilities for the mentally retarded; $115 million in matching funds for the construction of community mental health centers for a two-year period beginning in July, 1965; and $53 million for a three-year period for the training of teachers of mentally retarded and other handicapped children. I voted for the bill. It passed 335 to 19.

9/11 - To create a select committee of the House to investigate research programs conducted by or sponsored by the departments and agencies of the Federal Government (H. Res. 504)

I voted yea in the hopes of bringing order to what might become chaos (Roll No. 146). The resolution passed 336 to 0.

9/17 - The Fallout Shelter Construction Act (H.R. 8200)

This is a bill to amend the Federal Civil Defense Act of 1950, as amended, to provide shelters in Federal structures, and to authorize payment toward the construction or modification of approved shelters in schools and other non-profit institutions. The bill passed the House by a voice vote. I voted aye.

A FALLOW LEGISLATIVE FALL

October is the month when "the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock". Harvest is in, and Indian summer comes with days of rest before winter's ordeals.

In Washington, there will be days of rest -- but hardly because the "harvest" is in. The Area Redevelopment Act, the Rapid Transit Bill, the Cotton Bill, the Quality Stabilization Act, the Youth Employment Bill, and others are all languishing in the Rules Committee with no sign of reaching the Floor for weeks.

The Civil Rights Bill is still before a subcommittee of Judiciary, and yet to face the Rules Committee before it reaches the Floor. Much of the original Omnibus Education Bill (H.R. 3000) is awaiting action of the Education and Labor Committee. The federal pay bills have a long row to hoe in the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

October in Washington is not the time of harvest ... it is a fallow fall.

Sincerely,

Charles Longstreet Weltner

"CONTINUITY WITHOUT CONFUSION" -- PRESIDENT LYNDON B. JOHNSON

In the tragedy of President Kennedy's death the greatness of our system of government perhaps has been overlooked. Yet, in viewing the unrest and violence that attends changes of power throughout most of the world, I have a feeling of deep pride in the manner in which the affairs of this Nation achieved "continuity without confusion". Democracy and orderly process are instilled in the fiber of our Nation. And, notwithstanding the assassination and the deplorable incidents that followed in its wake, there was never one instant when the world had occasion to doubt the continuity of America's programs at home and abroad.

Orderly succession of power is a hallmark of greatness for any nation. That it exists so firmly and surely today is cause for comfort to every American during this period of national mourning.

MORE ABOUT COTTON

The Cooley Cotton Bill passed the House last week, December 4th. At one time, I had considered supporting this bill as the best means that might be presented for ending two price cotton. However, as more facts were disclosed concerning the actual operation of this quarter billion dollar package, I became convinced that it is simply unsound. True, it might furnish the basis for a substitution in the Senate of the Talmadge Bill -- which I wholeheartedly support. Yet, that decision must rest with the Senate, not with the House. Accordingly, I voted against the bill.

Two price cotton is an evil which threatens an important industry employing hundreds of thousands of people. It must be ended. But its demise must come from a sound program. Let us hope that the lengthy and heated debate in the House prior to passage of the Cooley Bill will disclose the necessity of adopting the Talmadge Bill. Its sound principles can redeem the agricultural programs from the quagmires of existing legislation.

THE JANUARY NEWSLETTER

This is the last Newsletter of 1963 and of this Session of Congress. The first Newsletter of next year, which will be published shortly after the first of January, will review the activity (and lack of activity!) of the first Session of the 88th Congress.

If you know of anyone who would be interested in receiving this review and the monthly Newsletters for next year, please send names and addresses.

A BID FOR A $56 MILLION NASA CENTER

Congressman John W. Davis and I have invited a team of Georgia businessmen, scientists, educators, and industrial developers to appear before a select NASA Committee in a bid to locate a $56 million electronic research center in Georgia.

Representatives of Georgia Tech, the Forward Atlanta Program, and the electronics industry will present Metropolitan Atlanta's case before a NASA fact-finding committee on December 16.

The Fifth District has the potential of becoming an important center of aerospace and electronics industry. Economic development of this kind means more jobs and better paychecks.

LEGISLATION DURING NOVEMBER

11/14/63 A Bill to implement the International Coffee Agreement of 1962, H.R. 8864. This bill would provide, in effect, for a coffee cartel to stabilize South American production. This means, I believe, higher coffee prices for American consumers. The measure passed the House 182 - 144. I voted "nay".

11/18/63 Appropriation for military construction for 1964, H.R. 9139. Provides $1,562,964,000, which is $403,436,000 less than the budget request. The bill passed 332-5. I voted "aye".

11/19/63 Public Works Appropriation, H.R. 9140. The bill passed without amendment, 358 to 27. I voted "aye". This bill did not include the Chattahoochee River planning funds or the Peachtree Creek Flood Control planning funds.

I was, of course, disappointed that neither of these important projects were included in the House bill.

However, Senator Russell was able to include both projects in the Senate version. If they are retained in Conference, both projects can be under way in 1964. Senator Russell deserves great credit for his effective work.

11/20/63 S-777, to extend the life of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. I voted "nay". It passed the House 252 to 133. It is necessary and advisable to carry on study and research in the field of arms control. However, I have not been impressed with the work of this agency since its creation in 1961. Further, I see no need for a separate agency to handle a subject which is properly the responsibility of the Defense and State Departments.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITY

On December 2, Dr. Ernest Ogram of Georgia State College and Dale Henson of the Atlanta World Trade Council attended a presentation in Hartford, Connecticut, and Worcester, Massachusetts, of a new international trade expansion program. The program will bring together business, labor, and university people in a continuing effort of work shops and research to assist the small businessman in international trade matters. We hope a seminar similar to the program in New England can be held in Atlanta early in 1964.

Also, in the international field, we have sent to the Ambassadors of Mexico, Switzerland, Japan, Italy, Belgium, Netherlands, Canada, and Venezuela, invitations to examine potentials for professional consulates and commercial attaches in the Fifth District. Accompanying our letter was a presentation prepared by the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce pointing out Atlanta's advantages as a location for professional foreign representation. Letters from Mayor Ivan Allen, the Atlanta World Trade Council, The Foreign Trade Association, and other interested groups were included.

HOME AT LAST!

December 20th is still our scheduled adjournment date. I expect to be home until New Year's Day. Call me if I can be of service.

Sincerely,

Charles Longstreet Weltner

A Falsehood To Be Exposed---

Gov. Ross Barnett's picture, slightly smudged, peered from page six of the paper. The camera had caught him with his head thrown slightly back and a restrained, almost shy smile on his face.

There was a story beneath the picture. It quoted the governor of Mississippi as saying citizens should be allowed to determine "whether or not they want their schools under the control of the federal government and the federal courts."

This was a surprising statement coming from a man who is governor of a state where a great many citizens have been, and are, denied the right to vote. The hopeful, however, will be encouraged by it. That the governor of Mississippi is asking for citizens to vote is news. (A smaller percentage of people vote in Mississippi than in any state in the union.) The picture was just a head and shoulders view. It was not possible to see whether the governor had his fingers crossed.

Shy Smile

Gov. Barnett's shy little smile was in keeping with the story. His suggestion that the people be allowed to vote whether or not they want the federal government to control their schools was, as he must have known, a fraud. It was said either out of ignorance or with a wish to deceive and further inflame a people desperately in need of truth. There are people in Mississippi who know, and serve, the truth. There are thousands more willing to know it. That a governor should issue such a statement lacking in any shred of truth is a sad commentary on him and his state. The federal government is not now controlling the University of Mississippi. Nor is it controlling any school, college, or university, anywhere in the nation. The Eisenhower government did not control education in Little Rock. Neither the present administration, nor any of the future, will wish or seek to control had his fingers crossed.

Gov. Barnett's shy little smile was in keeping with the story. His suggestion that the people be allowed to vote whether or not they want the federal government to control their schools was, as he must have known, a fraud. It was said either out of ignorance or with a wish to deceive and further inflame a people desperately in need of truth. There are people in Mississippi who know, and serve, the truth. There are thousands more willing to know it. That a governor should issue such a statement lacking in any shred of truth is a sad commentary on him and his state. The federal government is not now controlling the University of Mississippi. Nor is it controlling any school, college, or university, anywhere in the nation. The Eisenhower government did not control education in Little Rock. Neither the present administration, nor any of the future, will wish or seek to control education.

The government of the United States is not interfering in the slightest in the administration of educational processes of the University of Mississippi—or any other school. The university may hire and dismiss faculty members. It may set levels of admission. (Those of the University of Mississippi, because of legislative enactments, are the lowest in the nation.) The university may order its teachers to teach that the world is round, flat or square. It can set any salary limit it wishes. It is in full control.

Citizens' Rights

There is just one thing it may not do—it may not deny the right of entry to any qualified citizen of the state because of race, color, or religion. The Constitution of the United States imposes this on the State of Mississippi—not the federal government. There is no interference with control of educational processes. The federal government does not in any sense control the university.

It so happens that defiance of law and courts, as agitated by the governor, the newspapers, and the White Citizens Councils, made it necessary to have federal marshals there to protect the life and constitutional rights of a citizen. The government certainly would like to withdraw the marshals. The nation pretty well understands this. Millions of people, through the medium of television, have seen and heard the governor, public officials, and students of the school and know that this protection is necessary. They saw and heard, for example, the students say that if James Meredith remained there someone "would get him." The students discussed this possible murder as casually as if they were talking about a football game. "Don't get me wrong," said one. "It won't be my buddy or me, but someone will get him." That this could be said at a state university, in the 20th century, in a nation which boasts of its democracy and its equal rights of all citizens, is a commentary on Gov. Barnett, his associates, and the power structure of his state.

It is a shameful thing for Gov. Barnett to add to anger, to multiply tensions, when his state, its economy, and its future are in desperate need of truth so that it may proceed to subtract from violence and live up to the Constitution and the pledge to the flag —"One nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

First GOP Is Elected To Mississippi's Assembly

MERIDIAN, Miss. (AP)—Lewis L. McAllister became the first Republican elected to the Mississippi General Assembly since Reconstruction days Tuesday.

McAllister, 30, an accountant, polled 3,086 votes in a runoff to 2,298 for his Democratic opponent, Dennis Goldman, 26, an attorney, in a race for the House of Representatives from Lauderdale County.

McAllister and Goldman, one of three Democrats seeking the post, ran first and second in the Feb. 5 election. The election was called to choose a successor to former Rep. Natie Caraway who resigned when he moved to Jackson to join a law firm.

"This is an indication of a trend toward a two-party state and a two-party South," said McAllister, who described himself as a Goldwater Republican.

MERIDIAN, Miss., Feb. 20 (UPI) — L. L. (Mack) McAllister, chairman of the state Young Republicans Club, Tuesday became the first Republican in almost 40 years to be elected to the Misisippi legislature.

McAllister, on the basis of unofficial returns, defeated Democrat Dennis Goldman, 3,066 votes to 2,298, in a special election for a seat in the House of Representatives.

Running as "an individual," McAllister led a five-man field by 1,400 votes in an earlier election. The other three Democrats threw their suport to Goldman in the two-man runoff.

Barnett Yields, Aids Sheriffs

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 23—The fifth special legislative session of Gov. Ross Barnett's four-year administration, which ends in January, convenes Monday to implement Mississippi's first reapportionment since 1890. There have been two regular biennial assemblies since the governor took office in January of 1960.

Although the upcoming session is primarily for enactment of legislation setting up "posts" in counties with more than one representative, Gov. Barnett has included another subject, legislation to permit county sheriffs, who double as tax collectors, to seek immediate re-election and be placed on a salary.

Under the present statute, the dual officeholders must "lay out" four years before becoming eligible for another term to the office now operated on fees.

However, by the time the lawmakers settle down, Gov. Barnett is expected to add other subjects for consideration. At the moment, he is considering throwing in the controversial issue of increasing truck load limits from 64,650 pounds to 73,250 pounds.

THE TRUCK WEIGHT proposal was offered at a special session in November, but killed in committee. Added incentive for its enactment is the fact that the Arkansas legislature, now in session, has okayed the higher load limit.

In placing the sheriffs' succession proposal in the call, Gov. Barnett yielded to pressure from the State Sheriffs Association. He is also expected to "give in" on many of an estimated 30 subjects proposed by various groups.

Only those subjects, other than resolutions, submitted by the governor may be considered at special sessions.

Adding to the prospect of a longer than earlier anticipated session is that about 36 of the 140 House members cannot return since their counties were stripped of representation under the first reapportionment in 73 years. The new House will be 122 instead of 140, with the more populous urban counties getting increased seats in a shift from the smaller rural counties which have long dominated the legislative scene.

Against the pressure of the lame ducks, however, will be that of those eligible for re-election in the campaign scheduled to open around June 7. That is the deadline for qualifying in the Aug. 6 Democratic primary.

MAJOR VOTER reaction to be faced by legislators seeking re-election is the high cost of the present assembly. It has cost the taxpayers $2,924,580, and by the time the current session adjourns, it will have exceeded $3 million. That compares with the $1,200,596 spent by the preceding administration of former Gov. J. P. Coleman.

Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, president of the Senate, and House speaker Walter Sillers foresee a long, drawn-out session on the controversial sheriffs proposal. That's due to major differences of opinion on the proposal and the fact that two previous special sessions sidestepped the issue.

Speaker Sillers is pessimistic on the ability of the upcoming session to reconcile differences on the sheriff succession bill. That is agitated by opposition from candidates who already have announced in anticipation of the incumbents not being in the race.

Jubilant Republicans Eye Race for Governorship

MISSISSIPPI

JACKSON, Miss., March 2—Mississippi Republicans, jubilant over the election of their second state legislator since Reconstruction, have girded for an all-out effort to win the governorship in this year's election. The undertaking is more than herculean.

L. L. McAllister Jr., young certified public accountant of Meridian, won a Lauderdale County house seat over a field of Democrats. He was elected to a vacancy created by the resignation of Democrat Natie Caraway.

The young Republican's victory was the springboard for chairman Wirt Yerger's announcement that the state headquarters in the Lamar Life Insurance building was being enlarged from two to eight offices, and that the one-man organizing staff was being increased to five—all full time.

IN ADDITION to a headquarters organization director, Mr. Yerger added three field men in as many congressional districts and employed a public relations director.

The political effort at the moment is directed toward the setting up of local committees to handle the campaign of the GOP governorship aspirant, Rubel Phillips of Jackson, a one-time Democratic state officeholder turned Republican. Mr. Phillips formerly served as circuit clerk in Alcorn County (Corinth), and later as chairman of the State Public Service Commission.

Although his Democratic opponent won't be selected until the August primary of that party, Mr. Phillips is active statewide in speaking before civic clubs and other groups.

Like two of the candidates seeking the Democratic nomination in the November general election, Mr. Phillips is centering his preliminary campaigning on President John F. Kennedy and the administration's actions in desegregating the University of Mississippi with the backing of a federal court order, 30,000 United States troops and 500 federal marshals.

Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson and Charles Sullivan, former Clarksdale district prosecuting attorney, are both expected to aim their attack on the Kennedy brothers.

A third "potential" Democratic governorship aspirant, former Gov. J. P. Coleman, takes a different approach. He said there are major state problems for solution which should be given attention and something a governor can do something about. He said the Kennedy issue should be left to the next presidential election and for whatever efforts that can be done by the state's congressional delegation in lessening the threat to states' rights.

INCIDENTALLY, the lone Republican in the House of Representatives is in that category only in party name. The speaker of the House and other leaders haven't voted for Democratic presidents since 1932. They have supported the Republican ticket when there were no States Rights or Unpledged Electors on the ballot.

Rep. McAllister, who campaigned on the Kennedy "issue," likewise finds himself among "friends" in a legislative branch which has resoluted consistently against the national Democratic party leadership.

Three Mississippi newspaper editors braved the threat of being tagged "anti-Mississippian" by stating that "cussing the Kennedys is not enough to win the governorship.'" They pointed to major problems facing the state which should be given top billing in the upcoming campaign.

Making the statements in their editorial columns were Oliver Emmerich of the McComb Enterprise-Journal; Sid Harris of the Times-Post at Houston, and Phil Mullen of the Madison County Herald at Canton.

Mississippi

A special legislative session which convened Monday primarily to consider implementing two voter-approved constitutional amendments, has been turned into a full scale General Assembly by Gov. Ross Barnett. . . . He has added 16 items to those for setting up posts under the new reapportionment and legislation relative to immediate succession in office by county sheriffs who also serve as tax collectors. . . . And the governor indicated "there's more coming." . . . A lengthy session will threaten the reelection efforts of the legislators as they are losing time from their campaigns while their opponents back home are active on the stumps. . . . The deadline for qualifying is June 7. . . . And the legislators find themselves in the seventh session since Gov. Barnett took office, the six previous ones having cost the taxpayers in excess of $2.9 million. . . . As one legislator lamented, "We need to be home patching up our fences—if we have any left."

States Rights Democrats Sow Seeds of Revolt in '66

MISSISSIPPI

JACKSON, Miss., March 9—A statute designed to tighten the grip of states rights Democrats on Mississippi's presidential electors has been signed into law by Gov. Ross Barnett, sponsor of a 1960 winning unpledged slate.

Enacted at a recent special legislative session, the law calls for a preferential primary to select electors from two slates — one pledged to the national party candidates and the other independent free agents. The winning group would carry the party label in the November general election.

Should the independents win —as was the case in 1960— then the national party pledged electors would be forced to petition for placement on the ballot, minus party designation.

ELECTORS are now named in state party convention. Except for name, Mississippi Democrats have little in common with the parent national party. They attend the national convention, but in recent years have returned home and turned on its standard-bearers.

Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, a candidate for governor in the August Democratic primary, said the objective is to win support of other southern states in an ambitious effort to throw the presidential election in the national house of representatives. He said with Mississippi independent electors tagged as Democrats that Democratic electors in other states would not be as hesitant to form an anti-Kennedy bloc as they would if the former were dubbed independents.

The lieutenant governor takes the position that the Democrats "can't win without the South if it sticks together and the best way to insure President John F. Kennedy's reelection is for the south to do nothing."

There is another apparent motive in the new law. It is to reduce the Republican vote by giving "dissatisfied Democrats" an opportunity to elect independent electors as Democrats pledged to withhold their votes from President Kennedy in 1964. It was an organization of "Democrats for Eisenhower" which gained the largest Republican vote in Mississippi since Reconstruction in 1952.

Sen. Flavous Lambert of Belmont, who opposed the proposal, said the "reason behind this is that the unpledged electors in 1960 failed to get the overwhelming vote they had expected and they are afraid that without the party label next year they will lose."

In the 1960 presidential election, Unpledged Electors of the Democratic Party of Mississippi tallied 116,248 votes, while the loyalist slate designated nominees of the Mississippi Democratic Party Pledged to vote for John Kennedy, rolled up 108,362. The Republican electors came in third with 73,561.

State Republican leaders are wary of the statute which requires a party primary in order to designate electors. The Republicans have never held a primary and if they are required to do so they will have to foot the bill—around $250,000 —for one in the 82 counties since they failed to poll 33 per cent of the total vote in order for state payment of the primary.

HOWEVER, sponsors said if there is only one slate of Republican electors they can go on the ballot as such without a primary. There is some question, however, that they may be forced to petition for a place on the general election ballot.

The statute is somewhat confusing to say the least. Under it, a political party would hold a state convention at which 10 per cent of the delegates — there's a total of 244 — could field a slate of pledged elec-

High Pay Government Job Has But 9 Months to Live

Pol. Thru

By JAN ARLIN

JACKSON, Miss., March 23—The second highest paying job in any governmental unit in the United States has only nine months to live.

The job, which pays between $65,000 and $80,000 a year, will die next January when the current term of the incumbent, William Winter, expires.

Winter is Mississippi's state tax collector. His pay, second only to the salary of the U. S. President, is realized from the collection of a black market assessment on liquor sold in violation of Mississippi's hard-liquor prohibition law.

HOLDER of the office since March, 1956, Winter strongly advocated its abolishment when the matter was before the legislature last year.

"I believe I have held the office as long as a reasonable man should want to hold such a high paying position," Winter declared.

Winter also believes the handling of the work by the State Tax Commission will put more money in the state treasury.

As tax collector, Winter has collected about $15,000,000 annually in black market liquor taxes. The tax commission also collects a special sales tax on illegal liquor sales in about the same amount as Winter's.

MISSISSIPPI, under a 1944 law, has given the tax collector authority to collect a tax of 10 per cent on liquor sold in neighboring states and brought into Mississippi.

The collector pockets 10 per cent of what his office collects and turns the remaining 90 per cent over to the state treasury. The collector must pay his expenses out of the 10 per cent he pockets.

Most of Mississippi's liquor is brought into the state from neighboring Louisiana. Winter has a working agreement with Louisiana, whereby tax officials there supply him with invoices on sales for Mississippi consumption. This makes Winter's job easier.

Winter frankly admits the remuneration for the tax collector's job has gotten out of proportion to its duties. The tax commission, which will take over the job in January, is operated by state appropriation and not a fee basis.

Winter was a member of the state House of Representatives when he was appointed tax collector in 1956 by the governor to succeed Mrs. Thomas Baley, widow of a former governor. Mrs. Baley died two months after taking office. In 1959, Winter was elected to a four-year term ending next January.

While his earnings from the state job have brought Winter, according to estimates, more than $600,000 since 1956, he doesn't plan to retire. He expects to remain in politics, his favorite work.

$20,000 FOR 4 TIRES

MIAMI, Fla., March 23 (AP) — A federal jury has awarded $20,000 damages to a man who contended he was shorn of privacy and humiliated when a dealer stripped all four tires off his car in 1960.

Jose Santiesteban, a country club waiter, said coworkers joshed him about the incident and the club asked him to move the car—left standing on its rims—because it was a source of embarrassment. He did so after borrowing some tires.

The defense admitted Santiesteban was not behind in his installment payments for the tires. It said the tire-stripping resulted from a mixup.

Mississippi Democrat Turns GOP

GULFPORT, Miss. (AP)—Democratic State Sen. Stanford E. Morse Jr., 36, turned Republican and announced as a candidate for lieutenant governor Wednesday.

In a hotel news conference, the Gulfport lawyer said the Republican Party offers the only logical way for dissatisfied Southern Democrats to oppose the Democratic Party.

"We must be practical enough to recognize that the independent or third party movement is doomed to failure," he said.

The announcement made Morse the GOP candidate unless some other Republican also announces for the post. A state GOP primary would be necessary if that happened, Morse said.

He emphasized that he would not run on the same ticket with the GOP candidate for governor, Rubel Phillips, a Jackson lawyer. They will conduct separate campaigns.

"Rubel and I agree in principle on what we are trying to do," said Morse. "But if any Mississippi voters feel they cannot vote for Phillips for any reason, I hope they vote for me."

GOP Cashing In On Demo Schism

JACKSON, Miss., March 30—A younger and solidified Republican leadership is out to "cash in" on the schism in Mississippi's old - line Democratic ranks in this year's state elections.

It is a far more aggressive organization than the one that fielded the last Republican candidates for governor and lieutenant governor in 1947.

Encouraged by the wide split in the Democratic forces—the anti-Kennedy state party group on the one hand and the so-called "loyalists" on the other—the Republicans this week trotted out a running mate for their earlier entry for the governorship.

State Sen. Stanford Morse Jr., Democrat of Gulfport, announced his candidacy for lieutenant governor as a Republican in the November general election. He will be the runningmate of his University of Mississippi law school classmate, Rubel Phillips, 38-year-old former Democratic elected public service commissioner and Alcorn County circuit court clerk who earlier announced for governor on the Republican ticket.

The 36-year-old Mr. Morse is serving his second four - year term from the senatorial district composed of Harrison and Stone counties in deep south Mississippi. He was a leader in the recent successful legislative reapportionment movement, as well as the unsuccessful effort to gain local option legalization of liquor.

MR. MORSE, his father and a brother are members of the same law firm at Gulfport. Like Mr. Phillips, who hails from deep northeast Mississippi, Mr. Morse is a veteran of World War II.

At the same time that Sen. Morse announced his Republican candidacy for lieutenant governor, Miss Evelyn Gandy, the state treasurer, formally entered her name for the same office, except on the Democratic ticket in that party's Aug. 6 primary.

Miss Gandy, a former member of the late Sen. T. G. Bilbo's Washington staff and one-time Forrest County (Hattiesburg) legislator, brought the list of Democratic aspirants to four. The others are former Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin of Laurel; Ex-Mayor Troy Watkins of Natchez and Jackson chiropractor Dave Perkins.

Miss Gandy's greatest obstacle is that the office she seeks is just a "heartbeat" away from the governorship.

Although the Democratic slate for the governorship is expected to contain three names, only one has formally announced. The formal entry is Charles Sullivan, former Clarksdale district attorney who made a record-shattering third-place show in 1959 in his first statewide campaign.

Yet to announce are Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson and former Gov. J. P. Coleman. They were opponents in 1955 when Mr. Coleman emerged winner.

MR. SULLIVAN was a 1960 unpledged state Democratic presidential elector. Former Gov. Coleman spearheaded the Kennedy-Johnson campaign, while Lt. Gov. Johnson remained "silent" without public disclosure of his position.

Republican Party Leader Wirt Yerger Jr., young Jackson insurance company executive, said his group will offer candidates for the legislature in several counties. That office "try" was spurred by last December's win of a house seat by Republican L. L. McAllister of Meridian, in a special election to fill a Democratic vacancy in Lauderdale County.

Thus far two Republicans have announced for the legislature. They are Hugh Arant of Minter City, in Leflore County (Greenwood), and George Persons of Jackson, in Hinds County (Jackson). Mr. Persons is a nephew of former Gov. Gordon Persons of Alabama, and Wilston Persons, one-time aide to former President Eisenhower.

Mr. McAllister is expected to seek reelection in Lauderdale County.

A DETERMINED effort to bolster a two-party system in Mississippi is under way by the Republicans. Unlike the Democrats, they have a full-time fully staffed headquarters in Jackson, with organizers in most of the five congressional districts.

Indicative of the Democratic party split was a recent statement o fGov. Ross Barnett, who sponsored the unpledged presidential electors who carried Mississippi in 1960. He said:

"There are two kinds of Democrats in Mississippi. There are the so-called loyalists or Kennedy Democrats who want to support the nominees of the national party and then there are the tried and true Mississippi Democrats who positively can not and will not support the nominees of the national party in 1964."

The governor also recalled a recent statement of Bidwell Adam of Gulfport, the chairman of the Democratic State executive Committee who served as lieutenant governor under the late Gov. T. G. Bilbo. He said:

"The chairman of the executive committee of the Democratic party of Mississippi, who openly supported the national party nominees in 1960 and spoke openly against our unpledged elector, has publicly stated that he can no longer stomach the national party and the Kennedys."

It is on those breakaways the Republicans hope to "cash in" on in November.

Mississippi Race Political Die Cast

MISSISSIPPI

JACKSON, Miss., April 6 — The political die is cast and readied for a test run at the polls in this year's Mississippi election for offices ranging from governor to constables in the 82 counties.

A definite announcement, scheduled April 15, by former Gov. J. P. Coleman will round out a list of three aspirants for the Democratic nomination in the party primary Aug. 6. The other contenders will be Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, making his third bid for the office, and Charles Sullivan, former Clarksdale district attorney who ran a close third in 1959 in his first statewide campaign.

In preparing for the formal entry, Mr. Coleman said he recognizes he will be the target of his opposition because he spearheaded the 1960 national party presidential campaign in Missisippi.

LT. GOV. JOHNSON, who stood side-by-side with Gov. Ross Barnett in defying the Kennedy-sponsored desegregation of the University of Mississippi, and Mr. Sullivan, a 1960 unpledged elector, have served notice that national issues will be paramount.

The facts that former Gov. Coleman left his successor administration a $34 million surplus and no integration are not as emotionally packed as ones centering around the Kennedys and their efforts at desegregation and elimination of discriminations against Negroes seekig voter status.

THE WINNER in the Democratic affair will face Republican Rubel Phillips, a former Democratic office-holder, in the November general election. Mr. Phillips has also said he will make the national issue—meaning the Kennedys—paramount in his efforts to be the first Republican governor since Reconstruction.

Also all set is the slate of candidates for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor. Asking for a third term in that office, after a four-year layout after losing the governorship in 1959, is former Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin.

Contesting with Mr. Gartin will be a woman aspirant, Miss Evelyn Gandy, who cannot immediately seek re-election as state treasurer; Ex-Mayor Troy Watkins of Natchez, a former president of the Mississippi Municipal Association, and Jackson chiropractor David Perkins.

THE WINNER in that round also must continue his campaigning until the general election as the Republicans have fielded State Sen. Stanford Morse of Gulfport.

The Republicans are planning to run a candidate for attorney general. If they do, their nominee will face the winner in a two-man Democratic race between Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson and State Sen. John McLaurin of Brandon.

The "key" in the Republican effort to field candidates for governor and attorney general is to gain control of the State Election Commission. It names election commissioners which more or less control the elections.

NO OTHER state offices are scheduled to be in the Republican roster this year.

However, a play for representation in the legislature is to be made after a victory late last year of a House member from Lauderdale County to fill a Democratic vacancy. The Republican winner, L. L. McAllister of Meridian, will seek reelection.

atl J-C 4-14-63 Mississippi Pol. Miss.

Taking cognizance of tensions resulting from voter registration and school desegregation activities, the Mississippi Economic Council in recent annual meeting called on participants in this year's state elections to soft-pedal the race issue. . . . It said "in the interest of developing Mississippi, maintaining the existing friendship between the races and maintaining law and order, we urge candidates and political organizations to refrain from belaboring the race issue in political campaigns." . . . New president of the statewide organization of civic and professional leadership is Jack Reed, merchant of Tupelo who during the midst of the Negro James Meredith-Ole Miss desegregation crisis said Mississippi would suffer economic catastrophe if schools were closed in the face of desegregation efforts. . . . The council also urged resistance to "political interference with the college board or the administration of any institution," an obvious reference to board action in the Ole Miss desegregation in appointing Gov. Ross Barnett as "special registrar" in the Meredith enrollment controversy. . . . The governor is not a member of the constitutional board. . . . A Democratic legislative aspirant in Hinds County is Mrs. Guy T. Gillespie Jr., wife of a physician and daughter-in-law of the late president of Belhaven College. . . . Mrs. Gillespie, the former Miss Tay Anderson of Pontotec, is a former director of religious education in a Columbus, Ga., Presbyterian church. . . . She is the fourth woman candidate in Hinds County. . . . State Sen. Flavous Lambert of Belmont has announced for northern district public service commissioner to succeed Commissioner Hal Phillips who is not seeking reelection. . . . John C. Dowling Jr. of Gaffney, S.C., will lecture before the Mississippi Flower Show Judges' council in Jackson April 24.

MISSISSIPPI

JACKSON, Miss., April 27—State Tax Commission records bear out the oft-repeated assertion that the "drys have their prohibition laws" and the "wets their liquor" in this lone remaining legal oasis among the 50 states.

Liquor is a multimillion-dollar trade in this state with a statewide prohibition law.

Tax commission records show that the retail and wholesale liquor business in Mississippi last year amounted to $30,965,323. Those records list the names of the taxpayers and are available to law enforcement officers should they have the urge to prosecute.

The state's take in the way of taxes totaled $3,177,202. Of that amount, a special sales tax of 6 per cent at the wholesale level and 9 per cent on retailers, netted $1,686,839, while another levy, a 10 per cent so-called 'black market tax' levied in 1944, brought in $1,490,363.

NEITHER TAX collecting agency claims taxes were paid on all liquor brought into the state for resale. There are some sections where lack of "cooperation" between local officials and those at the state level permits liquor to escape taxes.

Broken down by sales, the tax collecting agencies show that $17,685,062 in retail liquor sales were involved in collections, and $13,280,261 in wholesale transactions.

Taxes were collected on liquor sales in 42 of the state's 82 counties.

Harrison County (Gulfport) on the Mississippi Gulf Coast, where open sales are permitted without interference from law enforcement officers, did the land-office business, reporting publican Rubel Phillips, favor county-option legalization, while Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson is against it.

Yet to be heard from is former Gov. J. P. Coleman, both as to his position on county-option legalization and definite announcement that he will seek a second term. He said his decision will be revealed in ten days — and his friends insist it will be "yes" insofar as running for the governorship in the Democratic primary is concerned.

Meanwhile, sensing a changed sentiment due to the new legislative line-up, the dry forces have organized for retention of the prohibition laws. They are looking at it from a "moral" standpoint and not the increased revenue the state will need to balance the next biennial budget, now about $40,000,000 shy of that effort.

without interference from law enforcement officers, did the land-office business, reporting the sale of $7,007,646 in liquor.

Warren County (Vicksburg) another "open sales area," was second with a trade volume of $5,319,437. Likewise, Leflore County (Greenwood) where large wholesalers operate without molestation, was high on the list, reporting a volume of $4,-665,189.

Rankin County (Brandon) across Pearl River from the capital city of Jackson, recorded $4,131,213 in retail and wholesale business. In a recent court hearing, a Rankin County bootlegger boasted a $2,000,000 a year business, much of it being fashionable clubs — key and country—in Jackson.

However, the tax collection report disclosed that all the Jackson liquor does not come from across the Pearl River. Hinds County, the capital city's location, did a $2,770,630 volume in liquor trade during the 1962 period.

LAUDERDALE County (Meridian) in former years one of the top-runners registered only $90,960.

Big volumes shown in counties where liquor sales are not discouraged by those in authority, included:

Adams County (Natchez), $1,-431,650; Bolivar County (Rosedale and Cleveland), $752,194; Hancock County (Bay St. Louis), $837,752; Jackson County (Pascagoula), $995,325; Sunflower County (Indianola), $989,-141; Washington County (Greenville), $847,710. They are coast and Mississippi River counties, the "wet" liberal areas.

Covington County (Collins), considered a "dry" county in south central Mississippi, reported $67,330 in retail liquor sold last year.

Some observers feel that with the new legislative reapportionment which shifted representation from the smaller populated "dry" hill counties to the populous urban "wet-sentiment" political subdivisions, the 1964 legislature may legalize liquor on a county-option basis.

HOWEVER, the "key" may rest in the man elected governor in this year's election.

Coleman Runs Again in Mississippi

Pal. Miss.

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI) — Former Gov. J. P. Coleman, who says Mississippi can quietly preserve segregation without inflammatory statements from its leaders, is seeking another term as chief executive.

Coleman, 49, announced his candidacy Thursday at a news conference in his law office here.

He referred to his segregation policy by standing on his 1956-60 administration's "complete preservation of our domestic institutions without doubt, without strife and without daily uproar."

"I want to let the people know I will not play politics with their troubles for the benefit of myself," said Coleman, who has been called a "moderate" by Gov. Ross Barnett.

Coleman, already under attack from other candidates for supporting John F. Kennedy for president, said President Kennedy should not be a campaign issue because he "could not carry Mississippi in 1964 regardless of who the governor is."

"I'm sure the President realizes that himself," said Coleman of the man who sent troops into Mississippi during the University of Mississippi integration crisis.

JACKSON, Miss., May 11 — Management has gotten the "jump" on organized labor in the upcoming Mississippi political campaign by putting the governorship candidates "on the line" on issues in the labor-management area.

Both groups are more active than in the past in their advocacy of certain measures and are conducting statewide campaigns in advance of balloting in the August Democratic primary.

Management, represented by the Mississippi Manufacturers Association, is opposed to many of the 18 points in the AFL-CIO legislative program sponsored by the Mississippi Labor Council, and vice versa. It was first in calling the candidates before its representatives, beating labor to the jump in that regard.

MANAGEMENT'S representatives also got the answers they wanted from the candidates on four major issues on which they differ with labor.

Major issue backed by management and on which the candidates agreed is continuance of the state's right-to-work law. The candidates said they will oppose any effort to repeal the statute, which incidentally, is now in the state constitution. Organized labor is opposed to the law and was successful in Louisiana several years ago in electing an administration which gained its repeal.

Because of labor's success in Louisiana, is seeking to "hold the line" in Mississippi.

Management also gained assurances from the candidates that they will oppose labor-sponsored - and - management - opposed enactment of a state minimum wage law similar to the federal fair labor standards act.

Also siding with the manufacturer's position against a state version of the Davis-Bacon federal prevailing wage law, the candidates agreed to oppose its application to state government contracts. Under the federal statute, locally prevailing wages are paid on federal work projects.

THE CANDIDATES also said they will oppose creation of a State Department of Labor, long sought by organized labor in Mississippi.

Labor apparently is not discouraged as a result of the positions expressed by the governorship aspirants. It is contacting legislators by mail on its program, seeking to gain support from the group that passes the laws. However, the "key" is the governor in view of his veto power.

The only significant disagreement among the candidates was over creation of a lay state board of education in place of the present ex-officio board composed of the attorney general, secretary of state and state superintendent of education. The manufacturers favor a lay board on the grounds that two of the elected officials have functions of their own offices which prevent them from giving full consideration to educational matters.

An amendment to create a nine-member lay board of education was rejected by the voters last November, although backed by Gov. Ross Barnett and the manufacturer's association. Sponsors contend it would improve the administration of the public school program and permit increased efforts in inaugurating a program for training skilled and technical workers for new industries locating in Mississippi.

THE CANDIDATES favoring the manufacturers - advocated lay board were Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson and Charles Sullivan, Democrats and Rubel Phillips, the Republican aspirant.

Former Gov. J. P. Coleman prefers the present board setup, but would "look with a great deal more favor" if the new board would be elected and limited to three members.

Labor favors the present ex-officio board.

Improvement in the workmen's compensation laws to get a more favorable rate for coverage in Mississippi was one of the questions which the manufacturers asked each candidate.

Coleman said he would sign "any bill that would give industry a better break, so long as it is fair to the man who has to sustain the injuries."

Lt. Gov. Johnson is willing to have a legislative study committee make recommendations on changes which should be made, while Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Phillips believe the problem is in defining compensable injuries in order to prevent many claims from going to the courts.

MR. SULLIVAN gained a major breakthrough. He conditioned his appearance on the meeting being open to the press. He won out on it.

In the 1959 campaign, Mr. Sullivan, who ran fourth, refused to appear before organized labor's representatives when they declined to open the session to the press.

Both groups are aware of one thing—campaign promises are not always fulfilled after an election.

Lines Are Drawn

The appearance of four candidates for governor before a meeting of the Citizens Council in Jackson has produced the campaign's first real bit of acrimony — and hardened some of the lines the summer will follow.

Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson Jr. revealed part of his pitch when he tore into former Governor J. P. Coleman, charging that Coleman recommended passively admitting James H. Meredith to the University of Mississippi then "getting him out later."

At the time of the Meredith crisis, such a suggestion might have seemed heresy. However, it was a strategy seriously discussed behind closed doors and there are many people who believed at the time, and still believe, that may have been the shrewdest approach.

However, Coleman has denied that he made the suggestion, at least indirectly, by issuing a statement that Johnson has "fallen into a gross mistake."

So there undoubtedly will be sequels to the Johnson-Coleman exchange over the weekend.

Meanwhile, all four candidates have claimed they can guarantee the con -tinued segregation of Mississippi educational institutions.

While all four, we feel, will certainly do their utmost to fullfill that promise, nobody can predict what course national politics and Negro agitation will take. There are cartain things which can be done, certain actions and reactions can be mapped in advance. But since no candidate is going to spell out his hypothetical course, the segregation issue will probably be characterized throughout the campaign by "his word against mine" claims of "I can do it better."

Coleman, meanwhile, would do well not to dwell too long on his four-year reactions can be mapped in advance. But since no candidate is going to spell out his hypothetical course, the segregation issue will probably be characterized throughout the campaign by "his word against mine" claims of "I can do it better."

Coleman, meanwhile, would do well not to dwell too long on his four-year record in this field.

There were too attempts to integrate institutions of higher learnings during his administration. But neither was in any way comparable to the Meredith situation.

One, at Ole Miss, was the bumbling effort of a tragic unstable figure to regain something he thought he had lost by attacking the NAACP.

The other, at Southern ,was carried out by another Negro, almost equally alone.

Meridith, of course, had powerful backing.

Coleman, however, was on hand when Clennon King rode his bus from the Mississippi Gulf Coast to Oxford. The black Cadillac bearing license Number One was parked at a tree-shaded command post less than a mile from the highway Patrol ringed Lyceum Building and all orders that day emanted from the Tall Man from Choctaw.

The crisis was handled well. But it was not the same kind that James Meredith generated some years later.

Governor Barnett's Smear

Not since the days the nation was being asked to believe that President Eisenhower was a conscious agent of the Communist conspiracy have we had anything quite comparable to Gov. Ross Barnett's testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee. To the Mississippi Governor, the whole civil rights movement now sweeping this land is a simple phenomenon. It's all a Communist plot in which sinister roles are played by President Kennedy, his brother Robert, the Attorney General, Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., and others.

Such tactics may be good politics in Mississippi, but the Governor was testifying in Washington before sophisticated Senators who have heard the Communist smear used before and seen through it. By the time the Senators' questioning was over, the gaping holes in Governor Barnett's case were clearly visible for all to see.

At the risk of belaboring the obvious, the facts about Communism and the Negroes in this country are worth recapitulating so that the full fantasy of these charges may be evident. The Communist party here has long seen a potential field for influence in the legitimate grievances of American Negroes and has often tried to exploit those grievances. The remarkable fact, however, has been the abysmal failure of these Communist efforts and the party has never occupied more than a most marginal position among American Negroes. The men who lead American Communism would dearly love to be at the head of the present civil rights movement, but they are not. The American Negro community has instead produced a series of remarkable leaders, many of them clergymen like Dr. King, who have directed and are directing the drive for full equality, using techniques whose inspiration goes back to Thoreau and Gandhi, not Marx and Lenin.

The great danger, of course, is that if the diehard segregationists like Governor Barnett are successful in frustrating the Negroes' legitimate aspirations for full equality then the American Negro community may, out of frustration, abandon the present moderate leadership and enroll under the banner of the waiting extremists. Governor Barnett clearly does not realize it, but the extremists—whether Communists or Black Muslims or others—are counting upon him and others like him to give them leadership among American Negroes.

'64 ELECTORS PLAN PUSHED BY BARNETT

July 18, 1963 NYT

ATLANTA, July 17 (AP)—Gov. Ross R. Barnett of Mississippi said last night that a compact of Southern states could prevent the election of a liberal President and would receive help from other sections in electing a conservative.

He said that people throughout the nation "are fed up with the concentration of power in Washington" and are waiting for leadership toward "a return of constitutional government."

The South can provide that leadership, Mr. Barnett said at a rally sponsored by the Atlanta Citizens Council, if its states will adopt the unpledged electors plan and withhold their support from both the Democratic and Republican candidates.

Pol - Miss

If Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, Virginia, Louisiana, Arkansas and South Carolina withhold their 65 electoral votes from both major Presidential candidates, he said, the 1964 election could be thrown into the House of Representatives.

Then, Mr. Barnett continued, conservatives throughout the nation would have a strong chance of deciding who the next President would be. Each state would have only one vote should the election be forced into the House.

Mr. Barnett spoke to about 3,000 persons in a downtown hotel. He received three standing ovations. Outside the hotel, pickets of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People marched to protest his appearance.

Mississippi:

Best Bet In Governor's Race: There's Sure To Be A Run-off

About one week ago SOUTH staffer Carl Goggins went to Mississippi, made an on-the-ground survey of what people are saying about the torrid governor's race. This is his report.

WITH VOTING DAY just a fortnight away only one thing's certain in the hammer-and-tongs race for the Mississippi Democratic gubernatorial nomination. There'll be a run-off Aug. 27 as soon as the Aug. 6 count is completed for (listed alphabetically) former-Governor J. P. Coleman, Lt. Governor Paul B. Johnson, and former district attorney Charles L. Sullivan of Clarksdale.

There's a fourth candidate—McGee's ebullient Robert F. (Blowtorch) Mason—who has taken time off from operating a welding business to take a second flyer at the state's top office. Mason figures to finish fourth in a four-way race, same as he did in 1959, but he's having himself a fine time along the way and providing some comic relief from the dead seriousness of the top contenders. Taking it down the line, this is what a broad cross-section of Mississippi "guess-perts" are saying at SOUTH's presstime. It's entirely possible last moment developments could knock their observations into a political cocked hat.

Prematurely graying, War II fighter pilot Charlie Sullivan was a late entry in the governor's race in 1959, attracted broad interest for his whirlwind campaign methods and stump challenges, finished a respectable third behind Governor Ross Barnett and then Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin. Sullivan never stopped running, but took time to be the presidential nominee on the Constitution Party ticket in 1960. Lots of people figured Sullivan would be the man to catch in 1963. Whether he is or not won't be known until the night of Aug. 6.

There are reports that recent attacks on the Constitution Party platform on which Sullivan ran three years ago by both Johnson and Coleman are hurting the youngish attorney. One reason, folks are saying, is that one platform plank called for abolishing both TVA and REA. The TVA territory in Northeast Mississippi isn't likely to take kindly to criticism of TVA's tax-subsidized power supply. On the other hand that portion of the state wasn't considered a Sullivan stronghold to begin with, his major strength believed to be in his home Delta area and in portions of South Mississippi. REA-fed co-ops are scattered.

COLEMAN . . . will JFK hurt?

Sullivan has taken a flat-footed stand for local option liquor control as a substitute for "dry" Mississippi's peculiar arrangement whereby liquor sellers operate in areas of the state where no local objection is enforced but are required to pay a so-called "black market" tax on alcoholic potables. This position, a repeat of Sullivan's stand in 1959, may cut both ways. Ardent drys—and their number are considerable in the state where liquor is available but illegal—don't like Sullivan's approach to the issue. This is likely to hurt him most in the so-called "hill" counties. Voter disaffection in that area may be somewhat offset by support for his local option position in the Gulf Coast area. Oddly enough, Sullivan carried one of the state's driest counties when he ran four years ago.

Johnson, who has made the run-off twice in the course of his three previous bids to become governor, is a well-liked, able public figure who has been closely tied to state government for many years. He has continually remarked that he'd spent much time in previous campaigns criticizing opponents mainly because he had no elective office experience of his own to claim. Now, Johnson hammers away at the advances made during his term as No. 2 state official and that of the Barnett administration. On the touchy liquor issue, Johnson simply says he's willing to have it submitted to popular vote if the legislature so ordains.

Johnson strategists purposely delayed organizing their forces this time because it was felt that the Hattiesburg figure had always kicked off too soon in previous races. One of his strongest stumping points has been to emphasize his stand beside Gov. Barnett during last year's emotion-packed Ole Miss incident. Last week, hustings-wise Johnson came up with a vote-attracter neither of his major opponents can match. His campaign headquarters made it known that their man might have to curtail a portion of his rigorous speech-making. Reason: "A severe sore throat caused by gassing at Oxford last Fall."

JOHNSON . . . veteran campaigner.

Ex.-Gov. Coleman, a mostly unobtrusive, behind-the-scenes operator as a member of the state House for the past three-and-a-half years, has three stout vote-getting items going for him. He has kept an effective political organization well oiled, he will gather by far the larger portion of the potentially 30,000 negro votes and he has the support of labor. Also working in his favor is the fact that he left office after his first term in 1960, leaving behind a state treasury cushion of $34 million. Plus that, he has repeatedly stated that no schools were integrated and no federal troops marched into the state during his term.

Coleman, however, has been the target of a steady drumfire from both Johnson and Sullivan that he not only boosted President Kennedy for the vice presidential spot in 1956 but also is on record as an outspoken backer of the Kennedy-Lyndon Johnson ticket three years ago. Coleman claims he is "bitterly disappointed" in Kennedy administration tactics, only followed the lead of Senators James Eastland and John Stennis in backing the 1960 national Demo ticket. He adds that he also was attempting to help protect Sen. Eastland's chairmanship of the potent Senate Judiciary committee by going along with the party. Several weeks ago Sullivan appeared on television and without comments of his own showed a playback of Coleman touting the JFK-LBJ ticket in rather glowing terms during the 1960 contest. This soft spot in Coleman's record is the prime source of concern to his backers. Just how much damage it has caused is something that only Aug. 6 can answer. There are some competent observers who feel that Johnson-Sullivan attacks on Coleman's Kennedy affiliations came too soon, may lose their full sting before election. Coleman has vehemently denounced rumors that he has received "outside" backing for his campaign.

Gov. Barnett, who undoubtedly could swing much weight should he choose to declare himself outright for a candidate, has followed a strictly hands-off policy thus far. Only possible saddle burr that might bring him into the campaign picture would be excessive criticism of his administration.

Sullivan has tossed a few barbs Barnett's way of late but apparently hasn't irritated the Governor enough to bring him out where it might have political impact.

Prime supporters of Sen. Eastland have put heavy backing behind Johnson but the Senator himself has taken no public stand. Citizens' Council groups did not solidify in their support. Jackson's group is behind Johnson while Sullivan has attracted active help from Greenwood's Council and elsewhere. Coleman has no such support.

The heaviest business community help appears to be split between Johnson and Coleman, with the latter probably having the edge there. There have been late campaign rumors that the state's growing Republican organization is sending out word for their people to vote for Coleman on the theory they can make a stouter race against him in the Fall on an out-and-out anti-Kennedy position.

Sullivan should run well in the northern Delta area. In the Southern Delta present predictions are for a close race between the top three. Coleman is heavily favored in the Northeast TVA section with Johnson not too far behind. Johnson and Sullivan appear to have the edge in midstate. Johnson looms strong in South Mississippi and on the coast. There, however, Coleman has strong family ties. Sullivan also, as mentioned earlier, gains favor for his liquor stand plus the fact he was born in that area.

Possible clue to how the race is really shaping up was noted recently by some wind-samplers. It is this: When the campaign got underway Sullivan and Johnson directed the major portion of their fire at Coleman with the naturally drawn conclusion they believed they'd have to knock him out of the race and fight it out between themselves in the run-off. Of late they've been turning considerable fire at each other. This has led some political filberts to surmise that Coleman's backing can't be shaken loose, that Johnson and Sullivan may now feel they're facing the task of fighting their way into a run-off spot.

All of this, of course, brings up the added question of whether Coleman, even if he should lead in the first go-round, will poll his top vote then. Eight years ago he ran second in the first primary, won easily in the run-off. This year it appears that finding the winning combination isn't going to be easy for anybody. If campaign fever rises into August, a 400,000-vote turnout is possible.

SULLIVAN . . . strong second try.

When all the Demo primary shouting is done, the winner still has to face a stern test from widely-known, capable Rubel Phillips, the GOP candidate, in November. A former Democrat, Phillips was once chairman of the state Public Service Commission, is well regarded throughout the state. Thus far he's shied from dealing in personalities in laying groundwork for his later push, has effectively extolled the advantages of a two-party system in his state.

Alabama:

Southern Salvo

THE Governor of Alabama took a plane load of ammunition to federal Washington last week and opened up with both barrels upon arriving. Drawing a bead on pending "civil rights" legislation and all its sponsors, he dared the Kennedy administration and Congress to submit "this abominable program to a nationwide referendum and get the shock of your lives when the people overwhelmingly reject it."

Before a Senate Commerce subcommittee and a packed gallery, George C. Wallace raked the administration proposals fore and aft for three hours, called them a product saturated with "gross hypocrisy" and declared the President's continued appeasement of negro minority bloc leaders for "selfish political reasons" has brought the country to "the brink of civil warfare."

Lashing the entire "rights" package and bearing down particularly at sections aimed at government control of private business and property, Wallace looked a group of hostile senators in the eye and thundered: "The President, the Attorney-General and every member of Congress who has sponsored this legislation stand indicted before the American people. A President who sponsors such legislation as this should be retired from public office, and this goes for any governor or other public officials who have joined in this mad scramble for the minority bloc vote."

Negro leaders, the Governor vociferated, "have now pressured the President into the ridiculous position of placing his stamp of approval on mob violence and rioting in the streets of this country. People who write me thousands of letters from all over this country want their elected representatives to start representing them and not the minority bloc voting mobsters."

He told the subcommittee he doubted he would change their votes (South Carolina's Sen. Strom Thurmond was the lone southerner on the panel), but he asserted the people of America were being alerted and he felt certain they are ready to halt "the continued usurpation of power by the federal government and the failure to adhere to the Constitution of the United States."

Barnett Flays Dixie Use as Whipping Boy

Atl. Jour. 7/29/63

Pol. Miss.

BAXLEY, July 29 (UPI)—Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett used a brief address at a beauty pageant here Sunday to blast the federal government for "overstepping its constitutional powers and constantly making a whipping boy out of the Southern states."

Barnett, a member of the top echelon of segregation forces in the South, said the federal government is "assuming to exercise powers that it does not have under the Constitution" in recent integration moves.

The outspoken critic of the Kennedy administration appeared at a privately-sponsored beauty and talent pageant before an audience of about 2,500 South Georgians.

He urged the 50 states to stand up and come to their own defense, led by a "common front" of Southern states, and obtain "a restoration of constitutional government."

Barnett told the crowd to "hang on" and that "things will turn our way." He said that he warned the Senate Commerce Committee that if Congress gives "Bobby Kennedy the right to control every restaurant, hotel, motel and drugstore in America," instead of having "500,000 Negroes invading Washington in August, there may be 100 million white people" making a march.

Mississippi's Law Chief Raps Power Use, Draws Rebuke

JOL - Miss.

By Robert C. Albright
Staff Reporter

The Attorney General of Mississippi, Joe T. Patterson, yesterday bitterly accused President Kennedy and his brother, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, of "vindictive" use of power and of stirring up racial unrest.

Patterson's attack, voiced at a Senate Commerce Committee hearing, brought a sharp rebuke from Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla.) and from two other Democrats present.

Monroney, who was presiding, told Patterson he disagreed and felt that the witness had damaged his case

"in condemning these two young men who are doing their best" in the face of "tremendous crises."

Patterson's running fire criticism of the President and his brother came in contrast to the softspoken but firm opposition to the public accommodations features of the Administration's Civil Rights bill voiced by another Southern witness, Georgia's moderate young Governor, Carl Sanders.

Appeals to Committee

Sanders said the public accommodations bill would imperil the civil rights "progress" he said is being made in his State. He appealed to the Committee to leave the matter "to the men and women of good will who have worked together to achieve voluntary solutions to our manifold problems."

Attorney General Kennedy was undergoing his fourth day of questioning on the civil rights program before another Senate committee, the Southern-controlled Senate Judiciary unit, while Patterson and Sanders testified before the Commerce Committee.

A Senate Labor subcommittee headed by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), dealing with other segments of the civil rights program, meanwhile favorably reported two bills expanding manpower retraining programs to help Negroes improve their educational standards and get better jobs.

The two bills would:

- Eliminate the present requirement that states match Federal grants for job retraining programs starting next year. This amendment would result in an increase of $161 million in the Federal authorization for the program starting in 1964.

- Provide literacy training for 52 weeks, with emphasis on reading, writing and arithmetic. This bill would lower the age limits of trainees from 19 to 16 and increase the percentage of trainees in the youth group from 5 to 15 per cent, to cover dropouts.

Mississippi's Attorney General Patterson, in his attack on the Kennedys, told the Commerce Committee:

"I firmly believe that the present U. S. Attorney General, with the approval of the President of the United States is far more responsible for the unfortunate racial violence and troubles we are having through this Nation than the ruthless leaders who are sponsoring and promoting racial unrest.

"I make this charge because I know as a matter of fact that down in my State, agents and representatives of the Department of Justice are ever present where there is racial trouble, and instead of working with the duly elected and responsible officials in an effort to prevent violence and disorder, these agents of the U. S. Attorney General actually aid, abet and encourage violation of State laws and municipal ordinances, assuring the agitators that if and when arrested the Department of Justice will come to their rescue."

Charges Abuse

He charged "vindictive use and abuse of power" vested in the President. He said the U. S. Attorney General "has demonstrated . . . his immaturity, irresponsibility and fiendish delight in bringing to bear upon any and all who would dare oppose him the crushing power of teh overwhelming might of the U. S. Government."

Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) told Patterson this type of attack on the President and the Attorney General "shocks me" and he thought it would shock a majority of the committee.

Hart said "the flow of history" not the President and his brother, have brought the issue to a head.

But Patterson repeated: "I say again without apology that these two individuals have have taken their powerful offices and used them to bring about racial situations."

Statement "Intemperate"

Sen. Howard W. Cannon (D-Nev.), like Monroney and Hart, told the witness he wished to disassociate himself from his criticism of the President. Monroney called Patterson's statements "intemperate."

"I think the President has very grave problems and he is trying to resolve them," said Cannon.

'Cuss Kennedys' Top Election Topic in Mississippi

By James Saggus

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) "Cuss the Kennedy" campaigning is expected to draw a record 450,000 votors to the polls next Tuesday in Mississippi's Democratic primary election for Governor.

All four candidates—three of them veteran politicans—have stumped the state announcing opposition to the National Administration and its policies.

The big issue is which man can save Mississippi from a National Administration usually presented as an ogre gobbling up state and individual rights and stirring up racial discord.

Candidates are:

Former Gov. J. P. Coleman, 49, an Ackerman lawyer who headed the state government from 1956-60.

Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson Jr., 47, a Hattiesburg lawyer and son of a late Governor, now making a fourth effort to follow in his father's footsteps.

Robert Mason, 65, a Magee welder nicknamed "Blowtorch," who polled 2704 votes in his 1959 gubernatorial bid.

And Charles Sullivan, 38, a Clarksdale lawyer who ran a surprisingly strong third for Governor as an unknown four year ago.

Most political observers predict Coleman will face either Johnson or Sullivan in a runoff three weeks after the first primary.

The "Kennedy issue" has overshadowed such traditional vote-getting planks as old age pension, teacher pay, legalized liquor and the like in this year's campaigning.

Because there is little difference in the basic stand of the four on the "Kennedy issue," the campaign has seemed largely a matter of each candidate claiming he opposes Washington more strongly or can fight Washington more effectively than his opponents.

The general election comes up Nov. 5. It will pit the Democratic winner against the Republican candidate, Rubel Phillips.

For the first time in modern politics, the GOP is being regarded as a political force in the state, largely due to the anti-Kennedy sentiment being stressed by the Democrats.

MISSISSIPPI FOES ASSAIL KENNEDYS

3 Primary Candidates for Governor Vie in Attacks

Pol. Miss.

By JOSEPH A. LOFTUS

Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, Miss., Aug. 3—"If Khrushchev was running against Kennedy here, Khrushchev would beat him," muttered a local student of the current turmoil known as the Democratic primary.

"And," he added, "if Bob Kennedy was the candidate, Khrushchev would beat him worse."

Though the man's words were not meant to be analyzed literally, they illustrate the mood and the central issue in this first round of the Mississippi campaign for governor.

The central issue is the Kennedys, a synonym here for hated desegregation and the trouble at the University of Mississippi last fall when troops and marshals were required to carry out a court order to install James H. Meredith, a Negro, as a university student.

Three candidates, vying for Tuesday's votes, churned the already super-heated air, each avowing in turn that he is best qualified to deal with the Kennedys.

Politics is a favorite spectator sport of Mississippians. Here on the Neshoba County fairgrounds in the red north-central hills, 1,600 men and women crowd into the timbered shed to applaud the hiss and roar of anti-Kennedy invective and to chuckle at anti-Negro obscenities. The candidates speak of Washington as if it were a foreign power.

Officially the temperature is 97 degrees, probably hotter in the shed though it is open on three sides. The women, wielding improvised fans, beat the air to get their breath, but will not leave till the meeting is over.

Tradition is strong. This is political jamboree week. Every year, for nearly three-quarters of a century, folks have come to the fairgrounds, "camping out" for a week in hundreds of identical cottages. There are harness races, band concerts, trapeze acts and as many as 14 political speeches in a day.

Associated Press

KENNEDY IS AN ISSUE: Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson of Mississippi, who is running for Governor on a platform that he is more anti-Kennedy than his foes.

Twelve candidates for other offices had already spoken when Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson set out to prove that he was more anti-Kennedy than anybody. At 47 he is making his fourth run for governor. The Citizens Council and Senator James O. Eastland are reputed to be silent backers. He reminded the audience that he had stood up to Chief Marshal James McShane at Oxford last fall, though the confrontation was a brief, unrecorded conversation.

"Either I was right or John Kennedy was right and Bob Kennedy and all the left-wingers were right," he shouted. "Either you believe in state's rights, home rule, or you believe in turning over this state to a black minority."

The Johnson fans applauded.

He purported to quote an old Mississippi Negro: "Mr. Paul, all N.A.A.C.P. means to me is niggers, alligators, apes, coons, and possums." The crowd laughed.

He turned his attack on a rival, former Governor James P. Coleman, who is not anti-Kennedy enough to suit him.

"I don's blame anybody for trying to get the Kennedy albatross off his neck. He bucks and squirms like a house cat with a can on his head trying to get it off. But he can't. He wined and dined Kennedy in 1956."

Then it was Charles L. Sullivan's turn. Mr. Sullivan, 38 and lean, is a lawyer from the Delta town of Clarksdale. Politically, he stands far to the right. He was the Presidential candidate of the Texas Constition party in 1960 and seems to have an ample campaign budget this year.

His most emphatic claim is that he was anti-Kennedy ahead of anybody. When he was running against the President in 1960, he said, Mr. Coleman was voting for Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Johnson "stayed home in Hattiesburg."

Mr. Sullivan proposed as Governor to cut off welfare subsidies to illegitimate Negro babies and "see that Mr. Kennedy is defeated and never elected to the Presidency again."

Mr. Coleman had spoken to the fairgrounds crowd the day before. He was down the road at Forest doing a repetition. He is 49 years old, a successful lawyer in northeast Mississippi. Besides having served a term as Governor he has been Attorney General and is now a member of the State House of Representatives.

He voted for Mr. Kennedy in 1960 and was offered the post of Secretary of the Army. These points seem to be liabilities now and Mr. Coleman is on the defensive. His other liabilities are Northern publications that have commented favorably on his ability, experience, intelligence and recognition of a world outside Mississippi. These comments have been bludgeons in the hands of rivals, who interpret them to mean that he is not truly a segregationist.

So Mr. Coleman promises to maintain segregation of the races and throws in a couple of references to "niggers." It is clear that as a candidate he cannot afford to be tagged even as "moderate."

Robert Mason, a blacksmith who is a perennial candidate, is also entered in the Democratic primary for governor but is not expected to be a serious factor.

A fledgling Republican Party, represented by Rubel Phillips is threatening a stiff contest in the fall.

Gov. Wallace 'Has a Rage' To Run Against Kennedy

Atl. Jnl 8/4/63

ALABAMA

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 3. There was speculation in Maryland, Ohio and Indiana newspapers whether Gov. George C. Wallace would enter their Democratic presidential primaries to bedevil President Kennedy.

The speculation, particularly that in The Baltimore Sun, was solidly based on statements by officials of the Wallace administration and by the governor's own statements at the National Governors Conference in Miami.

There is no question whatever that Wallace, to whom any campaign is an ecstasy, has a rage to run in one or more presidential primaries outside the South.

WALLACE has his fantasies, but no delusions that he could win a primary against the President. Simply, he is persuaded that he has become a conspicuous national protest symbol and that he would get a significant vote from Northern whites who are dismayed over the Kennedy civil rights crusade.

Wallace asserted bluntly at Miami that he was "against Kennedy." He believes it possible that by entering some primaries he could hector and injure Kennedy.

Contrarily, some believe that if Wallace bearded Kennedy in the primaries it actually would benefit Kennedy.

In any event, the novelty and daring of a Confederate governor's excursion into a northern presidential primary and the belief in considerable modification of northern white sentiment make the enterprise interesting to newspapermen in these areas.

FOR EXAMPLE, Wallace told one Cincinnati editor in Miami that he had 100,000 letters from over the country, many accompanied by cash. The editor flew to Montgomery and inspected the stacks by states.

Should Wallace go over this Niagara in a barrel, his position will be remarkable. He would offer as a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination. But in May the chances are that Alabama, under his leadership, will have elected 10 presidential electors pledged to withhold the state's vote from Kennedy.

Thus, in a subsequent presidential primary Wallace would be unable to say that he would support the presidential ticket of his party. He and his state would already have taken a walk.

In fact, at this point nobody knows just why Alabama should send a delegation to the Democratic Convention since Alabama will already have voted against Kennedy.

Wallace acknowledges the eccentricity of these circumstances, but argues that the normal rules do not apply in tumultous times. Meanwhile, he is accepting speaking engagements in places such as Boston, Chicago and the law school of the University of Pennsylvania.

'Illegal' Negro Voting Try Expected in Mississippi

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 5 (AP).—About 450,000 Mississippians will choose among four Democratic candidates for governor tomorrow. There were reports that unregistered Negroes might try to invade the polls.

The campaign was based largely on appeals to the apparently widespread anti-Kennedy feelings.

The candidates in the Democratic primaryare Former Governor J. P. Coleman, Lieutenant Governor Paul Johnson, attorney Charles Sullivan of Clarksdale and Robert Mason of Magee, a welder.

Governor Ross R. Barnett, who cannot succeed himself, took no public part in the campaign. His backers have split between Johnson and Sullivan.

The polls will open at 7 a. m. (CST) and close at 6 p. m. Observers have predicted that it probably will be late Wednesday before the outcome is known because the ballots are hand-counted in all but one of the state's 82 counties.

Most observers expected Coleman and either Johnson or Sullivan to get in the runoff August 27.

Both Johnson, 47, a Hattiesburg attorney making his fourth try for governor, and Sullivan, 38, a former district attorney making his second, concentrated on Coleman's backing John F. Kennedy for president in 1960.

Coleman, 49, an Ackerman lawyer who was governor from 1956-60, said he did so only after the state's United States senators appealed for support of the national ticket to help them keep their Senate committee posts.

Johnson, who also was a Democratic Party loyalist in 1960 although he took no active part, said during the campaign that he had voted for the unpledged Democratic electors.

Those electors later cast their votes for Senator Harry Byrd, the conservative Virginia Democrat.

Unsigned circulars advising Negroes to try to vote by affidavit have been circulated. Sources close to the Negro community indicated that the project may have some strong backing.

Other sources said efforts would be made at Jackson, Greenwood, Clarksdale and other delta areas.

State Attorney General Joe Patterson said any such efforts would be illegal. He said the law permitting a person wrongly denied registration to file an affidavit listing his preferences applied to those whose names were erroeously left off poll books.

Tense Mississippi Picks a Governor

Atl. Con. 8/6/63

Pol. Miss.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—An estimated 450,000 Mississippi voters will choose among four Democratic candidates for governor Tuesday.

After a slow campaign based largely upon widespread anti-Kennedy feelings, interest surged higher with rumors that Negroes may invade the polls.

The racial overtone came too late in the campaign to determine whether it would have any effect on the voters choosing among former Gov. J. P. Coleman, Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson, attorney Charles Sullivan of Clarksdale and Welder Robert Mason of Magee.

NO PUBLIC PART

Gov. Ross Barnett, who cannot succeed himself, took no public part in the campaign. His key backers who did participate split between Johnson and Sullivan.

The polls will open at 8 a.m. (Atlanta time) and close at 7 p.m. Most observers predicted it probably would be late Wednesday before the outcome is known because ballots are hand-counted in all but one of the state's 82 counties.

They expected Coleman to win a place in the runoff three weeks from Tuesday against either Sullivan or Johnson.

FOURTH TRY

Both Johnson, 47-yead-old Hattiesburg attorney making his fourth try for governor, and Sullivan, 38-year-old ex-district attorney making his second, concentrated on Coleman's connection with the 1960 presidential election, when he backed John Kennedy.

Coleman, 49-year-old Ackerman lawyer who was governor from 1956-60, said he did so only after the state's U.S. senators appealed in behalf of the national ticket to maintain their committee posts in the Senate.

Johnson, who also had been regarded as a party loyalist in 1960 although he took no active part, said during the campaign he had voted for the unpledged Democratic electors.

They later cast the state's electoral vote for Sen. Harry Byrd, the conservative Virginia Democrat.

Mississippians to Make Governor Choice Today

Pol. Miss.

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 5, (AP) President Kennedy is very much in the Mississippi Democratic primary even though his name is not on the ballot for theh election Tuesday.

What one candidate calls a "cuss the Kennedys" campaign has overshadowed the traditional State issues in the heated campaign to pick the probable successor of 65-yeear-old Gov. Ross R. Barnett.

Barnett, who attracted world-wide prominence last fall by defying the Federal Government in the court-ordered admissions of James H. Meredith, a Negro, to thhe University of Mississippi, cannot succeed himself.

The four Democratic candidates are:

• J. P. (for James Plennon) Coleman, 49, of Ackerman, who served as Governor in 1956-60. A lawyer, he has been in the State House of Representatives for the last four years. Before winning the Governorship, he was a district attorney, circuit judge, State Supreme Court Justice and attorney general. He has never lost a Statewide election.

• Paul B. Johnson, 47, of Hattiesburg, now the Lieutenant Governor. A World War II Marine captain and son of a former Governor, Johnson—like Barnett—faces criminal contempt proceedings in the 5th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals stemming from the Meredith case. Johnson has made four previous attempts for the Governorship; he was defeated the last time in 1955 by Coleman. He won the Lieutenant Governorship four years ago by a lopsided margin.

• Robert Mason, 60, of Magee, a welder who earned the nickname "Blowtorch" for his colorful stump speeches during the 1959 gubernatorial campaign. He finished last in a four-man field with about 20,000 votes. Mason says he saves his money and either goes on vacation or runs for public office.

• Charles Sullivan, 38, of Clarksdale, the third major candidate. Sullivan, a prematurely gray-haired former district attorney, finished a surprisingly strong third in the 1959 gubernatorial campaign. He is a states-rights advocate who says he will bolt the Democratic Party rather than vote for President Kennedy. In 1960, Sullivan supported Gov. Barnett's winning slate of unpledged Presidential electors and was himself the presidential candidate of the Constitution Party in Texas.

Johnson Leads; Coleman Well Over Sullivan

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 7 (UPI). Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson and former Gov. J. P. Coleman, both committed to resist integration at every level, Wednesday built up leads that would apparently put them in an Aug. 27 runoff for the Democratic nomination for governor.

Johnson, 47, who lost three previous tries to win the office once held by his father, was virtually assured of a place in the runoff to pick a successor to Gov. Ross Barnett, prohibited by law from succeeding himself.

Coleman, who defeated Johnson in a runoff for governor eight years ago, maintained a lead of more than 11,000 votes over attorney Charles Sullivan as the slow tabulation of votes from Tuesday's primary continued.

With 1,484 of the state's 1,888 precincts complete and reports coming in from scattered incomplete precincts, Johnson led with 128,181 votes. Coleman had 107,384 and Sullivan 92,462.

Retired welder Robert (Blowtorch) Mason, who said he entered the race because he liked to make speeches, was a distant fourth with less than 2,000 votes.

Democratic nomination usually is tantamount to election in Mississippi but the runoff winner this year faces the first Republican candidate for governor since Reconstruction, and political observers predict a tough campaign by the GOP's Rubel Phillips, a former Democrat.

RUNOFF

A runoff also appeared certain in the race for lieutenant governor. Carroll Gartin, a former lieutenant governor under Coleman, held a slim lead over former Natchez Mayor Troy B. Watkins and state Treasurer Evelyn Gandy in a five-man contest. Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, who contended he had Dixie's best record in fighting civil rights cases, apparently won a new term in a bitter battle with state Sen. John McLaurin.

Johnson pegged this campaign on his physical resistance to court-ordered integration at the University of Mississippi last fall. He boasted in campaign posters that he "stood up for Mississippi" when he and state police engaged in a pushing and shoving match which temporarily kept federal marshals from getting Negro James Meredith into the university.

Johnson later was cited for contempt by the U. S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, which had ordered him and Barnett to refrain from interfering with Meredith's enrollment. The U. S. Supreme Court has been asked to decide whether the two will get jury trials on the contempt charges.

Johnson, who publicly describes the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as "niggers, apes, alligators, coons and possums," has asserted the federal government would never imprison a governor. He asked voter support to keep himself out of jail and to let the nation know that Mississippians support the defiant stand.

Coleman and Sullivan both said the university crisis made one thing clear: that physical resistance was not an effective means of preserving segregation. Each tried to convince the voters he could do a better job of keeping the races separated.

Coleman often reminded voters that there was total segregation in Mississippi when he was governor, immediately before Barnett took office. He liked to tell of the time a Negro tried to enter a college and state police, acting under his orders, put him in the mental hospital.

Mississippi Runoff Rivals Map Race-Issue Campaign Strategy

Pol-Miss
W-Post 8/8/63

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 7 (AP)—Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson and former Gov. J. P. Coleman planned segregation-centered strategy today for a Democratic primary runoff for Governor—their second in eight years.

Steadily mounting returns from yesterday's first primary voting kept the two political veterans well ahead in the four-man race. Sources close to both men predicted the runoff campaign would make the uneasy racial situation the prime topic.

With 1622 of the State's 1890 precincts reporting, Johnson had 134,017 votes to 114,168 for Coleman. Charles Sullivan trailed with 96,680, while run-for-fun candidate Robert Mason had 2263.

In the 1959 first primary, Coleman trailed Johnson by 18,000 votes, but won the runoff by 48,000.

All four candidates campaigned as opponents of the Kennedy Administration. Each pledged an all-out effort to thwart Administration desegregation and civil rights plans.

Continued emphasis on race, heightened by the personal clash of the two long-time foes, will bring new heat to the runoff between men who blocked efforts of Negroes to enter the University of Mississippi.

Johnson, a 47-year-old Hattiesburg attorney and son of the late Gov. Paul Johnson Sr., turned away James H. Meredith on one of the Negro student's unsuccessful bids to enter the campus last fall.

Coleman a 49-year-old Ackerman lawyer who served as Governor in 1956-60, turned away Negro Clennon King during his term of office and had him whisked to a mental hospital for observation. King was declared sane and later left the State.

Another issue that will remain before the voters is the part the two candidates played in the 1960 presidential race.

Coleman backed the national ticket. Johnson took no part, but said last month that he voted for the unpledged Democratic electors who carried the State.

The unpledged forces sought to withhold enough electoral votes from both major candidates to block the election of either, hoping to bargain for civil rights concessions in return for votes.

Citadel of Segregation

Mississippi, there she stands, the last great citadel of segregation in this country. Progress is being made in other Southern states, however slowly, toward a sane and decent balance in racial relations. If any progress is being made in Mississippi it is almost indiscernible.

In Tuesday's Democratic primary, the loudest, most violent segregationist of them all, Paul Buchanan Johnson Jr., led the four other aspirants for the gubernatorial nomination. Political observers have little doubt that he will win the runoff primary with former Gov. J. P. Coleman Aug. 27, and thus assure himself of the Governor's chair.

Mr. Coleman was the best qualified on the record and normally would have had no trouble winning. But he is what passes for a moderate in Mississippi, that is, one who believes in obeying the law, even if it be a "Washington law." And that is anathema to the Paul Johnsons and Ross Barnetts and the white citizens of the back country, if the law cuts across their prejudices.

So Mississippi again has spoken and it appears Mr. Johnson's name will be added to that long and undistinguished list of Mississippi political leaders that includes Governor Barnett, the late Senator Theodore G. Bilbo and the present Senator James O. Eastland.

It was, of course, only white Mississippi that spoke. Although almost half of the state's population of 2,200,000 is Negro, only 5 per cent of its registered voters belong to that race.

Eventually, Mississippi will have to get in step with the other 49 states. But that date seems at least a generation in the future. The philosophy of apartheid still rules in Mississippi.

Johnson, Coleman Face Runoff

Atl. Jour. 8/8/63
Pol. Miss.

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 8 (AP)—Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson and former Gov. J. P. Coleman, facing a return of their 1955 duel for the governor's office, Thursday sought support from backers of Charles Sullivan in the Aug. 27 Democratic runoff primary.

The winner will meet Rubel Phillips, a Jackson lawyer who switched his party allegiance from Democratic to Republican, in the Nov. 5 general election.

Johnson, 47, who has lost his three previous races for governor, led Coleman, 49-year-old state representative who has never lost an election in 28 years of public life, in Tuesday's first primary. Sullivan, a 38-year-old Clarksdale attorney, repeated his performance of four years ago by finishing third.

IN THAT ELECTION, Gov. Ross Barnett succeeded Coleman as governor and Johnson won his first elective spot, the lieutenant governorship.

With 1,777 of the state's 1,800 precincts reporting Tuesday's results, Johnson had 156,359 votes to 135,491 for Coleman. Sullivan had 113,825 while Robert (Blowtorch) Mason, a 65-year-old Magee welder, had 2,707.

Johnson led the first primary in 1955 by 18,000 votes but Coleman won the runoff by more than 48,000 votes.

Johnson, continuing his anti-Kennedy campaign theme, said he invited "all of the Sullivan supporters into our ranks . . . to join with us in our common cause —which is to save Mississippi from the Kennedys. . . ."

"THE JOHNSON and the Sullivan supporters have, by their votes, given overwhelming endorsement to Mississippi's official position for local self-government and individual freedom."

Coleman issued a call for all persons, regardless of "who they may have supported in the first primary," to join in his runoff campaign and attend a state organizational meeting here Friday.

Gov. Ross Barnett, who succeeded Coleman in 1960, took no part in the first primary, in keeping with state campaigning tradition.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans has declared both Barnett and Johnson guilty of civil contempt and has brought criminal contempt charges against them for defying federal court orders to admit James H. Meredith, Kosciusko Negro, to the University of Mississippi.

TO COMPETE IN MISSISSIPPI VOTE: Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, left, and former Gov. J. P. Coleman are to be opponents in Aug. 27 vote for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Mississippi. Mr. Johnson placed first and Mr. Coleman second in four-man first lap of primary race. They are shown at a meeting held early in the campaign.

Racial Extremist Tops Field In Mississippi Primary Voting

By JOSEPH A. LOFTUS

Special to The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 7 — A spokesman for extreme segregationists who is a strident antagonist of President Kennedy emerged today as top man in the first lap of the Democratic primary for Governor.

He is Lieut Gov. Paul B. Johnson Jr., who campaigned largely on his role of resistance to Federal troops and to marshals when they forced the desegregation of the University of Mississippi last fall.

The second man in the primary, who will be Mr. Johnson's opponent in the run-off Aug. 27, was former Gov. J. P. Coleman.

Mr. Coleman paid his respects to segregation in the campaign but offered four years of "peace and tranquility." Mr. Johnson scoffed repeatedly at that slogan. "A mockingbird in the magnolia trees," he called it.

Although a rightist, and an anti-party and anti-Kennedy man, Mr. Coleman spoke of "colored people" rather than of "niggers," which is the common pejorative in this state.

Eliminated in the voting was Charles L. Sullivan, a District Attorney from northwest Mississippi.

Coleman an Underdog

A fourth candidate, Robert Mason, did not take himself seriously and has returned to his welding shop with a consolation prize of 2,000 votes.

With 1,622 of the 1,890 precincts counted, Mr. Johnson had 134,017 votes. Mr. Coleman 114,168 and Mr. Sullivan 96,680.

Mr. Coleman is rated an underdog in the second primary, for which campaigning is expected to begin immediately.

Eight years ago, he finished second to Mr. Johnson in a five-way primary contest. Then Mr. Coleman swept the finals. In those days, however, John F. Kennedy was still in the Senate and segregation was not quite the acute issue that it is today.

Mr. Coleman supported the Kennedy-Johnson ticket in 1960 and for that he was put on the defensive in the campaign. His record as Governor, Attorney General, member of the state Supreme Court and State representative was never questioned.

The old rivalry between the Red Hills of the northeast and the river delta was presumably not vital, either. Mr. Sullivan, a delta man, lost. Mr. Coleman, a hill man, came out second best.

Supported by Eastland

Some of the businessmen who backed Mr. Sullivan undoubtedly will prefer Mr. Coleman to Mr. Johnson because of their interest in "peace and tranquility" that the former Governor holds out. However, the general political thrust of Mr. Sullivan's campaign was more closely attuned to the beliefs of the Johnson extremists.

Mr. Johnson, who is 47 years old and the son of a former Governor, had the silent but probably effective support of the White Citizens Council, Senator James O. Eastland and Gov. Ross R. Barnett, who was not eligible to succeed himself.

A slim chance for moderation emerged in the contest for Attorney General. Joe T. Patterson, the incumbent, won renomination without a run-off by defeating John C. McLaurin. Although both are segregationists, Mr. McLaurin demanded more militancy.

Mississippi will see a vigorous campaign by Republicans for the first time since Reconstruction. Rubel Phillips, a former Democratic officeholder, will run for Governor as "the only true conservative." He hopes to bring Senator Barry Goldwater into the state to capitalize on the Arizona Republican's popularity here.

Shaken Sullivan Backs Down On JP Support

Seasoned Politicians Calling Shots

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Seasoned politicians will be heading the Mississippi Legislature despite the shakeup in Tuesday's Democratic primary.

With House Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar back for another term and two veterans — former Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin and state treasurer Evelyn Gandy — running it off for lieutenant governor and Senate presiding officer, veterans will be in command in both houses.

In the Tishomingo - Itawamba Senate race, Clovis Frane of Iuka will face R. C. McCarver of Fulton in a runoff.

In Jones County, Sen. E. K. Collins of Laurel apparently won re-nomination over two opponents. In Jackson County, Rep. Merle Palmer of Pascagoula won a 2-man race. In Leflore, C. L. Patridge of Schlater will face Hugh Sutherland in a runoff.

In the Jefferson-Claiborne Senate race, Sen. P. M. Watkins of Port Gibson won a 2-man race. Frank Leftwich defeated two opponents for the Monroe Senate seat. State Civil Defense director Robert Cook won the Sunflower nomination for senator, but will face a Republican. Sen. R. D. Anderson of Buena Vista won renomination from Clay-Chickasaw.

Former State Tax Commissioner Noel Monaghan of Tupelo won the Lee County Senate seat.

In Hinds County House races, Reps. Russell Davis, Sutton Marks and Joe Moss won renomination. Rep. Jim Neal was unopposed. Five new seats were at stake and James Arden Barnett and Billy Thompson, son of Mayor Allen Thompson of Jackson, were first primary winners. Runoffs will match Charles Henley-W. C. Hughery, Horace Lester-Minor Sumners, and Henry Thomas-W. E. McKinley.

In the Madison race, Rep. Milton Case won re-nomination. Jerry Wilburn won the Itawamba seat.

Dana Moore won one Bolivar County House seat, while Walter Merritt and J. A. Thigpen will meet for the other.

Rep. John Neill will face T. G. Nixon for one Jones County seat. Charles Blackwell led James Clarke for the second. Estus Graham took the third.

Rep. Thompson McClellan won in Clay County. Roy Black defeated former Lt. Gov. Sam Lumpkin for one Lee County seat. Rep. Odie Trenor will face Ed Demeville for the Chicasaw seat.

In Lauderdale, Mrs. Gordon White will face R. H. Runn for one seat, while Rep. Betty Long took a second. Jim Collier was unopposed for a third, but faces Republican opposition from Rep. L. L. McAllister.

Rep. Joe Bailey won re-election in Yalobusha. Rep. Gladys Slayden won re-election in Marshall.

Mississippi Should Choose J. P. Coleman

Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson has asked for the support of all Sullivan voters.

Former Gov. J. P. Coleman has asked for the support of the people of Mississippi.

Therein lies an indication of the essential difference between the two remaining candidates for the highest political office in Mississippi.

The Commonwealth supported in the first primary the candidacy of Charles L. Sullivan, believing that he would have made Mississippi one of its greatest governors. We are still of that opinion and we certainly hope that Mississippi hasn't lost the example of his forthright approach to state problems.

In the meantime a choice must be made between Johnson and Coleman.

Our choice is Coleman.

We have no quarrel at all with those Sullivan supporters who now wish to switch to Johnson, nor those Johnson people who voted their convictions on Tuesday. A man's secret ballot is his most precious right in this America we all love.

But it is also a right, in this case a duty, for citizens to express their choice and the reasons for it.

First, as the Commonwealth pointed out repeatedly even while supporting Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Coleman made Mississippi one of its finest governors from 1956-60.

Second, Mr. Coleman has admitted that he made a mistake in supporting the election of John F. Kennedy in 1960. Over 108,000 Mississippians made the same mistake that year.

But Coleman did take a stand. Like Sullivan he made a choice and let that choice be known at a time when the direction the political winds might blow later was unknown.

Before the Ole Miss-Meredith crisis, we remember remarking that Sullivan and Coleman could beat Mr. Johnson to death in the first primary campaign just ended.

"I was here," Sullivan could have said.

"I was there," Coleman could have said.

"But where in the world was little Paul,," both might have chorused.

Of course, the Meredith crisis changed that. It was an event that couldn't have been foreseen by any politician in 1960. We have since, editorially done our small part to lay that American tragedy at the doorsteps on which it belongs, that of John F. and Robert F. Kennedy.

We remember expressing our admiration for Governor Ross Barnett's stand, and we still think it was magnificent right up to the point where he failed to go to Ole Miss himself to keep things under control while dramatizing, as he did so well, the position of Mississippi's people.

But we have always maintained that any credit accruing to Barnett out of those tragic events, shouldn't mistakenly be deposited to the political account of Paul Johnson.

Johnson danced his jig with Meredith and McShane at a time when he couldn't possibly have done anything else. As Charles Sullivan and Coleman both pointed out during the first primary campaign, a second Negro entered the University of Mississippi law school recently and Paul Johnson was nowhere in sight.

Mr. Coleman's bald promise that he can insure continued racial peace and segregation in Mississippi we felt in the first primary campaign was ill advised and we still believe it to be so. But we also believe that he will be more capable or fullfilling that promise than Paul Johnson.

There are other reasons J. P. Coleman should be sent back to the governor's office. His skill as an administrator, his ability as a champion for Mississippi causes while he held that office, his reputation for making hard decisions unflinchingly are some of them.

Meanwhile, it is beginning to appear that if the entire story of why Mr. Sullivan withdrew at the last moment his support of Coleman ever comes out it will make Johnson's previous campaign tactics look like Boy Scout pranks.

And there have been some underhanded developments coming from Johnson's side of the aisle.

Mr. Johnson beat himself in 1955 by calling Mr. Coleman a draft dodger. He's hinted at even more malicious tactics in this campaign.

Can a man who resorts to such tactics in a campaign change after he reaches the governor's office and conduct the people's affair's the way they want them conducted?

The answer should be simple.

Candidate Hints Threats To Family

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Mystery hung over the position of defeated gubernatorial candidate Charles Sullivan today as two political veterans fired opening guns in the second Democratic primary battle.

Sullivan, expected earlier to throw support to former Gov. J. P. Coleman, told a news conference Thursday with tears in his eyes he would make no statement because "something happened.'

Moments afterward a top Sullivan campaign manager, Ed Jenkins of Hattiesburg, announced he would actively support Coleman against Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson.

Sullivan did not have a specifically named state campaign manager. A Sullivan worker told The Associated Press that Jenkins and O. U. Sullivan, a brother of Charles, managed the Sullivan campaign.

Sullivan, visibly shaken, declined to reveal developments.

One of his workers said later he could not reveal it either "but it makes you sick to your stomach."

With 1,867 of 1,890 precincts counted, Johnson held a lead of 176,495 votes. Coleman had 151,930 and Sullivan 126,946. Run-for-fun candidate Robert Mason of Magee had 3,445.

Johnson, the first to claim Sullivan votes, said at a leadership rally Thursday, "Sullivan's defeat has not changed the issue, but clarifies it."

At the rally, Rex Armistead of Lulu, a close friend of Sullivan and one of his campaign pilots, came out in support of Johnson.

Coleman appeared on television Thursday night and took on one of the biggest issues of the campaign—the Kennedy administration and his support of it in 1960.

'I made a mistake,' Coleman said in reference to the support He said he did what he thought was best, and attacked Johnson for remaining silent at the time.

Jenkins appeared with Coleman, urging Sullivan voters to join in support of the 49-year-old Coleman and predicted they would.

Coleman told Sullivan, Jenkins said, "four days ago he would not support the Kennedys in 1964. This satisfied Mr. Sullivan and it satisfied me."

In 1952 and 1956, Coleman said, he battled on behalf of the Southern position at National Democratic Conventions and the South won. Johnson, he said, did nothing.

Johnson told his rally he and Sullivan fought for many of the same things and "we have a lot to fight for. I want to thank those Sullivan supporters who have called from all over the state—we have a common cause."

"If there is any mud-slinging or accusations we're going to meet it head-on at the crossroads," Johnson said, implying such might come from Coleman.

Armistead said, "There's a rumor going around that some of our people have gone over to Coleman. I don't know the percentage, but I can tell you its damn few."

Thursday night Johnson told a television audience Sullivan supporters were coming to him. The Armistead said, "There's a rumor going around that some of our people have gone over to Coleman. I don't know the percentage, but I can tell you its damn few."

Thursday night Johnson told a television audience Sullivan supporters were coming to him. The 47-year-old Hattiesburg attorney, trying a fourth time for governor, said constitutional government would be a big issue leading up to the Aug. 27 second primary.

He again said "the Kennedy albatross" hung about Colemans neck and praised the industrial record of the administration of Gov. Ross Barnett and himself.

Coleman told his audience later the state was solid for constitutional government, therefore it was not an issue. He said the industry and Balance Agriculture with Industry bond issue program of his 1956-60 administration matched that of Barnett.

Sullivan told his press conference he may schedule another conference by Saturday to announce his plans.

Sullivan said, "Some things were done in this campaign that were a discredit to this state." He said threats had been directed toward him and his family.

The threats, he said, came from people who believe in "any thing to get elected . . . not my kind of politics."

Sullivan workers indicated later the "something that caused Sullivan to withhold a statement of support was not connected with anything directed personally at him or his family."

As Sullivan was finishing his press conference, Jenkins whispered to him. He said Jenkins had something to say and left as Jenkins began talking.

"I am supporting J. P. Coleman in the second primary," Jenkins said. "I am speaking for myself. I will be working in his behalf."

Sullivan said he had no plans for any political future after the second primary.

LOSER IN MISSISSIPPI SUPPORTS COLEMAN

NYT 8/13/63

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 12 (UPI)—A defeated candidate in Mississippi's Governors' primary last Tuesday gave his support tonight to former Gov. J. P. Coleman. He said he had extracted a promise from Mr. Coleman to "oppose President Kennedy's policies and re-election."

Charles L. Sullivan, a lawyer, ran third in the Democratic primary and was eliminated. He said he would support Mr. Coleman over Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnhson Jr. in the run-off election on Aug. 27. Mr. Sullivan poled about 130,000 votes in the primary.

The endorsement considerably strengthened Mr. Coleman's position in the run-off for the Democrat nomination, which usually assures victory in Mississippi's general election.

Mr. Coleman trailed Johnson in the first primary by about 20,000 votes. Mr. Johnson polled more than 180,000 and Mr. Coleman nearly 160,000.

Mr. Sullivan, who attacked Mr. Coleman throughout the primary campaign as a "Kennedy man," said on a statewide television program:

"I do not approve of all his past political practices, but it must be recognized that we have but one of two choices."

Mr. Sullivan said he received Mr. Coleman's "solemn oath, his solid word" to oppose the Kennedy Administration.

A Judge for Mississippi

Pol. Miss.

IN THESE days when Ross Barnett stands as the foremost spokesman of the people of Mississippi and that state seems to draw the line nowhere on racial demagoguery, we are inclined to forget there are better men there.

Gov. Barnett's latest appointment to the Mississsippi Supreme Court is, however, a negative reminder of them. The appointee, Circuit Judge Tom P. Brady, stands in stark contrast against a Mississippi judicial history that sometimes has been a source of light in days of darkness.

Judge Brady is a kind of patron saint of white supremacy. Possessing the mien of a gentleman and an education that would suggest erudition, he nevertheless has preached ignorance and defiance of the law. He replied to the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision by vilification of the justices, advocacy of racial repression, and assertions that Negroes, like lizards, are inferior beings that do not advance. He was the father of the Citizens Councils.

We have heard most of his line from others, as well. But somehow the selection of Judge Brady for the Mississippi Supreme Court is especially ironic. While politicians have played demagogue, the justices of that bench often have shown wisdom reflecting great credit upon their state.

As tempers and tempests raged without, the court thundered some time ago that "whatever the governor does in the execution of the laws . . . must be . . . in strict subordination to the general law of the land." In another decision this court of respected Mississippians, to the chagrin of the extremists, affirmed that the United States "is not merely a league of sovereign states . . . but a supreme federal government." The judges said federal laws bind "the judges in every state . . . anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding."

There has been courage and simple dignity in the past pronouncements of Mississippi's highest court.

This appointment must be analyzed as political, and perhaps the atmosphere of the court will enable the new justice to grow up to his job.

MISSISSIPPIANS GO TO POLLS TUESDAY

Democrats Vie in Runoff for Gubernatorial Post

NYT 8/25/63

By JOHN HERBERS

Special to The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 24—Mississippi voters, in effect, will elect their next Governor Tuesday in a Democratic primary runoff. Their choice is between Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson Jr., who promises four more years of defiance of Washington, and former Gov. J. P. Coleman, who says he can prevent further racial integration without an open clash between the state and Federal governments.

The race involves a power struggle between Mississippi political factions and could determine the future of Senator John Stennis, an ally of Mr. Coleman.

Mr. Johnson, who has the behind-the-scenes support of Gov. Ross R. Barnett and Senator James O. Eastland, led the ticket in the first primary Aug. 6 by 26,000 votes. He is still running strong despite the fact that the third man in the race, Charles L. Sullivan, came out in support of Mr. Coleman after being eliminated.

G.O.P. Chances Slim

The winner will face a young Republican opponent, Rubel Phillips, in the November general election. Despite the strong Republican currents running through the Deep South, it is considered highly unlikely that Mr. Phillips could defeat either Democrat. He has never made a statewide race.

The runoff campaign, like that of the initial primary, has been devoted almost entirely to two issues—"Kennedyism" and the admission of James H. Meredith, a Negro, to the University of Mississippi last year.

Mr. Johnson, making his fourth race for the Governor's office, has based his campaign chiefly on the fact that he turned back Mr. Meredith from the gates of the school last Sept. 26, three days before Mr. Meredith was finally admitted.

Mr. Johnson has displayed throughout the state a picture purportedly showing his fist raised as he confronted Mr. Meredith and chief U. S. Marshal James P. McShane.

Mr. Coleman contends the picture was doctored. He has produced a photograph showing Mr. Johnson and Mr. McShane shaking hands in front of the university.

"The fist went down and Meredith went in," leading to riots that killed two and injured scores, Mr. Coleman says.

Mr. Coleman also points out that Mr. Johnson has been charged with criminal contempt for his defiance of a Federal Court order. He said the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals could hold this over his head for the next four years.

It is doubtful, however, how effective this type of documentation will be. The Mississippi electorate appears today to be divided into two major cate-

Mr. Coleman also points out that Mr. Johnson has been charged with criminal contempt for his defiance of a Federal Court order. He said the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals could hold this over his head for the next four years.

It is doubtful, however, how effective this type of documentation will be. The Mississippi electorate appears today to be divided into two major categories.

2 Factions Are Cited

The first, which includes the entire White Citizens' Councils, favors open defiance of the Federal Government as the best means of turning back what is viewed as rapidly growing Federal authority and diminishing power of the states.

The second category favors maintaining "the Southern way of life" as much as possible through established political and legal channels without disrupting the domestic peace.

Neither Negro voters nor whites who would like to see Mississippi move into the mainstream of American political and social thought are sufficient in number to win the favor of the candidates.

The Negro vote is estimated to be about 25,000, little more than it was a decade ago. The total vote in the first primary was 475,000.

Mr. Johnson has taken the militant line. He told a citizens' council meeting he was willing to throw his body between the white people of Mississippi and "the forces of Federal tyranny."

Traditional issues, such as state services and fiscal policies, as well as the factional fight involved have been largely obscured by the race problem.

The Governor of Mississippi traditionally has a large voice in determining who will represent the state in Washington and the course the state will follow in national politics.

It is reported that if Mr. Johnson wins he will be under pressure from many who helped him gain office to put up an opponent to Senator Stennis, who faces re-election next year.

If Mr. Coleman wins, however, Mr. Stennis is virtually assured another term without serious opposition.

Senator Eastland has been aligned politically with Mr. Johnson, largely because Mr. Johnson's father, the late Gov. Paul B. Johnson Sr., appointed him to his first term in the Senate. Mr. Eastland has not openly supported Mr. Johnson in this race but it is known that he has made personal contacts on his behalf.

Mr. Stennis's part in the campaign, if any, has not been disclosed. Mr. Johnson carried the Senator's home county, Kemper, in the first primary.

It is customary for members of Congress to take no active part in the Governor's race, but there are reports that some House members from Mississippi, as well as Mr. Eastland, have given their support to Mr. Johnson.

Mr. Coleman has the support of a large part of the business community, which desires to see domestic peace during the next four years.

There is also concern on the part of some business people that Mr. Johnson would have so many political debts to repay if elected that the state's fiscal policy, traditionally conservative, would be disrupted.

Mississippi Votes Today In Runoff

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—An estimated 445,000 Mississippi voters will wade through a maze of conflicting anti-Kennedy claims Tuesday to choose between former Gov. J. P. Coleman and Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson for governor in a second Democratic Primary.

Coleman and Johnson, both pledge all-out opposition to the Kennedy administration and its civil rights programs, campaigned as staunch segregationists.

Polls in the state's 1,890 precincts will open at 8 a.m. (Atlanta time) and close at 7 p.m. ballots will be counted by hand in all precincts except the 17 in Adams County (Natchez).

The winner of the Democratic nomination will face Republican Rubel Phillips and Independent Ed Bishop in the Nov. 5 general election for the right to succeed Gov. Ross Barnett next January.

Barnett, prohibited by state law from succeeding himself, took no public part in the race, but was known to back Johnson, who led in the first primary balloting Aug. 6 by 26,000 votes.

Mississippi Votes Today in Governor Primary

By JOHN HERBERS
Special to The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 26—J. P. Coleman appealed to Mississippi voters today to end "rancor and hate" and follow a new course in race relations by nominating him tomorrow for Governor.

The former Governor's appeal for moderation marked the end of an emotionally charged Democratic primary campaign. The Administration's actions and the integration of the University of Mississippi last year obscured all other issues.

About 450,000 persons are expected to vote in the primary run-off between Mr. Coleman, 49 years old, and Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson Jr., 47.

Mr. Johnson has pledged to continue the militant racist policies of Gov. Ross R. Barnett, who, by law, cannot succeed himself.

Whirl of Activity

The candidates wound up their campaigns with television appearances, stump talks and full-page newspaper ads.

Mr. Johnson, making his fourth bid for the office, led the ticket by 26,000 votes in the first primary Aug. 6. He says he will win by a landslide.

Mr. Coleman, however, is not to be discounted. He defeated Mr. Johnson by 50,000 votes in a 1955 run-off for Governor.

Coleman Urges End of Racial Hatred—Johnson Assails Him as a Moderate

Mr. Coleman warned that the racial issue "is going to destroy our state and everything we hold dear if we don't control it."

"Malice, distrust, rancor and hate create dangerous divisions among our people," he said. "The state that sired L. Q. C. Lamar, Jefferson Davis and John Quitman can rise again from the ashes of delusion and doubt."

If Mr. Johnson is elected, Mr. Coleman said, the state will continue to have "trouble, danger and uproar."

"More and more, Mississippi is being painted as a terrible, dirty place where people love violence and bloodshed," he declared. "I want you to stop and ask yourselves how many industries have come to Mississippi since this terrible thing at Oxford [site of the university]."

Mr. Johnson based his campaign chiefly on the point that he and Governor Barnett turned back James H. Meredith, a Negro, from the university last fall. Mr. Meredith later was admitted under Federal guard. He graduated this month as the first Negro to earn a degree from the institution.

Referring to his rival, Mr. Johnson said: "There are some weak sisters in the state who are trying to find a middle ground, but there is none. Either you are for segregation or integration."

He called Mr. Coleman President Kennedy's "satellite," even though Mr. Coleman had told voters that the President would not receive Mississippi's support next year. Mr. Johnson stressed that Mr. Coleman actively supported the President in 1960.

Mr. Coleman has said he can prevent further integration by diplomacy, without open conflict between the state and Federal governments. He has noted that Mississippi had no integration when he was Governor from 1956 to 1960.

The victor will face a Republican in the general election for the first time since Reconstruction days. Rubel Phillips, a young attorney, is the opposition candidate.

Race, Kennedys Mississippi Issues In Governor Vote

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 27 (AP)—An estimated 445,000 Mississippi Democrats went to the polls Tuesday to choose between Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson and former Gov. J. P. Coleman for governor.

Conflicting victory claims added to the confusion of last-minute charges and countercharges, pleas for votes and reports of possible Negro vote-ins to write a hectic finish to a torrid race based largely on racial matters.

The Kennedy administration and its civil rights program and the University of Mississippi desegregation crisis last fall provided most of the election fodder. Both candidates pledged opposition to the Kennedys and efforts to preserve segregation.

The winner will run in the Nov. 5 general election against Republican Rubel Phillips and independent Ed Bishop, who has announced but not qualified.

Johnson Swept In by Mississippi

Pol. Miss.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson scored a landslide victory Tuesday night in the Mississippi Democratic Primary for governor—an overwhelming endorsement of his staunch segregationist stand.

The 47-year-old Hattiesburg attorney, who failed in three earlier bids for the office, led from the start and held a 50,000-vote margin over former Gov. J. P. Coleman at midnight.

Johnson, who slept quietly through the first hours of tabulating, swamped Coleman after campaigning as an ardent foe of President John F. Kennedy and as an unyielding segregationist.

He frequently reminded voters that he had once blocked federal government efforts to enter James Meredith, a Negro, in the University of Mississippi.

Coleman, at his home in Ackerman, said: "It looks like the election is going against us. I'm looking ahead to the future and private life if the returns continue as they are."

With 1,593 of the state's 1,885 precincts reporting, Johnson had 217,906 votes and Coleman 162,040.

Avid Segregationist Wins in Mississippi

8/28/1963

By JOHN HERBERS

Special to The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 27—Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson Jr., who is pledged to continue Gov. Ross R. Barnett's militant racial policies, won the Democratic nomination for Governor tonight by a decisive margin.

Mr. Johnson defeated J. P. Coleman, a scholarly former Governor who had pleaded for a more moderate course in opposing Federal integration orders, in a bitter primary run-off.

Unofficial results from 1,198 of the states 1,874 precincts gave Mr. Johnson 127,526 votes to 91, 256 for Mr. Coleman. Mr. Johnson was leading in virtually every area of the state.

So strong was the anti-Kennedy feeling in Mississippi that former Lieut. Gov. Carroll Gartin, who had won two terms by wide margins, was in trouble in his bid for a third term as lieutenant governor.

Mr. Gartin, who supported President Kennedy in 1960 along with Mr. Coleman, was running just about even with State Treasurer Evelyn Gandy, who is aligned politically with Mr. Johnson.

The 47-year-old Lieutenant Governor had four times been rejected by the voters in his bid for high office, once for United States Senator and three times for Governor. But his political stock soared when he and Governor Barnett physically turned back James H. Meredith from the University of Mississippi last year and was charged with criminal contempt of court for blocking a Federal Court order.

Mr. Johnson based his campaign almost solely on the University of Mississippi incident, despite the fact that Mr. Meredith was enrolled as an undergraduate and was graduated earlier this month as the first Negro to earn a degree from the state institution.

He also won votes by charging that Mr. Coleman, who is 49, was the "Kennedy candidate." Mr. Coleman, who campaigned for President Kennedy in 1960, told voters he had made a mistake and pledged he would not support President Kennedy in 1964 because of the Administration's civil rights policies.

Mr. Coleman denied Mr. Johnson's charges that the President and his brother, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, were helping finance his campaign.

Mr. Johnson faces opposition in the November general election in Rubel Phillips, a young Jackson lawyer who is the first strong Republican candidate for Governor since Reconstruction days. Phillips's chances are considered slim, however, against the tightly organized state Democratic organization.

Mr. Johnson's victory reflects the strength of the White Citizens Council, a prosegregation organization of the far right that has exercised a strong influence in Governor Barnett's administration.

If Mr. Johnson wins,. as expected, in November, Mississippi will have at least another four years of leadership like Mr. Barnett's.

A Johnson victory could also have repercussions in Washington. The Citizens Councils and other strong supporters of Mr. Johnson are reported ready to put up an opponent next year to Senator John Stennis, who is politcally aligned with Mr. Coleman.

A Coleman victory would have assured another term for Senator Stennis.

Senator Jomes O. Eastland and Governor Barnett worked behind the scenes for a Johnson victory. Mr. Eastland was first appointed to the Senate by Mr. Johnson's father, the late Gov. Paul B. Johnson Sr.

Mr. Coleman received support on the eve of the election when Charles Sullivan, who was eliminated in the first primary, appealed to his supporters to vote for the former Governor. Mr. Sullivan, who polled 132,000 votes in the first primary, Mr. Coleman was not the "Kennedy candidate,' as Mr. Johnson had charged.

Mr. Sullivan is not a moderate on the racial issue. He based his support on the belief that Mr. Coleman would run a cleaner administration than Mr. Johnson.

Were it not for the "Kennedy issue," Mr. Sullivan said, Mr. Coleman could be expected to win by a landslide on the basis of his first administration.

Johnson Promises to Fight 'Federal Regimentation'

NYT 8/29/63

By JOHN HERBERS

Special to The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 28—Paul B. Johnson Jr., who won the Democratic nomination for Governor yesterday, promised Mississippians today that he would work for defeat of "the dark forces" of "Federal control and regimentation" in the next four years.

Mr. Johnson, the state's Lieutenant Governor, soundly defeated former Gov. J. P. Coleman, who is more moderate on the racial issue, in yesterday's primary runoff.

He was swept to victory on a wave of anti-Kennedy sentiment that has gripped this state since the riots at the University of Mississippi last year.

With only a few precincts still to report, the unofficial tabulation of votes stood at about 260,000 for Mr. Johnson to about 196,000 for Mr. Coleman.

"The next four years will be decisive insofar as the future of Mississippi and our sister states are concerned," Mr. Johnson said in a victory statement. "We have to defeat the dark forces of economic maladjustment, Federal control and regimentation."

Must Defeat Republican

The 47-year-old nominee must first defeat a strong Republican candidate in the November general election. Rubel Phillips, a 38-year-old Jackson attorney, is the first serious Republican contender for the Governor's office since Reconstruction. He expect to begin campaigning full-time next month.

Mr. Phillips is expected to tell voters that the best way to defeat President Kennedy in 1964 is to elect a Republican Governor who would help bring about the nomination of Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona for President.

Mr. Johnson's primary campaign was based chiefly on the fact that he physically barred James H. Meredith from the University of Mississippi last year and was later charged with criminal contempt of court for defying an order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

The Negro student was later enrolled. He graduated this month.

Mr. Johnson could be convicted of contempt while is is serving as Governor. The case is now on appeal to the Supreme Court, which will decide whether he will be tried by jury.

White Mississippians blame President Kennedy and his brother Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy for forced integration of the university. Mr. Johnson tagged Mr. Coleman the "Kennedy candiate" because Mr. Coleman had supported Mr. Kennedy in the 1960 election.

Two members of the Coleman faction, however, did squeak by in yesterday's voting despite their support of Mr. Kennedy in 1960. Carroll Gartin was nominated Lieutenant Governor over State Treasurer Evelyn Gandy and J. M. Tubb was renominated Superintendent of Education over former State Auditor Boyd Golding.

Mississippi's Course

THE DUTY of a politician in a time of emergency is to somehow reconcile reason and popular sentiment. At polling places Tuesday, Mississippi voters showed that these two cannot be joined in their state in the summer of 1963.

The man who tried to bring about the reconciliation was J. P. Coleman, a former governor whose record in office would be a credit to any state. Mr. Coleman is a poor farmer's son who worked his way through college. He also is a smalltown lawyer, close to grassroots sentiment, and he knew as well as anyone that violent winds were blowing against him.

Mr. Coleman lost to Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson, who had the support of Gov. Ross Barnett and the Citizens Councils. Two years ago most Mississippians took for granted that Coleman would be the next governor. He was a popular man.

But Mr. Johnson, who had run unsuccessfully for governor on three occasions and whose only claim to distinction is that his father once was governor, has won by a landslide, and for unmistakable reasons: He persuaded the voters he was more extreme on the race issue, and that he was unrelentingly anti-Kennedy.

In his efforts to reconcile reason and popular beliefs, Mr. Coleman made occasional bows to demagoguery during the campaign. But he rose to the issue many times, and especially on the day before the election, when he said this:

"Malice, distrust, rancor and hate create dangerous divisions among our people. The state that sired L. Q. C. Lamar, Jefferson Davis and John Quitman can rise again from the ashes of delusion and doubt."

The next day the voters replied that they were not ready to rise from delusion. The delusion is that the Barnett-Johnson approach can prevail against the full weight of the United States. The fact is that Johnson's election is likely to assure a much greater federal presence in Mississippi during the next four years than Coleman's moderation would have.

Mississippi Picks JFK Foe Johnson

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 28 (AP)—Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson Jr., militant anti-Kennedy segregationist, ended 16 years of political frustration Wednesday, winning the Democratic nomination for governor of Mississippi by a record vote.

Johnson overwhelmed former Gov. J. P. Coleman after a bitter campaign which centered on white voters' deep-rooted opposition to President Kennedy and his civil rights program.

Paul Johnson

Johnson reminded voters he still faces federal contempt of court charges for his part in temporarily blocking Negro James H. Meredith from enrolling in the University of Mississippi last September.

He also called Coleman the "Kennedy satellite candidate." Coleman supported the President in the 1960 race.

Coleman argued that he was anti-Kennedy, too, saying he erred in 1960.

With 1,866 of the state's 1,877 precincts reported, the unofficial count gave 259,481 votes for Johnson to 193,827 for Coleman. It was the highest ballot ever for a gubernatorial candidate.

The previous high for a winning candiate was 233,237 votes for Coleman in his 1955 runoff victory over Johnson.

Johnson faces Republican Rubel Phillips in the Nov. 5 general election. A newly expanded Republican state headquarters staff promised Phillips would be more than the usual token GOP candidates in this overwhelmingly Democratic state and there were indications many anti-Johnson Democrats might vote for Phillips.

An independent has also announced for the general election.

JOHNSON, son of a former governor, lost three previous races for the nomination, including one to Coleman in the 1955 runoff. He also was beaten in a race for the U.S. Senate before being elected lieutenant governor four years ago.

Gov. Ross Barnett, barred by law from succeeding himself, joined the crowd of cheering Johnson fans at an election party. He said he voted for Johnson.

Johnson slept from 5:30 p.m., half an hour before the polls closed, until 9 p.m., when aides told him he had a 25,000-vote lead. Then he and his wife went to the election party that already had become a victory celebration. He issued a brief statement thanking supporters, then went back to bed.

At Coleman's headquarters in Ackerman, the ex-governor told newsmen with a smile, "I'm looking ahead to the future and private life if the returns continue as they are."

COLEMAN drew the support of Charles Sullivan of Clarksdale, who finished third in the first primary. Returns made clear that the Sullivan vote split in Johnson's favor in the runoff. Johnson had a 26,000-vote margin over Coleman in the first primary.

Johnson backers felt his victory was a mandate for continued opposition to federal civil rights programs.

There was no indication of how the state's estimated 30,000 Negro votes went.

Mississippi Stands Firm

Politics - Miss.

The nomination of the loudest segregationist of them all, among the Democrats running for Governor of Mississippi, was not unexpected but is not the less regrettable.

Had Paul B. Johnson Jr. defeated former Gov. J. P. Coleman by only a small margin in the runoff primary, some hope might be held for a start toward a rule of reason in Mississippi on racial matters. Mr. Coleman is what is known as a moderate in those parts. But Mr. Johnson won with the largest vote ever cast for a gubernatorial candidate and with an impressive margin over Mr. Coleman. Mississippi's racists spoke Tuesday with an emphatic voice.

Nowhere else in the South are the white Citizens Councils and the Ku Klux Klan so strong. Most of the more substantial citizens belong to one or the other, or to both, of the two Negro-hating and Negro-baiting organizations. With only one or two notable exceptions, its newspapers sing daily a hymn of hate against President Kennedy, all Northerners, the Fourteenth Amendment and any attempt to give the state's 915,000 Negroes (42 per cent of the population) either vote or voice in management of their state's affairs. Some day Mississippi will have to rejoin the union. Tuesday's election, however, seems to have postponed the date.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson Wednesday called his record-shattering victory in the Mississippi Democratic governor's race a defeat for "the dark forces of federal control."

The 47-year-old Hattiesburg lawyer, who carried 69 of the state's 82 counties in Tuesday's runoff primary, won by more than 65,000 votes over former Gov. J. P. Coleman.

Johnson still faces the Nov. 5 general election but his victory statement ignored Republican and possibly independent opposition and assumed he would take office Jan. 21.

However, most observers predict Republican Rubel Phillips will be the first serious GOP contender since Reconstruction days after the Civil War.

Although both Johnson and Coleman campaigned as anti-Kennedy segregationists, Johnson hammered away at Coleman's support of President John F. Kennedy in the 1960 national election.

And Johnson repeatedly told the state he "stood up for Mississippi" when he blocked an effort by Negro James H. Meredith to enter the University of Mississippi last fall. The lieutenant governor faces federal contempt of court prosecution as a result.

Returns from all but two of the state's 1,877 precincts gave Johnson 261,424 votes to 195,094 for Coleman.

Mississippi Newspaper Endorses a Republican

NY TIMES 8/31/63

ACKERMAN, Miss., Aug. 30 (AP)—The Choctaw Plaindealer, hometown newspaper of J. P. Coleman, unsuccessful Democratic gubernatorial candidate, has endorsed the Republican candidate for Governor, Rubel Phillips.

Former Governor Coleman, an Ackerman lawyer, lost by 65,000 votes to Lieut. Gov. Paul Johnson in the Democratic primary runoff Tuesday.

"We think the only hope for the people of Mississippi to beat Kennedy now is to vote for a Republican Governor in November, and for a Republican President in 1964," the newspaper said.

The votes have been counted and another stand-in-the-door man has been elected in Mississippi.

Making much of his defiance of desegregation at the University of Mississippi, Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson has defeated J. P. Coleman for governor by more than 65,000 votes.

Gov. Ross Barnett, the incumbent, is limited by Mississippi law to one term of door-standing, and that term now nears its end.

Mississippi needs another stand-in-the-door man about like the bayou needs more mud. Schoolhouse doors have been blocked both in Mississippi and Alabama, but those schools eventually wound up just as desegregated as schools with unstood-in doors.

Johnson, however, apparently thinks the answer is more door-standing. He urges Mississippi to "fight harder next time school integration is threatened."

The lessons of Barnett and Oxford evidently have not yet caught hold in Mississippi. We only can wish for the people of Mississippi that they will not be led by their elected officials into more futile and tragic acts of defiance in the years ahead.

candidate Rubel Phillips in the November general election.

And like Gov. Barnett, who backed his second-in-command and is looking to him to retain those he placed in major state appointive jobs, the legislative leaders expect to continue to be recognized in their present policy-shaping roles.

MEANWHILE, and for all practical purposes, the new and first reapportioned legislature since 1890 is almost all set to begin work. It convenes Jan. 7, but will mark time until the new governor takes office Jan. 21.

As for organization of the House of Representatives, that has been settled. Veteran House speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County, holder of that office since 1944, has enough advance pledges to return as presiding officer. He did such a good organization job he hasn't even stirred up rumored opposition.

Also, chairmen of 23 of the 54 committees, named four years ago by Speaker Sillers, have been re-elected and obviously will be renamed to their present assignments. Chairmen of all major committees were re-elected, headed by veteran Rep. John Junkin of Adams County, chairman of the important appropriations group.

Although Mr. Sillers lost his chairman of the revenue-raising ways and means committee, he gained the former occupant of that post in the election of Hilton Waits of Washington County, who held it for many years before he was defeated four years ago.

Mr. Waits is assured appointment to the post Rep. Charles Jacobs of Bolivar County, a relative of Speaker Sillers, relinquished in not offering for reelection to the legislature. Mr. Waits, who has served continuously since 1931, won out over Rep. Joe Wroten.

"Back in harness" are Rep. succeed Lieutenant Governor Johnson as he expectedly takes over from Governor Barnett on Jan. 21.

Former Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, the Democratic nominee, will name the committees. He is faced with the return of chairman of 18 of the 42 committees in that branch.

MR. GARTIN, who faces GOP nominee State Sen. Stanford Morse Jr., of Gulfport, announced he will rename Sen. Ellis Bodron of Vicksburg, to chairmanship of the powerful finance committee, which not only is responsible for revenue to run the government, but approves appropriations.

Mr. Gartin will reappoint Sen. Bodron, a blind legislator, even through Will G. Burgin Jr. of Columbus, who served in that post during the former lieutenant governor's second term, 1956-60, has returned to the legislature after a four-year absence.

Sen. George Yarbrough of Red Banks, the president pro tem, named by the senators, has been re-elected. He was Gov. Barnett's floor-leader and was Lt. Gov. Johnson's choice for the No. 3 state post in the 1960 senate organization.

Sen. Yarbrough also was Gov. Barnett's personal representative at the University of Mississippi the night of the Sept. 30 rioting.

Sen. Yarbrough has announced for reelection as president pro tem. He is opposed by Sen. Gillespie Montgomery of Meridian, and Hayden Campbell of Jackson.

Mr. Gartin has said he will keep "hands-off" in that contest, although he would like for the members to "consider" him in that relation. He still yields a big hand in naming the senate committees.

Some of Mr. Gartin's friends feel that the present administration is interested in naming the president pro tem since he opposed Gov. Barnett in the 1959 gubernatorial campaign. They also have a "feeling" that the present administration may reelected, headed by veteran Rep. John Junkin of Adams County, chairman of the important appropriations group.

"Back in harness" are Rep. Walter Hester of Adams County, and C. B. 'Buddie' Newman of Issaquena County, Gov. Barnett's floor leaders. They were likewise on Mr. Johnson's campaign executive committee which mapped strategy.

Also returning is Rep. Russell Fox of Claiborne County, chairman of the powerful General Legislative Investigating Committee which condemned President John F. Kennedy and other federal officials for forcing desegregation of the University of Mississippi with the support of 30,000 troops and 500 marshals. Mr. Hester is on that committee and accompanied Gov. Barnett on his trips to Oxford seeking to block desegregation of the university.

Rep. George Payne Cossar of Tallahatchie County, chairman of the controlling rules committee, and Rep. Thomas McClellan of Clay County, who drafted Mississippi's integration resisting laws, have been reelected.

The situation in the senate is somewhat different.

Some of Mr. Gartin's friends feel that the present administration is interested in naming the president pro tem since he opposed Gov. Barnett in the 1959 gubernatorial campaign. They also have a "feeling" that the present administration may be "why" Miss Evelyn Gandy, who retires as state treasurer in January, almost beat him for the democratic nomination as lieutenant governor.

FIFTY-EIGHT of the present 140-member house were reelected—that means 82 were either defeated or did not seek reelection. The new house will have 122 representatives, 64 of them new.

Twenty-four of the present 49-member senate were reelected, leaving 25 defeated or retired voluntarily. The new senate will have 52 members, 28 newcomers.

A few changes could be made in the November general election in which the Republicans have fielded 15 candidates for the house and seven for the senate. That also goes for governor and lieutenant governor.

However, the legislature will still be predominately democratic — Mississippi democratic that is since the state party is independent of the parent national organization.

PRINCETON STUDENTS WILL HEAR BARNETT

PRINCETON, N. J., Sept. 24 —Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi has agreed to address students on Princeton University's campus here next Tuesday night.

The announcement today by the Student Whig-Cliosophic Society, a campus political and debating group, that the Mississippi segregationist had accepted its offer to speak brought a quick comment from Dr. Robert F. Goheen, president of the university, that the timing of the invitation was "deplorable."

Dr. Goheen added, however, that he believed in the right of students to "hear men with strong convictions speak on issues of public moment however distasteful on occasion the views of such speakers may be to many of us."

The Daily Princetonian, the campus newspaper, will carry an editorial tomorrow calling the visit "indiscreet" but declaring that Mr. Barnett's appearance might offer "valuable experience" for the student body.

Dr. Goheen said that he had conferred with borough, township and state police to insure that an "orderly" meeting would be held.

"Democracy" in Mississippi

The nomination of Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson as the Democratic candidate for Governor of Mississippi is an obvious victory for Gov. Ross Barnett and the segregationists. It comes as no surprise to those acquainted with the dominant political sentiment in that state. Although it is said that Mr. Johnson will face the strongest Republican challenge in a century from Rubel Phillips, talk of a GOP victory in Mississippi is still in the realm of the fantastic. Pol. Miss.

Mississippi has a right, of course, to elect the Governor of its choice without regard to opinion in other parts of the Nation. What concerns a vast number of American citizens outside of that state is that an intrenched faction dedicated to flouting constitutional rights and national policy perpetuates itself in power by denying political rights to a large percentage of the people.

It has been estimated from Census Bureau figures that Mississippi has 386,000 nonwhite citizens of voting age and that about 25,000 of them are registered to vote. The potential voters who have been denied the right to register their preference, and most of whom could have been expected to vote against Mr. Johnson if they had had a chance, substantially outnumber the total vote cast for him, to say nothing of the votes actually cast for his competitor, former Governor Coleman.

It is painfully clear that the extreme segregationists in Mississippi are perpetuating their power by undemocratic means that are an affront to the remainder of the country. Mississippi has thus given Congress another pointed reminder of the necessity for Federal action if equal rights and opportunities are to be respected.

Next Governor Already Faces Money Problems

Jackson Bureau, Memphis Commercial-Appeal

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 5—The next state administration faces a money "gap" of $15.8 million even before it takes office in January.

That means new or increased taxes or drastic cuts in present biennial expenditures. The latter is definitely "out."

The financial dilemma now before the State Budget Commission, which must come up with a balanced budget by Dec. 1 for presentation in advance to the new legislature convening Jan. 7, is this:

Actual minimum needs for the new biennium total $315.8 million. That compares with the present two-year authorizations, ending next June 30, of $298 million. Built-in increases in present programs total $17.8 million and do not provide for any of the additional $50 million being requested by the various departments and institutions in keeping with the increased economic trend and "must" expansions.

TO MEET THOSE MINIMUM needs the Budget Commission foresees $300 million in revenue. Although that's $12 million more than collections in the current biennial period, $17 million of it is in stop-gap tax increases voted at the 1962 legislative session with an automatic repeal next June 30.

Re-enactment of the emergency taxes is considered a "must" by fiscal officials. Even then, on the basis of the minimum requirements for the government in the period June 30, 1964-June 30, 1966, an additional $15.8 million must be forthcoming.

Each biennial session of the legislature, meeting in January in even years, must approve a budget for the two-year period commencing the following July 1. It must also anticipate revenue collections that far in advance.

AN ANTICIPATED CASH BALANCE of at least $5 million when Gov. Ross Barnett steps from office will help the situation, but it will be far short of the minimum needs. Incidentally, the far-reaching Bill of Rights for Industry, enacted in 1960 under sponsorship of Governor Barnett, accounts for some of the projected $12 million dollars in the next biennial period.

Since the governor's program has resulted in 485 new and expanded industries, many of which will not be in full operation until the new administration takes over, it is likely that the Budget Commission will raise its $12 million figure.

That will help, but not enough since it is certain that common schools will get increased allocations, along with the institutions of higher learning.

Common schools are asking for $30 million for teacher salary increases, additional to the $14.6 million built-in to care for normal salary boosts for teachers who upgrade their degree-status for automatic stepped-up pay.

COMMON SCHOOLS now get $134.750 million. The built-in, plus the $30 million additional, would give it a two-year allocation of $179.350 million.

The colleges and universities, now getting $22 million, are asking an additional $18 million for a two-year budget of $40 million.

Unofficial discussions in official fiscal circles as to new money sources center around legalization of liquor and its sale in state-owned stores and a one-half cent increase in the state's 3 per cent sales tax. The state store operation would bring in an estimated $18 million in the two-year period—the added sales tax about the same amount.

There's no talk about repealing any of the $10 million a year in exemptions to various groups, including farmers and some businesses.

A GOP Opera Rips JFK in "Ole Miss"

Pol. Miss.

By Marquis Childs

McCOMB, Miss. — There is something new under the political sun—a Republican candidate for governor running in the fall election in Mississippi with every outward determination to win.

Rubel Phillips and the candidate for lieutenant governor, State Senator Stanford Morse, are carrying their campaign to the farthest boondocks. Nothing like it has been seen since Reconstruction days and then Republican governors were imposed under the rule of Yankee bayonets and not lawfully elected.

The clique that has dominated Mississippi for so long under a one-party system doesn't like it at all. As Phillips tells every audience, if he had not become a Republican and issued the challenge it would have all been over on Aug. 27. That was the date of the Democratic primary, one of the bitterest in Mississippi's history, with Lieutenant Governor Paul B. Johnson Jr. winning over former Governor J. P. Coleman by a landslide majority.

Phillips, an attractive-appearing corporation lawyer, links himself with Sen. Barry Goldwater. As at his evening meeting here in the football stadium before a crowd of perhaps 600, including many teen-agers, the loudest applause comes when he says Goldwater will be the Republican nominee.

HIS CONTENTION is that the plan of the Mississippi Democrats to put up a slate of unpledged electors will simply be throwing away the state's electoral votes. In the unlikely event that the presidential election a year from now is so close as to be thrown into the House of Representatives, President Kennedy would win in a walk since 65 per cent of the Democratic state delegations in the House are pro-Kennedy.

This may be a subtlety over the heads of his listeners, but they are left in no doubt that he is against the Kennedys and all their works. Warming up the crowd before the candidate arrives are singing stars of the Grand Ol' Opry who play from a lighted stage that lets down from the van in which they travel. Their most rousing song is "Knock Out the Kennedys."

Warming up the crowd before the candidate arrives are singing stars of the Grand Ol' Opry who play from a lighted stage that lets down from the van in which they travel. Their most rousing song is "Knock Out the Kennedys."

The Phillips-Morse billboards generously sprinkled along the highways carry the caption in big letters "K.O. the Kennedys." The most devastating Phillips charge is that Johnson and Gov. Ross Barnett made a deal with Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy at the time James Meredith was admitted to the University of Mississippi. So the picture Johnson used in his primary campaign showing him defying the United States Marshals was, in Phillips words, "just rooster fighting."

To prove his case he has been quoting from the partial transcript published by Newsweek of the Kennedy-Barnett-Johnson long-distance conversation on the eve of the Ole Miss showdown. Along with transcripts of other conversations published later this has had an echo in the remotest villages. If Phillips has a chance to defeat the long-entrenched Democratic powers, and the odds are long against him, it will be because the great Johnson-Barnett defy of the Federal tyrant is now seen to have been a piece of prearranged stage play.

GOVERNOR BARNETT in his homespun fashion likes to say that Look is a magazine for people who can't read, The Saturday Evening Post a magazine for people who can't write and Newsweek for people who can't either read or write. But neither Barnett nor Johnson has denied the authenticity of the transcripts.

Perhaps the blow that rocked Phillips hardest is the charge in full-page advertisements that he was a "moderate." The ad carries quotations of earlier years counseling moderation on race questions and accusing him of voting for Adlai Stevenson in 1952 and 1956. Yes, Phillips says, making a clean breast of it, I did vote for Adlai Stevenson. What is worse, in 1948 I voted for Harry Truman. And so, he adds, did Paul Johnson, but he will not have the courage to tell you.

The slogan of the opposition is "Bury the Scalawags." You have to be born a Southerner to understand how sinister is the word scalawag—a term applied to the quisiings who cooperated with the Yankee invaders in the Reconstruction Era. But Phillips turns the knife by charging his opponents with borrowing the slogan from Khrushchev.

He assails the one-party system. He says this is why Mississippi is No. 12 among the 12 Southern states in per capita income and in almost every other measurement. The crowd sitting under the stadium floodlights is not overly responsive. They file out as the Grand Ol' Opry gives out again with "Knock Out the Kennedys." And this unique Republican show is on the road for another set of appearances.

THE EMBARRASSMENTS of Ross Barnett are turning into the embarrassments of his apparent successor as governor of Mississippi, Paul Johnson.

Some time ago a national magazine reported that Barnett had secretly agreed to the surrender at the Oxford schoolhouse door, with the request that the federals help him make his struggle look convincing.

Now Newsweek, in its Oct. 14 edition, reports this again and adds what it says is the transcript of telephone calls between Gov. Barnett and Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy. Lt. Gov. Johnson, now the Democratic nominee for governor facing Republican opposition, was in on the act.

One conversation, according to Newsweek, went this way:

"Barnett: 'Oh, yes, general, I was under the impression that they were all going to pull their guns. This could be very embarrassing. We got a big crowd here and if one pulls his gun and we all turn it would be very embarrassing. Isn't it possible to have them all pull their guns?'

"Kennedy, 'I hate to have them all draw their guns, as I think it could create harsh feelings.'

"Barnett: 'They must all draw their guns. Then they should point their guns at us and then we could step aside.'

"Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson: 'It is absolutely necessary that they all draw their guns.' "

In another conversation, Newsweek says, Barnett told the attorney general: "General, I'm worried. I'm nervous, I tell you. You don't realize what's going on. . . . A lot of people are going to get killed. It would be embarrassing to me."

This, says Newsweek, is the record.

We cannot judge it, so we let it speak for itself.

Mississippi Pledges to 'Bury GOP'

Pol. Miss.

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 16 (AP). In a rare postprimary rally, more than 3,000 Democrats met Tuesday night with a call to "bury Republicanism in Mississippi for the next 100 years."

The party's nominees for governor and lieutenant governor, Paul B. Johnson and Carroll Gartin, addressed the rally, along with Gov. Ross Barnett and U.S. Sens. James O. Eastland and John C. Stennis.

The big guns of the Democrats assembled for the $25-a-plate function because Republicans are making a serious threat for the governorship in the Nov. 5 general election.

GOP standardbearer Rubel Phillips and the lieutenant governor candidate, State Sen. Stanford Morse, are waging a fierce campaign.

IN THE PAST, Republicans have put up only token opposition against the Democrats, who usually stop campaigning once they've picked nominees.

Johnson, who is lieutenant governor, told the rally that the general election is "a critical junction in history when we must point the direction for the next 25 years or more."

He said the "birth of a two-party sysem in the state will divide the conservative white vote. Then Mississippi would have to reap the whirlwind harvest of racial discord, more socialism, more taxes, more Negro participation in government and more integration.

"With the densest Negro population in the nation, Mississippi would, under these circumstances, scarcely be a desirable place in which to live and raise a family."

"The only benefactors to the two-party system in this state," he said, "would be the 920,000 Negroes who live in it."

Cox Sees Danger In Barnett Appeal

WP 10/22/63

Pol. Mis.

Solicitor General Archibald Cox told the Supreme Court yesterday that if Federal courts must give a jury trial to every person charged with criminal contempt the enforcement of unpopular court orders will be greatly handicapped.

Cox was arguing that the Court should not change the law and hold that Gov. Ross R. Barnett and Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson are entitled by the Constitution to a jury trial on charges they violated court orders during the desegregation of the University of Mississippi a year ago.

The Solicitor General said the "only available process for preventing nullification" of court orders in unpopular causes is the ready availability of punishment through criminal contempt. In situations like that in Mississippi last fall, he said, one juror who disagreed with the basic court orders could block punishment for violations of them and frustrate the rule of law.

Says Courts Must Rule

The law and the courts, Cox said, must have power to protect the weak and unpopular and to see that court orders are not frustrated by one member of a jury.

Cox said Barnett's actions when James H. Meredith was attempting to enroll at Ole Miss "threatened the supremacy of the Constitution, if not the whole rule of law."

The case of Barnett and Johnson is before the Supreme Court because the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals divided 4 to 4 on whether they should be tried by a jury. After the Supreme Court decides that question, the contempt charges will go back to the lower court for trial.

Cox said the position of the Federal Government is that the Court should not reconsider its decision of 1958 that there is no constitutional right to jury trial in contempt cases. He said that decision is part of an "unbroken line of precedents" just as the denial of a jury trial in most contempt cases is "part of the fabric of the law throughout the life of our Nation."

Defense Seeks Reversal

Attorneys for Barnett and Johnson, who barely had begun their argument before Court recessed yesterday, want the Justices to overrule the 1958 decision and to hold for the first time that there is a constitutional right to a jury trial in all contempt cases.

If they lose on their constitutional argument, Barnett and Johnson claim they are entitled to a jury trial under an Act of Congress.

Cox argued that the Act did not apply because it was written in terms of jury trials for contempt of Federal District Courts while this contempt charge is based on an order of a Court of Appeals. He also contended that this case was covered by an exception to the jury trial provision applying to all cases instituted by the United States.

White Questions

Under questioning by Justice Byron R. White, Cox said there could have been no claim of a jury trial under the Act of Congress if the situation had arisen three years earlier. The Civil Rights Act of 1960, he said, made the alleged obstruction of court orders by Barnett and Johnson a crime and thus made possible the claim that the Act of Congress applies to their case.

Justice Arthur L. Goldberg questioned Cox about why civil contempt proceedings were not adequate to enforce compliance with court orders.

The Court of Appeals first held Barnett in civil contempt, an order that was intended to insure that he would do what the Court told him. Later, it added the charges of criminal contempt to punish Barnett and Johnson.

Cox said the civil proceedings could suffice in many instances. In most contempt cases, he said, a court could hold a man in jail until he complied with the court orders. But in a situation like Mississippi, Cox said, the courts needed more powers because Barnett was not only failing to comply but was invoking the entire power of the state and its citizens to defy the courts.

Race Horse Riders Vie for Poll Position In Magnolia Classic

By Laurence Stern
Staff Reporter

JACKSON, Miss.—The emotional cyclone of racism has swept all other issues from the political arena in Mississippi's Democratic gubernatorial primary which will be decided at the polls on Tuesday.

Appeals to racial emotions, to be sure, are firmly embedded in the ritualism of Mississippi politics and have been for three quarters of a century.

But seldom has the rallying cry of segregation found such a welcome climate in an embittered and alienated white electorate.

The experience of Ole Miss, with its specter of Federal troops, still rankles fresh in the memory of white Mississippians. Therefore in this campaign, more than ever before, President Kennedy has become an object of universal anathema in the Magnolia State.

IN THIS SETTING, Mississippi Democrats will choose Tuesday between former Gov. J. P. Coleman, who held the state's highest office from 1956 to 1960, and Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, this year making his fourth try for the governorship.

To an outsider, there seems little difference, on the surface, between the two candidates.

Both avow themselves to be champions of Mississippi's white supremacist traditions. Both have pledged to stand firm against court-ordered desegregation, whether at the college campus or elementary school level.

But within what seems to be a monolith of segregationist politics, there is a broad and subtle range of difference between the two men.

The most obvious one was Coleman's support in 1960 of President Kennedy, a position he recently has been forced to repudiate under the fire of his opposition, and his efforts to keep Mississippi inside the framework of the Democratic Party.

DURING THE YEARS of his governorship, Coleman sought to keep race relations in Mississippi on an even keel by not stirring the segregation cauldron. He was cool to the race-baiting tactics of the Citizens Council, which has its national headquarters in this capital city.

Johnson, on the other hand, is campaigning as heir apparent to the strident segregationist policies of incumbent Gov. Ross R. Barnett. He is openly seeking to cash in on his role in the Ole Miss crisis when he acted out the state's mood of defiance to Federal authority at the doorway of the university.

It is no coincidence that the most widely circulated pieces of campaign literature in the primary depict the confrontation on the Ole Miss campus. One of the posters, distributed by Johnson forces, is a drawing showing the Lieutenant Governor with upraised hand confronting Chief U. S. Marshal James J. P. McShane and James Meredith. The second, which was promptly issued by Coleman headquarters, is a photograph showing Johnson and McShane shaking hands.

THE TALL, WIRY Lieutenant Governor with a circuit rider delivery has been stumping the state reminding voters that he "stood up" for Mississippi before an array of Federal might in Oxford, home of the university. He is asking that his listeners, in turn, "stand up" for his candidacy on Tuesday.

The 47-year-old Johnson, son of the late Gov. Paul B. Johnson, has been hammering away aggressively at the theme that Coleman, in league with the "dictatorial Kennedys," sought to dissuade Barnett from taking a hard stand at Ole Miss.

In a television speech Wednesday night, Johnson recalled that when his opponent was Governor, Coleman invited then-Sen. John F. Kennedy to Mississippi and "wined him and dined him at the Governor's Mansion, then tucked him away in Sen. Bilbo's bed."

And in a retort to a New York Times editorial, Johnson proclaimed in the same speech that he was proud to be placed alongside what the newspaper described as "such undistinguished Mississippians as Sen. James O. Eastland, Theodore G. Bilbo and Ross Barnett."

JOHNSON FORCES have also cranked out throughout the state a circular entitled "The Real Issue." And, as defined by Johnson, "the real issue is for the people to decide whether or not Gov. Barnett, Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson and the Mississippi Legislature were right in their stand against the invasion of this state by Federal troops and U. S. marshals under orders of the Kennedys . . . "

It concludes: "The Kennedys, the NAACP, CORE and all the left-wingers in America would have a celebration to end all celebrations if Paul Johnson should go down in defeat."

On a folksier basis, Johnson is selling his message with the help of a group called the Magnolia State Quartet. They sing, to the tune of "Reuben, Reuben," an endless round of verses such as these to Johnson's campaign audiences:

"Gather round me, all you voters.
Listen to my earnest plea.
'Cause a vote for Mr. Coleman
Means a vote for Kennedy.

Let's list a few of his supporters:
There's John F. and Adlai, too;
Walter Reuther, Thurgood Marshall;
Not to mention Tougaloo."

Paul Johnson in a bitter showdown at Oxford last September. Here Lieutenant Governor Paul Johnson is shown blocking the way of U. S. Marshal McShane and James Meredith.

PAUL JOHNSON STOOD UP FOR YOU AND MISSISSIPPI

NOW YOU CAN STAND UP WITH HIM FOR YOUR STATE

When the going was tough and bitter, Paul Johnson, as your Lieutenant Governor, went to Oxford and personally blocked the entry of a negro into the University of Mississippi. Because of this, he has been cited for civil and criminal contempt by the Federal Courts and is today waiting for the Supreme Court to determine whether he will have a jury trial. PAUL JOHNSON had the courage, conviction and the determination to stand up for you and for Mississippi. As your Governor, you can be sure that he will stand firm against those who would change our way of life and our customs that are best for both races—now and forever.

REMEMBER THESE THINGS: J. P. Coleman endorsed, spoke and voted for Kennedy for President of the United States . . . J. P. Coleman told Governor Ross Barnett to "let Meredith register" as a student at Ole Miss without a fight—Newsweek Magazine (April 29, 1963) says . . . "J. P. Coleman, a Kennedy man and a far less strident segregationist than incumbent Ross Barnett" — Yes, remember, J. P. Coleman would turn Mississippi over to the Kennedys—lock, stock and barrel.

PAUL B. JOHNSON HAS THE EXPERIENCE NEEDED TO BE GOVERNOR. HE HAS DEMONSTRATED WHERE HE STANDS ON THE CRUCIAL ISSUES FACING OUR STATE. IF YOU, TOO, FAVOR STATES' RIGHTS, CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT, LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT AND MISSISSIPPI'S CONTINUED ECONOMIC PROGRESS, HELP ELECT PAUL B. JOHNSON GOVERNOR OF MISSISSIPPI.

VOTE AUGUST 6TH FOR PAUL B. JOHNSON

Submitted to and approved by Gene Triggs, campaign manager

(The last reference is to Tougaloo Southern Christian College in Jackson, which has furnished much of the leadership for civil rights protest demonstrations throughout the state.)

BY KEEPING this aggressive stance, Johnson catapulted himself into the lead position in the state's first primary heat last Aug. 6. Coleman trailed by 20,000 votes. No one got the needed majority because 38-year-old Clarksdale lawyer Charles Sullivan, a states' righter who since then has thrown his support to Coleman, ran a strong third.

Coleman has been forced to fight his battle on Johnson's terms: the Kennedy issue, softness on segregation, loyalty to the national Democratic Party. His posture in the campaign has thus been more defensive. On Tuesday night he took more than 20 minutes out of a half-hour of prime TV time to reply to charges on a preceding Johnson telecast.

Coleman forces were stunned when Johnson rang up his lead in the first primary. Soon afterward the former Governor publicly recanted for his previous support of President Kennedy. "I made a mistake," he acknowledged.

On the Ole Miss issue, however, Coleman accused his opponent of playing the demagogue.

Johnson, he said, "is trying to use Negro James Meredith to elect a governor for the white people to live under for four years. If he and his supporters can do this in 1963, they can do it again with another Negro in 1967 . . .

"JOHNSON HAD to have Meredith in his politics in Mississippi and Kennedy had to have Meredith in his politics in Washington and all of the people of Mississippi were caught in the middle," Coleman charged during an appearance Monday in the delta town of Greenwood.

Coleman might have added that his own election prospects were seriously damaged in the great emotional spasm that followed Ole Miss.

Mississippi's Negroes look on with ambivalent emotions.

"With Coleman in office, some Negroes might be persuaded to defect from the civil rights movement in the hope of achieving progress," commented Aaron Henry, president of the Mississippi State NAACP Conference.

"If Johnson is elected, no Negro could afford to defect. We could make more progress that way."

A MISSISSIPPI EDITOR summed up the stakes in Tuesday's primary this way:

"There are really three layers to this election: the first is the Kennedy issue; under that is the segregation issue. But when you peel through to the final layer, you get down to the question of political control.

"Fundamentally, this is a battle for control between the faction controlled by Barnett, the Citizens Council and Sen. Eastland, on one hand, and the forward-looking wing headed by Coleman and Sen. John Stennis, on the other."

Hoping to profit from the fratricidal strife among Mississippi Democrats this year is an energetic, 38-year-old Goldwater Republican, Rubel Phillips, who is regarded as the Magnolia State's first serious GOP gubernatorial challenger since Reconstruction.

LET'S TELL THE WHOLE TRUTH, PAUL

Mississippi Candidates Ignore Party Labels and Philosophies

Pol. Miss.

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 25 — This state's first serious gubernatorial campaign between a Democrat and a Republican since Reconstruction days is nearing the finish in an atmosphere of fantasy and paradox.

Party labels, in the usual sense, mean little in the conest to be decided Nov. 5 between Paul B. Johnson, the 47-year-old Lieutenant Governor, and Rubel L. Phillips, his 38-year-old opponent.

Mr. Johnson is running under the slogan, "Bury G.O.P. Scalawags," a post-Civil War term used to describe Southerners who cooperated with Federal forces in the Reconstruction.

But he is a self-proclaimed "Mississippi Democrat," a faction whose philosophy is more akin to that of the Republican party's conservative wing than to anything else.

His supporters, most of whom are bitter foes of President Kennedy and the national party, include the administration of Gov. Ross R. Barnett, followers of Senator James O. Eastland, and the militantly segregationist Citizens Councils.

Opponent Backs Goldwater

Mr. Phillips, a Jackson lawyer who is a former chairman of the State Public Service Commission, is a recent Democratic party loyalist turned Goldwater Republican. The national Republican party can expect the full support of such Mississippians in next year's Presidential race only if its nominee is Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona.

Mr. Phillips's strength lies in an unlikely coalition of Goldwater Republicans and Democrats, who range in viewpoint from middle-of-the-road to liberal. Among the liberal Democrats are labor union members and national party loyalists, many of whom voted for former Gov. J. P. Coleman in his unsuccessful race against Mr. Johnson in the Democratic primary and a subsequent runoff.

These liberals oppose Mr. Johnson because of what they regard as the antilabor and militantly racist policies of the Barnett administration, on whose record Mr. Johnson is running.

Even the most optimistic Phillips supporters concede that he as no more than an outside chance. Their chief hope is that he will profit from the traditional apathy toward general elections in Mississippi, where Democratic nomination has long been equivalent to election.

Nevertheless, Democrats have been forced to wage an extraordinarily active campaign. And a strong Republican showing undoubtedly would encourage the realighment of political forces in this state and speed its shift toward a two-party system.

The campaign debate centers on the issue of which candidate and which faction can maintain rigid racial segregation in Mississippi and help to elect a conservative President sympathetic to that goal.

Mr. Johnson and the Barnett Democrats lay claim to this power by virtue of the defiant refusal of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor to admit a Negro last fall to the University of Mississippi.

Both men face Federal court trials on charges of criminal contempt as a result of their unsuccessful efforts to deny the admission of James H. Meredith.

"Paul stood tall last fall," chorus Johnson supporters in reference to a confrontation in which the Lieutenant Governor physically barred the entry of James P. McShane, the Chief United States Marshal, and Mr. Meredith.

The Republicans counter that this is not so. They accuse the two state officials of scheming with Robert F. Kennedy, the Attorney General, to make a show of resistance and then permit the court-ordered desegregation to take place.

Mr. Johnson denies this.

Mr. Phillips, whose slogan is "K.O. the Kennedys," contends that his election would aid Senator Goldwater in the latter's unannounced efforts to win the Republican nomination and the Presidency. Hillbilly singers entertain Mr. Phillips's crowds with a song sung to the tune of "Reuben, Reuben," one verse of which says:

Rubel, Rubel, we're all rebels
Fighting for our native land
Against the Kennedy carpetbaggers,
Bobby, Jack and all the clan.

The campaign headquarters of the handsome but somewhat colorless Republican candidate are plastered with Goldwater photographs. But neither he nor Stanford Morse, the Democratic State Representative running for Lieutenant Governor as a Republican, display the party label on their campaign posters.

However, Mr. Phillips argues that a one-party system is responsible for Mississippi's troubles—the "occupation" of the university by Federal troops, the state's ranking at the botton of the ladder in income and wealth, and the alleged corruption, inefficiency and wastefulness in state government.

Mr. Johnson contends that a victory for Mr. Phillips would actually hurt Senator Goldwater's chances to obtain the Presidential nomination by underscoring the Senator's support among conservative segregationists.

Last night in Natchez, Mr. Johnson expressed irritation over "having to contend with this sort of situation"—a serious two-party gubernatorial race—"that I assure you will never happen again."

He then indicated that the Legislature would take steps next January to relieve Mississippi voters of the inconvenience presented by the general election, but he did not say how this would be accomplished.

Miss. Negroes Plan 'Private' Election

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

IF BUMPER STICKERS were votes, the winner of the Nov. 5 balloting for governor of Mississippi would be Rubel Phillips, first serious Republican contender since Reconstruction.

All over the state, stickers proclaim: "Rubel in '63, Barry in '64."

Those stickers identify a new breed of white conservative voters in Mississippi whose hero is Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) on the national scene and who have switched parties inside Mississippi.

Another frequently seen sticker adorns the cars of both the new Republicans and the old Mississippi Democrats and shows scorn for the Kennedy Administration. It proclaims:

"Flush the White House John With Goldwater."

Democrats who like the idea of Goldwater for President but naturally dislike the idea of a Republican governor, have resurrected Reconstruction with this sticker aimed at Phillips: "Bury the Scalawags."

RAREST OF ALL stickers, seldom seen anywhere in the Magnolia State, is this one: "Go JFK in 1964." Indeed, some Negroes driving through Kosciusko last week with such a sticker on their car were stopped by city police and warned:

"You'd better not stop with that sticker in Mississippi."

The story of the stickers sums up the gubernatorial battle between Republican Phillips and Democrat Paul B. Johnson Jr., now Lieutenant Governor. Their common targets are the Kennedy Administration and racial desegregation. Little else seems to matter.

But the Johnson-Phillips donnybrook is not the full story of this election. There is another ticket running—the unofficial "Freedom Ballot."

Heading the ticket is Aaron Henry, 42-year-old Negro pharmacist from Clarksdale and president of the Mississippi NAACP. It was Henry who once told Gov. Ross R. Barnett to stop trying to scare Negroes because scary Negroes have left the state and only tough, hard Negroes remain.

Henry's running mate for lieutenant governor is the Rev. Edwin King, 27-year-old native white Mississippian who is dean of students at Tougaloo College near Jackson.

"Johnson boasts about how bad he has been to Negroes and Phillips boasts how bad he will be," said Henry when he was nominated by the Council of Federated Organizations representing civil rights groups.

The idea of the Freedom Ballot is to bring out a record number of Negro votes in an unofficial balloting to show they would vote in official elections in Mississippi if they were allowed to.

THE FREEDOM BALLOT platform notes that Mississippi politicians "have been able to maintain their power by burying the state's problems under a blanket of race hatred."

It calls for an end to segregation, including in public accommodations; replacement of the present State Sovereignty Commission with a State Commission on Equality; fair employment; a $1.25 minimum wage; better schools; a guaranteed right to vote; academic freedom, and an end to the hypocrisy of dry Mississippi's tax on illegal whisky.

Leaders hope that 150,000 Negroes will cast ballots in boxes set up in churches in 50 communities on Nov. 2 and 3. Results will be announced after the ballots in the official campaign between Phillips and Johnson are counted on Nov. 5.

Negro workers are carrying the protest campaign throughout the state. Greenville city officials permitted a Freedom Ballot rally on the Court House lawn. But even Negro ballots that don't count began to rankle some sections of the state last week.

Groups of Negroes and whites, including Yale University students, were arrested in Clarksdale and Indianola for distributing Freedom Ballot information without a permit. Robert Moses, Henry's campaign manager, was arrested for violating Clarksdale's midnight curfew.

In fact, the whole Mississippi political scene last week smacked of events of the last century.

NEGROES HAD no sooner gained the right to vote in Mississippi after the Civil War than powerful conservative "white men's clubs" began to wrest it away.

The clubs formed the basis for the Democratic Party, which intimidated Negroes and whites in the Republican Party with physical and economic punishment until it made a clean sweep in 1875.

Gov. Adelbert Ames, a Republican, was forced to resign in 1876 and he was the last Republican governor.

Ballot stuffing and fraud became so rampant in the state that a constitutional convention was called in 1890 to provide a system of honest elections. As Judge S. S. Calhoon, convention president, put it, Mississippi had to find a way to preserve white supremacy that was fair to both races.

The poll tax and literacy tests became part of the constitution, with the desired effect. In 1890, Mississippi had 190,000 registered Negro voters. Two years later, it had 8600. In 1954, there were 22,000 Negro voters, the same as there are today—less than 5 per cent of the registered electorate.

The threat of Negro votes was always uppermost in the minds of the whites. In 1912, Mississippian W. H. Leavell warned there were enough literate Negroes in the state then to hold the balance of power if the whites were divided.

A few days ago, Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) told a Democratic rally in Jackson that white voters must not divide into two parties or the Negroes could hold the balance of power.

White supremacy, he said, is the "noblest cause that can bring us together."

AND THAT HAS been the big pitch of the Democrats against the Republican threat: that the Negroes might hold the balance of power in a two-party system.

Republican Phillips, a Democrat until he decided to run for governor, retorts that Mississippi lost its segregation under a one-party system.

Last week, Mississippi Republicans came up with their biggest salvo to date. Widely distributed throughout the state was an alleged transcript of the Sept. 27, 1962, telephone agreement for the admittance of James H. Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

Gov. Barnett and Lt. Gov. Johnson agreed with Attorney General Robert E. Kennedy to let the Negro enter after a force of United States marshals drew their guns. Johnson was quoted as telling Kennedy: "We've got to have time to discreetly move the sheriffs out of here."

Republican Phillips said the agreement was a cynical deal among Democratic officials that ended three days later after two deaths and many injuries.

AARON E. HENRY
. . . only tough Negroes remain

RUBEL PHILLIPS
. . . bumper sticker candidate

"Kennedy and Barnett and Johnson were willing to sit down and play cowboy and nigger with the University," said Phillips.

Johnson said he cannot comment on the transcript since he currently faces Federal contempt charges for the Ole Miss affair.

IRONICALLY, JOHNSON'S biggest trouble now seems to be in sustaining the interest of an electorate that in the past has been able to ignore the general election because the one-party system settled things in the Democratic primary. Only 58,000 persons voted in the last general election.

He also fears that supporters of former Gov. J. P. Coleman, whom he defeated in the August primary by exploiting Coleman's past support of President Kennedy, may turn in anger to a Republican ballot in November.

Political observers in Mississippi predict that Republican Phillips will get a substantial vote, enough to reconstruct a Mississippi Republican Party, but that Democrat Johnson will emerge the victor. They also view with interest the size of the unofficial Freedom Ballot.

Judge Calhoon at the 1890 constitutional convention summed up Mississippi's politics then and now when he said: "There is no politics . . . . save the race question."

50 YALE MEN AID MISSISSIPPI NEGRO

Back Gubernatorial Drive—Several Are Arrested

Pol. Miss.

By JOHN HERBERS
Special to The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 29—About 50 Yale University students have been in Mississippi for the last 10 days working in behalf of a Negro candidate for Governor. Several have been arrested.

They have joined members of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee throughout the state to promote the candidacy of Aaron Henry, a Clarksdale druggist who is a write-in candidate in the Nov. 5 general election.

In addition, about 30 Stanford University students are scheduled to arrive later this week to help in the campaign.

The Yale students have also been promoting a mock election that will be held p[illegible] official election. This is designed to give unregistered Negroes of voting age a chance to mark a ballot. Mr. Henry's name will appear on the "Freedom Ballot" along with [illegible] of the two white candidates, Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, Democrat, and Rubel Phillips, Republican. Both are segregationists.

Two students were arrested in Indianola last week for distributing leaflets without a permit. The students, Peter [illegible]blum of Brooklyn, and Franklin Bosler of Chicago, paid fines of $25 each and left the state.

In Clarksdale, two others were arrested for breaking a city curfew law—Stephen Bingham of Salem, Conn., and John [illegible] of Long Island. They were released after posting bond. Richard Van Wagenen of Washington was charged with violating an anti-littering ordinance for handing out copies of The Mississippi Free Press, a weekly newspaper.

A divinity student, John Ell[illegible] was fined $20 in Hattiesburg for improper parking and interfering with an officer. Fo[illegible] were questioned for two hours and released.

In Yazoo City several students, along with two workers for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, were escorted out of town by the police.

Mr. Henry has no hope of winning the election. He is running to dramatize Negro protests against discrimination and to give voters a choice.

The Dark Mind Of Mississippi

Pol. Miss.

By Marquis Childs

NATCHEZ, Miss.—In this old town that venerates its ante-bellum shrines the sense of fierce resistance of the tide of change is perhaps stronger than anywhere else in beleaguered Mississippi. The outsider, the Northerner, who comes to the state, however briefly, cannot mistake the emotion that is running so strong. The riot at the University of Mississippi over the admission of a Negro student that resulted in two deaths and many injured may have seemed to the world outside the South as a tragedy, a disgrace, a shame. But it has an entirely different look here.

That drama of a year ago was for Mississippians a deliberate provocation by the Kennedy Administration. It was an act designed to subjugate a sovereign state and by military force alter its ancient ways. The blood passions of a hundred years ago are boiling.

The hatred of the Kennedys is a pervasive force. This reporter was told by one who has stood up to the ruling passion that in his opinion the safety of the President and his brother, the Attorney General, could not be guaranteed if they came into the state. This would not be due to any laxity or indifference on the part of the authorities but because fanatical hatred is so deeply rooted. And, moreover, you hear disquieting reports of how widespread is the distribution of arms that can be readily purchased.

THE EMOTIONS of this troubled moment are expressed with native vigor by Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, the Democratic candidate for Governor, as he makes an impassioned attack on the Republican opposition. In contrast to his Republican opponent, Rubel Phillips, who has a citified look although he comes off a small cotton farm, Johnson, whose father was a Governor of the state, has a Mississippi back-country stamp. He is thin, intense, his words come out with a sharp, rural twang. When he accuses Phillips of having pledged to support Nelson Rockefeller, if Rockefeller is the Republican nominee next year, he says Rocky-feller, drawling the syllables out in full contempt.

As he speaks from an improvised quieting reports of new [illegible] the distribution of arms that can be readily purchased.

THE EMOTIONS of this troubled moment are expressed with native vigor by Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, the Democratic candidate for Governor, as he makes an impassioned attack on the Republican opposition. In contrast to his Republican opponent, Rubel Phillips, who has a citified look although he comes off a small cotton farm, Johnson, whose father was a Governor of the state, has a Mississippi back-country stamp. He is thin, intense, his words come out with a sharp, rural twang. When he accuses Phillips of having pledged to support Nelson Rockefeller, if Rockefeller is the Republican nominee next year, he says Rocky-feller, drawling the syllables out in full contempt.

As he speaks from an improvised stand at home plate in the Natchez ball park to a crowd of perhaps 800 the reasons for the violent opposition to the first Republican bid in nearly a century are clear. This, says Johnson, means divide and rule by the Negro minority.

His political arithmetic is: Mississippi is 58 per cent white, 42 per cent Negro. If you divide the 58 then the minority will swing the balance. And he cites the consequences of this in Philadelphia, Chicago, Washington and Richmond, Va.

So the scalawags must be buried and the one-party system preserved. When the legislature meets in January, he promises, we will see that this never happens again. He explained later that laws would be passed requiring fixed party registration so that those choosing to be Republicans would not be permitted to vote in the Democratic primary and would, therefore, have little influence in the state.

Trying to put over the Republican case in Mississippi, says Johnson, are these slick writers brought in from Texas. They are the same slick writers dealing in mass psychology who put Sen. John Tower and Rep. Bruce Alger over on innocent Democrats in Texas. And what is more, the four-color Phillips posters—on 1800 billboards—came from Fort Worth.

THUS THE conspiracy against Mississippi and its sovereign way of life is complete. The Republicans are the sworn enemy of the South. Johnson quotes from a speech in the House by Rep. Fred Schwengel of Iowa boasting of GOP civil rights achievements and citing Rockefeller as a member of the NAACP and Senator Goldwater as a member of the Urban League.

To the charge that he is dividing the whites and thereby preparing the way for rule by the Negro minority, Phillips replies that this same division was exploited by the Democrats in the first primary and in the run-off. Johnson compared his run-off opponent, J. P. Coleman, to Martin Luther King Jr. In Mississippi there could hardly be a greater insult unless it was to be compared to Bobby Kennedy. The lacerating bitterness of the primaries may produce an anti-Johnson vote benefiting the Republicans.

If the Negro can be kept an isolated minority, in large part disfranchised and in any event politically impotent, he cannot expect to begin to achieve equality of economic opportunity. In a state seeking to attract Northern industry with the inducement of low wages this may be a vital factor. But the struggle has deeper roots in ancient habits that confirm the white man's belief in his innate superiority.

G.O.P. IS MAKING MISSISSIPPI RACE

Barnett Aide Challenged by a Goldwater Supporter

Pol. Miss.

Special to The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 2—Mississippi voters will elect a Governor Tuesday to succeed Ross R. Barnett. The choice is between a Barnett Democrat and a Goldwater Republican, both of whom promise the strongest opposition to the Kennedy Administration.

More than 300,000 are expected to cast ballots in the general election, the first since reconstruction in which there was a serious Republican challenger for the Governor's office.

The candidates are Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson Jr., who was nominated over former Gov. J. P. Coleman in the Democratic primary on an anti-Kennedy platform, and Rubel Phillips, a 38-year-old lawyer making his first statewide race.

A Negro druggist from Clarksdale, Aaron Henry, is unning for Governor as a write-in candidate to give Negroes and liberal whites someone to vote for. The Rev. Edwin King, white chaplain at Tougaloo Christian College, is running with Mr. Henry for Lieutenant Governor.

With no hope of winning, they are dramatizing the Negro's position by conducting prior to the official election a mock election for thousands of Negroes of voting age who are not registered.

Forty Yale and Stanford students are assisting in the exercise.

Robert Moses, Mr. Henry's campaign manager, said he hoped to receive up to 200,000 ballots. Fewer than 30,000 Negroes are registered to vote in the state, according to unofficial estimates.

Allard Lowenstein, a teacher at North Carolina State University and leader of a student group, said 100 students and field workers for civil rights groups had been arrested since the campaign began two weeks ago and others had been questioned and released. He said three students had been assaulted by whites.

Mr. Johnson, 47, who is a career politician, is favored to win. He has the support of virtually all elected officials in the state in the entire Mississippi Congressional delegation.

But Mr. Phillips has conducted an aggressive, well-financed campaign that has strengthened the Republican party in Mississippi.

Mr. Johnson has promised to support the unpledged elector movement in next year's Presidential race. Mr. Phillips has said only that he will support Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona.

Mississippi

WP 11/6/63

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 5 (AP)—An unprecedented Democrat versus Republican fight for the Governorship reached its hour of decision today.

Voters chose between Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson Jr., 47, the Democratic candidate, and Rubel Phillips, 38, the GOP candidate. Polls opened at 7, closed at 6. Pol. Miss.

For the first time in Mississippi history, a general election—normally a mere formality in this traditionally Democratic state — had an air of tension and uncertainty.

Some estimates of the total vote expected soared as high as 300,000. Normally, general elections draw about 50,000 voters.

In sharp contrast to earlier general election contests, the campaigning was all out, replete with hillbilly bands, fiery oratory and television and radio shows.

Phillips, a converted Democrat, forced the pace by producing the sensation of the campaign—an alleged transcript of some long-distance telephone talks.

The secret talks involved Johnson and U.S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy during the desegregation crisis at the University of Mississippi, Phillips said.

The transcript, he added, proved that Johnson and Gov. Ross Barnett tried to find a face-saving compromise while pretending fierce opposition to a Federal court order that Ole Miss admit a Negro student.

Johnson called the transcript—the exact source of which was not disclosed—"a contemptible falsehood."

Democrats clubbed the GOP with the racial issue, contending that a two-party system in the State would give Negro voters a balance of power. The GOP called this ridiculous.

Both candidates pledged to fight desegregation and the Kennedy Administration.

In an odd sidelight, the State president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People got into the campaign.

Aaron Henry, a Negro druggist at Clarksdale, asked the State's few Negro voters to give him write-in votes as governor.

Write-in votes are illegal in Mississippi, barring the death of a nominee, and cannot be counted. However, Henry said they would serve as a protest to limits on Negro voting.

There also was a "mock election" in which Henry ran for governor with a white minister, the Rev. Edwin King of Jackson, as candidate for lieutenant governor.

Negro churches and other centers were polling places in the Statewide demonstration with leaders claiming at least 100,000 votes cast. Results were withheld, pending the real election tally.

Johnson has now been through three consecutive, wearying campaigns—the first Democratic primary, the Democartic runoff and the general election.

It was Johnson's fourth bid for the governor's seat.

Phillips is a former State Public Service Commissioner. The party chose him as its candidate; he didn't have to campaign for nomination.

The winner succeeds Barnett Jan. 21. State law bars a governor from serving consecutive terms.

GOPs Forcing Governor Race Down to the Wire

Atl. J&C 11/3/63

Pol. Miss.

By KENNETH TOLER

Jackson Bureau,
Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 2—Mississippi Democrats, divorced from their national party parentage, face the first serious Republican threat to their long-dominance of state offices in Tuesday's general election.

That they have taken the challenge seriously is shown in the all-out maneuver of all state forces—from the congressional delegation in Washington to the beats in the 82 counties—to "get out the vote" in the effort to "stamp out Republicanism in the state for another hundred years."

It is the first general election in which the Republicans have fielded strong candidates for governor and lieutenant governor since the Reconstruction era.

MAJOR TASK of the Democrats, lined up behind Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, their nominee for governor, and his lieutenant governor running mate, Caroll Gartin, is to overcome general election apathy. Four years ago, with no Republican threat, only 58,000 voted in the general election in contrast to 414,000 participants in the party primary which has been considered tantamount to election.

Two former Democrats are the Republican nominees for governor and lieutenant governor. They are Rubel Phillips, onetime Democratic chairman of the State Public Service, for governor, and State Sen. Stanford Morse Jr., who is serving his second term as a Democrat from two coastal counties, for lieutenant governor.

Also, the Republicans have 22 candidates for state legislative posts, along with nominees for lesser county offices, such as sheriff, supervisor and superintendent of education.

Although both gubernatorial aspirants are segregationists, the racial issue has played a part in the stump speeches—something new to Mississippi in a general election.

MR. JOHNSON CONTENDS that the establishment of a two-party system in the state would lead to Negro participation in government in view of the 58-42 population ratio in favor of the whites. Mr. Johnson contends that instead of becoming the balance of power, the Negro would become the arbiter of power.

The Democratic nominee, whose admitted "prime objective" is to "get the Kennedys out of the White House," is backing a free elector plan sponsored by Gov. Ross Barnett.

The Republican nominee brands the free elector plan "ridiculous," in asserting that either a Democrat or a Republican will be elected and the way for anti-Kennedy Mississippians to "beat the Kennedys" is by electing a Republican governor who supports Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona for the presidential nomination.

Backing the Democratic slate are all elected officials, all Mississippi Democrats, supervisors, circuit clerks and chancery clerks in the 82 counties and a majority of the municipal officials. Sen. James O. Eastland and Sen. John C. Stennis have spoken for the Democratic ticket.

Bidwell Adam, chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee, contends that those who participated in the August party primaries are legally bound to back the nominees next Tuesday.

However, Wirt Yerger Jr., Republican party chairman, states that a 1960 State Supreme Court decision gives a voter the legal right to change candidates between primaries and the general election. He estimated that 100,000 Republicans voted in the Democratic primary, and now will return to their own party next Tuesday.

THUS FAR, the Democratic forces have been unable to get other than a telegraphic assurance from former Gov. J. P. Coleman, who was defeated for the nomination by Lt. Gov. Johnson, that he will vote Democratic next Tuesday. Charles Sullivan, former Clarksdale district attorney who lost his second bid for the governorship to Mr. Johnson, has said nothing.

A queer quirk is the recent endorsement of the Mississippi AFL-CIO labor council of Mr. Phillips for governor, and Mr. Gartin for lieutenant governor. Labor leaders in an official communication to members said Mr. Johnson's election "would have tragic consequences for the people of Mississippi."

Johnson Is Mississippi's Choice—Two-Party System a Reality

Pol. Miss.

By JOHN HERBERS

Special to The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 5—Lieut. Gov. Paul B. Johnson Jr., pledged to continue Gov. Ross R. Barnett's massive resistance to racial integration, was elected Governor of Mississippi tonight over a strong conservative Republican.

Mr. Johnson led Rubel Phillips, a 38-year-old attorney, by a wide margin.

Returns from 1,318 of 1,877 precincts showed:

Johnson	125,739
Phillips	71,514

Mr. Phillips won a moral victory, however, by establishing a two-party system in the state.

Mr. Johnson, a 47-year-old career politician, will succeed Governor Barnett in January for a four-year term. Under Mississippi law, a Governor is ineligible to succeed himself.

The Governor-elect will take office facing trial for criminal contempt of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Both Mr. Johnson and Governor Barnett were cited for defying a court order to admit James H. Meredith, a Negro, to the University of Mississippi last year. The case is now on appeal to the Supreme Court to decide whether the two officials should receive a jury trial.

Mr. Phillips conceded at 9:45 P.M., Central standard time, when he was trailing Mr. Johnson by 48,000 votes.

"We have succeeded in establishing a two-party system in the state," Mr. Phillips told campaign workers. "As soon as I have rested a few days I'm going back to practicing law and working for the Republican party."

Mr. Johnson's running mate, former Lieut. Gov. Carroll Gartin, defeated Republican Stanford Morse, a former state Senator, in the race for Lieutenant Governor.

Mississippi has turned in a sizable vote for Republican Presidential candidates in recent years. But it was the first time since Gov. Adelbert Ames was deposed in 1876 that a Democratic nominee for Governor has been seriously challenged by the Republicans.

Mr. Phillips, who charged that state politics had become corrupt under one-party rule, had to fight virtually every elected official from Senator James O. Eastland to county constables, all Democrats. They charged that a two-party system would "split white conservatives" and give Negroes and white moderates the balance of power.

Mr. Phillips also documented the positions of Governor Barnett and Lieutenant Governor Johnson in the integration crisis at the University of Mississippi last year. He used a telephone transcript and a filmed interview with Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy to show that the two officials agreed to the admission of Mr. Meredith after several days of defiance, on a promise from the Attorney General that they be allowed to feign resistance.

Mr. Johnson defeated former Gov. J. P. Coleman in the August primary, largely on his assertion of standing against Federal pressure at the university. Winding up his campaign yesterday, Mr. Johnson said the issue was "whether we will continue our fight for constitutional government, states' rights and racial integrity or bow to the left-wingers of the Kennedy-Rockefeller stripe."

Mr. Phillips has promised to work for the nomination and election of Senator Barry Goldwater as President. He has said he will not support Governor Rockefeller.

Mr. Johnson is supporting the unpledged-elector movement, and is not certain at this time whether the national Democratic candidates will be placed on the Mississippi ballot.

Aaron Henry, state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, ran as a write-in candidate for Governor, but votes for him were not tabulated. Attorney General Joe Patterson ruled that Mississippi law did not provide for a write-in candidate unless one of the official candidates died before the election.

Guard Called Out

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 5 (UPI)—The Mississippi National Guard was called out in Lincoln County today to prevent "violence and bloodshed."

Governor Barnett said he had been told that two county supervisors' races, contested by independents, might provoke violence.

However, the Lincoln County campaign headquarters for Mr. Phillips and Mr. Morse said the 114-man Guard force had been called to thwart the Republican challenge in the county.

Negroes May Test Mississippi's Vote

Politics - Miss.

By JAMES SAGGUS

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Democratic Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson faced threats Wednesday of Negro court action seeking to wipe out his record-smashing general election victory for governor over a bold Republican challenge.

With Johnson's lead over Republican Rubel Phillips approaching a margin of 2 to 1, Negro leaders announced they would go into federal court under a Reconstruction Era law permitting contests on grounds that persons were unlawfully denied voting rights because of race.

NO GROUNDS?

Johnson, resisting after the bitter campaign, was not available for comment. However, the Capitol indicated there were no grounds for such a suit "because the law reserves to defeated candidates the right to sue and they didn't have a candidate."

Robert Moses, campaign manager for unofficial gubernatorial candidate Aaron Henry, a Clarksdale Negro druggist, said a mock election staged in connection with the general election showed at least 80,000 persons would have voted for Henry if they "had not been disfranchised."

NO EFFORT TO QUALIFY

Henry made no effort to qualify as a candidate in the general election.

Returns from 1,765 of the state's 1,886 precincts gave Johnson 202,858 votes to 122,769 for Phillips, the first GOP gubernatorial candidate since 1947 and the first serious Republican contender in this century. Both campaigned as staunch segregationists and outspoken foes of the Kennedy Administration.

The Phillips vote was the largest ever given a Republican in this Deep South state, which gave Dwight Eisenhower 112,000 in his 1952 presidential bid. Phillips said the vote showed Mississippi had developed a two-party system and the GOP had become a real political factor.

OLE MISS CRISIS

The threatened election challenge on racial grounds came after a campaign based largely on civil rights and segregation matters.

A major issue was the 1962 desegregation crisis at the University of Mississippi. Johnson and Gov. Ross Barnett turned back James Meredith, a Negro, and his federal escort from the campus several times before he succeeded in registering under a federal court order. Johnson, as a result, campaigned under the slogan "Stand tall with Paul."

At the Johnson victory rally Tuesday night, Barnett told a cheering crowd:

"When Paul Johnson stood in the face of bayonets and guns, I said in my heart and mind there is a man I'm going to help."

Democrat Strife Bolsters GOP

Pol. Miss.

By KENNETH TOLER

Jackson Bureau, Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 9—"We have lost a battle but we have not lost the war."

That sums up Republican Rubel Phillips' reaction to losing the governorship in Tuesday's general election to 47-year-old Democrat Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson, the first son of a former governor to follow his father in that office.

The fact that Mr. Phillips' candidacy, first GOP threat to the long-entrenched one party system since the Civil War reconstruction era, drew an estimated 120,000 votes to his opponent's 200,000, gives weight to his statement that:

"We now know that we have a strong two-party system in the state."

On that premise, 38-year-old Mr. Phillips, a former Democratic office-holder who quit the party last year to head up the two-party movement, said: "As soon as I rest a few days I am going back to practicing law and working for the Republican party."

Mr. Phillips vote compares to the 73,561 cast for Republican Richard Nixon in the 1960 presidential election.

It is not entirely unlikely that Mr. Johnson, as titular head of the Mississippi Democratic party, and Mr. Phillips, new leader of the GOP in Mississippi, may be together in the 1964 presidential election. The Mississippi GOP is all-out for Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona for the party's presidential nomination.

Mr. Johnson who pointed out in the recent election that the Mississippi Democratic party has "absolutely no connection" with the "national party of John Kennedy," is backing a free-elector movement designed to "get the Kennedys out of the White House." Leaders of that movement plan to use the state's electoral vote to gain concessions for the "Mississippi way of life." They would not be adverse to trading with Sen. Goldwater whom they feel has their "conservatism and states rights philosophy."

When Mr. Phillips's group begins to fashion the party organization they are likely to find that the big vote was not "pro" but somewhat "anti." That is shown by the fact that the counties of the two Democrats Mr. Johnson defeated in the party's August primaries went Republican.

Indicative of the carry-over factional bitterness from the primaries is the failure of former Gov. J. P. Coleman and Charles Sullivan, the defeated Democrats, to take an active part in behalf of party nominee Mr. Johnson. Their counties — Choctaw and Coahoma—voted Republican.

Also pointing to the big Republican vote being bolstered by disgruntled Democratic primary losers is the GOP victory in the home Jones county (Laurel) of Carroll Gartin, who won for lieutenant governor as Mr. Johnson's running mate.

Mr. Gartin, who drew the then Gov. Coleman's support four years ago in the gubernatorial race he lost to Gov. Ross Barnett, was not a victim of the "anti" vote of the Coleman - Sullivan supporters who voted Republican largely to "get even" with Mr. Johnson for the bitter campaign he waged against their primary preferences.

The future political alignments are likely not to show the "unity" that prevailed in Democratic ranks in the recent general election.

300 Democrats at Rally Propose To Bury the GOP in Mississippi

Pol. Miss.

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 16 (AP)—In a rare post-primary rally, more than 3000 Democrats met last night with a call to "bury Republicanism in Mississippi for the next 100 years."

The Party's nominees for governor and lieutenant governor, Paul B. Johnson and Carroll Gartin, addressed the rally, along with Gov. Ross Barnett and U.S. Senators James O. Eastland and John C. Stennis.

The big guns of the Democrats assembled for the $25-a-plate function because Republicans are making a serious threat for the governorship in the Nov. 5 general election.

GOP standardbearer Rubel Phillips and the lieutenant governor candidate, State Sen. Stanford Morse, are waging a fierce campaign.

In the past, Republicans have put up only token opposition against the Democrats, who usually stop campaigning once they've picked nominees.

Johnson, who is currently Lieutenant Governor, told the rally that the general election is "a critical junction in history when we must point the direction for the next 25 years or more."

He said the "birth of a two-party system in the state will divide the conservative white vote. Then Mississippi would have to reap the whirlwind harvest of racial discord, more socialism, more taxes, more Negro participation in government and more integration."

ergy in interstate com- nal voltages in excess of . A similar bill has been in- today also by my good friend, stinguished Senator from Cali- ia, Hon. CLAIR ENGLE.

The new bill, similar to one offered in the 2d session, 87th Congress, would amend the Federal Power Act so as to require Federal Power Commission authority for the construction, extension, or operation of certain facilities for electrical energy transmission in interstate commerce.

The old bill, H.R. 12181, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but was not taken up before the end of the session.

In recent years, there have been great advances in the techniques of transmitting electric power. Until recently, the longest economical transmission distance ranged from 200 to 400 miles at maximum voltages of 230,000. For several years, there have been lines operating in Europe and Russia at greater distances and higher voltages. An Interior Department task force which recently studied the posibility of an intertie between the Pacific Northwest, where power can be produced economically in hydroelectric plants, and the Pacific Southwest, where the need for more electric energy at low cost is acute. The Interior Department study points out that electricity now can be transmitted for more than 1,000 miles at 750,000 volts.

Construction of such lines would have a tremendous impact upon the power utilization and economic growth of our country. Experiments have been conducted in the United States on transmission of extra-high-voltage power. Recently it was announced that such a line will be built in northern California and southern Oregon to interconnect the systems of Pacific Power & Light Co. and Pacific Gas & Electric Co. The Federal Power Commission has ruled by split vote that the terms of the Federal Power Act do not authorize the Commission to determine whether such extra-high-voltage lines are compatible with the public interest, convenience, and necessity.

The tremendous effect of such extra-high-voltage lines demands regulation by the Federal Power Commission. The bill provides that a certificate of convenience and necessity must be obtained from the Federal Power Comission before any person or company may construct, extend, operate or maintain any facilities for transmission of electricity at normal voltages in excess of 230,000 volts. Anyone who, at the time this bill is enacted, is already then engaged in the transmission of electricity at a normal voltage in excess of 230,000 volts will automatically receive such a certificate if he files for it within 90 days. Our proposal will require all applicants, except those who already have existing extra-high-voltage lines in operation at the time this bill is enacted, to show that their operations are required by present or future public convenience and necessity, and to observe such reasonable terms and conditions as the Federal Power Commission requires for the public convenience and necessity. In addition, no public utility would be permitted to abandon or curtail such extra-high-voltage transmission lines unless the Commission finds that such abandonment or curtailment would be consistent with the public interest and then grants permission for such abandonment or curtailment. The abandonment provision in our bill is identical with the provision in S. 1607 which was approved by the Senate August 14, 1961.

This bill also provides that any such extra-high-voltage transmission facilities authorized, but not required for the applicant's own use in power transmission, shall be made available on a common carrier basis for other electric energy. The Federal Power Commission will have authority to attach other reasonable conditions to granting permission for extra-high-voltage transmission facilities.

Governor Hollings' Farewell Address

OF

HON. ALBERT W. WATSON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 17, 1963

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, the great Palmetto State has just inaugurated as Governor an intelligent, articulate, and extremely capable gentleman, Donald S. Russell. Under his leadership, South Carolina will continue to ascend the ladder of State superiority.

Today it is my privilege to present for the RECORD the outstanding farewell address of our esteemed former Governor, Ernest F. Hollings, which in itself exemplifies a man mature, intelligent, and progressive thinking. Although only 37 years of age when he assumed the governorship we are proud of his 4-year record as our chief executive.

As he so eloquently pointed out, 100 years ago our State lay bleeding under the heel of a punitive Reconstruction era but today South Carolina is America's No. 1 opportunity State.

Mr. Speaker, it is a long, hard, and expensive road from poverty to prosperity, from ruin to recovery, but the Palmetto State has both the people and the will to travel that road successfully. Governor Hollings' complete address follows:

GOVERNOR HOLLINGS' FAREWELL ADDRESS

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the complete text of the farewell address of Gov. Ernest F. Hollings, delivered to the general assembly on Wednesday, January 9.)

I'm very much at home here—and regret leaving you. This ends 16 years in these halls as page, house member, speaker pro tempore, Lieutenant Governor, and Governor. The friendships, the experiences make me an oldtimer. The wonderful advice, cooperation, and assistance you have given me will again and again give me new inspiration. Pat and I are genuinely grateful.

I wish the best for Governor Russell. In short time, he will make important decisions for our State. I have tried to prepare our people for these times. The State's institutions and all law enforcement agencies have been charged with their responsibilities. I know you will give Governor Russell the same fine cooperation you gave me. I gladly offer him my support.

CONTROVERSY

The general assembly, unfortunately, leads a life similar to a football referee. You are seldom noticed until you make a controversial decision. I have never served with men of more courage and resolve. You took a $23 million deficit, and in 4 years turned it into a $19 million surplus. Meanwhile, the counties have received $18 million added assistance. For the first time in decades the incoming Governor begins operating in the black.

You took an insurance mess and created a strong department. A penitentiary with inadequate provisions is now being turned into a modern penal system. We have a securities law. The Attorney General of the United States says there is no organized crime in South Carolina. The law-enforcement officers now have a reliable retirement fund. Long needed State office building facilities are being built. We lead the Nation in TV education. A nuclear space commission points forward.

A commission on higher education tells how. A magnificent technical training program prepares the people for jobs. And the country's best development program brings jobs for our people. Thousands, tens of thousands of jobs. Over a billion dollars in new and expanded industry in 4 years. This is at the rate of over a half million dollars a day each and every day for 4 years.

The Advisory Council for Agriculture is working. The "50 to first" education program has been launched. Teachers' pay is up 34 percent, and personal income is up 25 percent. Tax seminars, insurance seminars, safety conferences, conferences on business, industry agriculture and education—people from the different sections of our State have joined hands for the common good. We are working together. You have every reason to be proud.

TRAVEL

I am honored to have worked with you on these projects. But there must be more than a rollcall of accomplishments. You have given me more. You have traveled me over 200,000 miles—to four countries in Latin America, seven countries in Europe, to Hawaii, Canada, Puerto Rico, and up and down, crisscrossing this Nation. I've met with the industrial giants, the labor leaders, talked with the university presidents, served in Washington at the appointment of President Eisenhower and President Kennedy, headed up the nuclear-space effort of our Governors' conference, talked constantly to fellow Governors and public leaders, both Republican and Democratic. And today, you who have supported me so loyally, you who have given me this vast experience, want to know about South Carolina. Have we a chance? Where are we headed?

As I visited in these foreign lands and talked with their people; as I traveled over this great country of ours, I began to realize that South Carolina really has a chance—an opportunity to succeed, to pull away from the hangover of 100 years of poverty, to climb to the top of the ladder of States.

This is my valedictory. In short time, South Carolina can reach the top and stay there.

Some foreign languages have no words for English words. Some have words with plural or different meanings. The Chinese language has the word "chuangi-chi" which possesses the plural meaning of "crisis," or "opportunity," depending on its use.

South Carolina, this year, has much the same characteristic. We are in chuangi-chi, crisis and opportunity. We need, must have, a time machine to compress 100 years into 1 year to speed with precision South Carolina into the age of space.

AT BOTTOM

This region, nearing 100 years ago, lay bleeding under the heel of a punitive Reconstruction era. Seventy-five years later the South was still the Nation's No. 1 economic problem. Even now, we have not recovered. This very day, any ranking of regions or States, for any purpose, finds the South and her States wearily clinging to the bottom rungs.

Why? Because the Northeast section of the Nation experienced an industrial revolution, prospered from it, and went on to enjoy its riches, while we struggled to feed our hungry children, and broke the spirit of our men and women who grew the fields of cotton that suddenly no one wanted.

Why? Because the Nation pushed West. The manifest destiny of exploitation drew the daring and the brave to draw from the land in the West the gold and the oil, the wheat and the corn, and to raise the great cattle herds that filled their wallets with money and their people with plenty.

And of us? We built our textile mills and gave our people jobs and hope. But again we were 50 years too late. International considerations had risen in America's mind and the textile industry is now expendable—and the jobs of our people with it.

Always too late with too little—that was the demon that plagued the South. Well, my friends, we still have too little, but this time we don't have to be too late. History has given us one more chance.

Just as the frontier's marksman with his single-shot muzzle loader had to hit the target with his first shot because he couldn't reload in time if he missed, we have to be accurate now. We have one shot. We must not miss.

LIMITED

With limited ammunition, we should understand and appreciate the forest in which we're hunting. This is the space age forest. It's deceiving. Many think this is just Buck Rogers fantasy. But this is real. This is not reaching to the moon or some particular planet. What creates the forest are the things we learn on the way. The study of extreme temperatures has given the housewife a coffee pot she can take out of an icebox and put on an open flame. The telemetry system of satellites is now being used in surgery to track blood temperature and blood flow, cutting a 90-minute operation down to 10 minutes. From a rocket propellant, we have developed a drug to treat mental illness. The satellite itself has brought international TV. And on and on it goes. With this age's dynamic technology, we wander into a wonderland of near magic. Science fiction is now scientific fact. Devices scoffed at 10 years ago, even 5 years ago, are exciting the research men of America today.

Scientifically, then, the space age means the reaching for outer space, and all the new scientific knowledge that is gained therefrom. Militarily, the space age means the determination of who shall control the space above us. But for the 95th general assembly, the space age means turning this crisis into opportunity. It means equipping our people for this new era. It means preparing our State so that she can compete with other States for space-age facilities. It means taking a tremendous leap forward now to prevent forever being relegated to the 50th of States.

YEAR 1970 TOO LATE

To prepare, some will think of a 3-year program, a 5-year program, or a goal to be attained by 1970—1970 will be too late. Knowledge of man recently has been calibrated to determine its rapidity of growth. From 4000 B.C. to the 16th century, man's knowledge was constant. With the invention of the printing press, the communication curtain was broken and by the 18th century the knowledge of man was doubling every 50 years. In the 20th century the doubling time dropped to every 20 years, with the space age now man's knowledge doubles every 10 years. In the next 10 years then, there will be twice as much to be taught in our universities than there is today. Veritably, we are in the midst of an education explosion.

This space-age forest is growing like wildfire and this general assembly must understand this problem; it must appreciate this problem; and it must legislate for it—now.

The question before South Carolina is not whether this explosion is good or bad, necessary or not. The question is simply, can we equip ourselves to utilize it before the rest of the Nation leaves us behind. The current of history is more swift than ever. Those who float will shortly be left in the eddies of the stream.

HOW TO AIM

In an age where bullets to shoot down bullets are being designed, how do we aim so that the target is not out of date when we hit it? This sounds impossible—but is it? Space's dynamic technology allows us to accomplish something never before possible by a State or area. We can catch up. We can condense time and leap from today all the way over to the day after tomorrow, without pausing, even for an instant—in tomorrow. This is no pipedream or wild theory.

Nor will it be for a first time in history. For it has just been done by another people in another land. In 1917, Russia was distraught. There was no industry, no education, no science, no arts or culture. There were only 47,000 Communists, and as a nation the Soviet was only to be found in the geography book. But they took good aim. They didn't frustrate over trivia—over what was nice and who had to be kept happy. They were determined to pack 100 years into a few short years. And while we disagree with the bullet they used, they hit the target.

They skipped the 100 years of the industrial age and went from oxcart to space vehicle. They caught up and passed the United States, Britain, and other great powers. Instead of 47,000—today there are over a billion people in the world now controlled by Communists—the fastest growing political development in the history of man. With no culture and arts—the Bolshoi ballet. Of many sports they never knew, but they have just won the olympics. With no power, today a world power. Russia and the United States are the only ones in space, and admittedly, today, the Soviet is 2 years ahead. And 5 years ahead in oceanography.

The Soviet saw the way the world was headed and they took a shortcut. They saw what day after tomorrow would be and they went straight for it. They ignored the middle ground—they avoided trivia. The Russian science, culture, and technology hurdled from American Civil War levels to the level of the day after tomorrow. They didn't have much to work with, but they used it all for one purpose. And it worked. This is the type aim South Carolina must take. We must unflinchingly avoid the temptation to restrict our goal—to aim merely at catching up. Our ultimate goal has to be nothing less than to forge ahead—and stay ahead.

NOISES

In taking aim let's become accustomed to the noises of the forest. We must not be distracted. These noises are trivia. The problem of South Carolina—the problem of this general assembly, is trivia. Trivia means cussing and knocking each other out all year long about two parties, when the choice is Kennedy or R[illegible] means holding alerts all ove[illegible] there are by last count two [illegible] the State. We all know that [illegible] should be increased, but trivia [illegible] long palavering each year in this hall [illegible] to give the teachers 10, 12, or 15 pe[illegible] when any one would be inadequate, and [illegible] together would not give us quality educa[illegible]tion. Trivia means trying to legislate loyalty—or trying to regulate politics by law. These noises of the legislative forest must be recognized and given their position of unimportance if our one shot is to score.

Now we are set. We know the forest. We know the noises of the forest. We know how to aim. We know the target. But what is this one shot we are to use? A college professor. You say we have lots of those, and we do have many good ones. But we don't have one with a National Aeronautics Space Agency grant. We don't have one with a space science grant. We don't have one internationally famous who will attract leading scholars and professors. You say that's Harvard thinking. South Carolina can't afford it. Any money available should go to the teachers, and not these ivory tower professors. But I disagree. We can't afford not to do it.

Let's talk money. Suppose we had a faculty budget of $60,000 for 5 professors. The ordinary way, the South Carolina way, is to hire 5 good professors at $12,000 each. But the space age approach is to retain an outstanding one at $20,000 and hire the other 4 at $10,000 apiece.

ATTRACTION

The $10,000 ones are just as good, perhaps better than the original $12,000 professors, for this type will sacrifice to associate with the outstanding. And you haven't spent any more money. In fact, you've made money. For the grants and contracts that the outstanding professor can attract will bring a fortune to the campus. You see, the national effort in space has released from the Ivy League campuses the brains of the country. For those that can qualify, money for research is available anywhere—on every campus. Last year our country devoted $18 billion to various research and development projects. In this one year, we spent more for research than was expended by this country for research from the Revolution up to and including World War II.

In 1957, internationally famous Prof. John Gibson came to Purdue, a State university. After a year, he finally secured $300 to start on a program with a few German scientists and students. Today, his research team consists of 7 other professors and 60 graduate students—all involved in teaching of research. Funded by grants and contracts John Gibson works on a budget of $300,000 a year. None of this money comes from Purdue.

Recently, his team's work on computers has received national fame—and further grants. Purdue and Indiana have taken a position of leadership because of the seed corn planted by John Gibson. This one shot—the outstanding professor—has a snowballing effect. First, you have the professor, then his associates, then talented students, then contracts, then grants, then quality education, then leadership. Multiply this by 5 or 10 professors and it's easy to see the effect.

PALO ALTO

And it's not all Government money. The great percentage by far is private capital under the free enterprise system. Recently, I saw this in Palo Alto, Calif., on the campus of Stanford University. Over 35 great names in American industry, with million dollar research centers. Think of the investment, the brains, the talent, the leadership—and new industry. In 1955, Lockheed had its 1 division of space in Palo Alto with 450 em-his same division has over s. And the talented become . Lookheed has a program that rcent of the cost of a course at for any of their employees—and ly, there are more employees in at- nce at Stanford than we have students rolled at the University of South Carolina.

This division has 279 doctorates on its staff. You begin to see—and feel the impact of the space age. Similar endeavors are underway in Alabama, Texas, Florida, Virginia, and Georgia. And the place to start is with that one nationally prominent professor.

It also gives us the quality we've been looking for. Raising the pay of the incompetent teacher will not make him competent. But raising the level of higher education elevates all levels of education. The professor will be more talented, his associates brighter, the students more challenged, the graduating teacher better trained and more inspired. And your children and mine, when they graduate from high school can get into college and compete in society.

STIMULATE

When you bring in the best men from outside—when you encourage and free the best men we have now on our faculties—when you do these things, you stimulate our students, you stimulate our society. Nothing is more urgent than for our State's now splendid array of brainpower and leadership, across the board, to be supplemented, infused and even cross-pollinated and inspired by an inflow of genius, spirited enterprise, and topmost talent.

This assembly must look at South Carolina's role in the Nation if it is to do its job well. Whether it realizes it or not, it is a part of the space age. And if we are to compete—if our people are to have a chance at good jobs—if the communities are to continue to attract new industry—if our children are to be educated and skilled, and if we are to retain these children as useful leaders for the State—then it will be because this assembly had courage. A call on this courage is imminent.

FACT OF LAND

We have all argued that the Supreme Court decision of May 1954 is not the law of the land. But everyone must agree that it is the fact of the land. Interposition, sovereignty, legal motions, personal defiance have all been applied to constitutionalize the law of the land. And all attempts have failed. As we meet, South Carolina is running out of courts. If and when every legal remedy has been exhausted, this general assembly must make clear South Carolina's choice, a government of laws rather than a government of men. As determined as we are, we of today must realize the lesson of 100 years ago, and move on for the good of South Carolina and our United States. This should be done with dignity. It must be done with law and order. It is a hurdle that brings little progress to either side. But the failure to clear it will do us irreparable harm.

THE ANSWER?

In the intriguing swirl of supernewness—with limitless mother lodes of progress, advancement and betterment in many forms becoming ripe for exploitation by the wise and the pioneering of this age—South Carolina should be, and I believe is, America's No. 1 opportunity State. Our ability to turn the crises into opportunities is beyond question. The real question is our willingness.

My serving with so many of you over the years confirms my confidence in your courage. But, years of public service have proved to me that we have to prove ourselves again and again. The space age is on us—the only question is—does it smother us or save us? This general assembly will give South Carolina's answer.

Business Leader Supports President's Tax Proposal

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ED EDMONDSON

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 17, 1963

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Speaker, Mr. James F. Oates, Jr., president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, has just sent to Members of the House a copy of a letter addressed to the President, strongly supporting the President's recommendation for a cut in personal and corporate income taxes. In a message to Members of the House which accompanied his letter to the President, Mr. Oates states that he believes the tax reduction is "the main issue," and "contrary to earlier views I now strongly believe that we should not insist on concurrent enactment of tax reforms."

Significantly, the insurance company executive expresses the opinion that—

We should hold off on demands for concurrent expenditure reductions as an offset to tax reduction.

Controversy over these matters, however meritorious, will only serve to delay or defeat achievement of the essential goal.

We should instead join together to support vigorously the proposal for an across-the-board substantial tax reduction now. Here is a rare opportunity for all Americans to reaffirm their faith in free enterprise and to demonstrate once again its mighty capabilities.

Because of the high priority which this issue has been given by President Kennedy in his state of the Union message, and because of Mr. Oates' prominence in the business world, I believe the Oates letter to President Kennedy is one which will interest many people. On the assumption that this letter has already been made available to many by its author, and further publication should serve a similar constructive purpose, the text of the letter is made a part of these remarks at this point:

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES,
New York, N.Y., December 20, 1962.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The tax program outlined in general terms in your speech to the Economic Club of New York on December 14 deserves the support of the Nation. In addressing yourself, as you made clear, not to the possibility of recession in the near future, but to the basic necessity of growth and employment during the longer term, you went to the heart of the matter. Your solution, an across-the-board cut in individual and corporate tax levels to increase demand for production and investment and thereby release the private sector of the economy to go to work, seems to be the right one. It should appeal alike to business, labor, and the consuming public.

On reading the full text of your remarks, it was a gratifying experience, if you will permit me to say so, to note the similarity in principle between your views and the position presented in a speech delivered by me before the New Jersey Association of Real Estate Boards on December 6 last, a copy of which is attached.

You have offered the choice before us in these words: "Our practical choice is not between a tax cut deficit and a budgetary surplus. It is between two kinds of deficits; a chronic deficit of inertia, as the unwanted result of inadequate revenues and a restricted economy, or a temporary deficit of transition, resulting from a tax cut designed to boost the economy, increase tax revenue and achieve * * * a future budget surplus."

Business, in my opinion, should endorse wholeheartedly your statement that "the Federal Government's most useful role is not to rush into a program of excessive increases in public expenditures, but to expand the incentives and opportunities for private expenditures."

Business should also welcome your decision, in line with the suggestion of Chairman MILLS, of the House Ways and Means Committee, to accompany tax reduction by "increased control of the rises in expenditures." Although one would prefer to have nondefense and nonspace expenditures cut back so as to hold total governmental expenditures constant in fiscal year 1964 at the fiscal year 1963 level, the main issue of prompt tax reduction should not be jeopardized by the inevitable controversy over the extent and incidence of budget reductions. In my judgment, therefore, the public—in furtherance of the long-term objective—should accept your statement that "defense and space expenditures will necessarily rise * * * but * * * that * * * all other expenditures combined will be held approximately at its current level."

Similar considerations should apply to proposed tax reforms other than the structural reform needed to change the level and degree of progression of our tax rates. Other reforms, such as so-called loophole reforms, the elimination of special privileges and tax simplifications, whatever their merits, are highly controversial and, as you have so well indicated, difficult to enact into law. There is every reason to believe that insistence on the enactment of such loophole reforms at this time would frustrate the achievement of the basic structural reform of tax reduction, with its far greater potential for furthering material growth. The detailed controversial issues should be left to the Congress for later debate and resolution. As you stated in answer to an Economic Club question: "Well, the purpose of reform really is directed to the encouraging of growth, and employment. I quite agree that to launch into a full-scale battle on general reform for academic reasons would be unwise."

It is my intention to support the broad principles of your tax reduction program. The views expressed in the attached December 6 remarks and in this letter will be given circulation among my friends within and without the business community and made known to the Members of the Congress. I hope that these steps will take place in what I confidently believe will be a broad-based and enthusiastic response to your tax program.

Respectfully yours,

JAMES F. OATES, Jr.

Dixie's GOPs Line Up for Goldwater

Pol South

By REG MURPHY

Constitution Political Editor

(Copyright, 1963, by The Atlanta Constitution)

Sen. Barry Goldwater is an almost solid choice across the South for the Republican presidential nomination—and some 250 delegate votes are his more than a year ahead of convention time.

Those votes are close to half enough to give him the nomination. And the people who hold the votes say they could carry every Southern state for him if he is nominated.

These are among the major findings of a survey Tuesday by The Constitution which revealed that some Southern Republicans might split with their national party if the conservative Arizonan is denied the presidential banner.

Another strong argument advanced by the state chairmen is that Goldwater's heading the ticket would help them elect more congressmen in the region which has sent few Republicans to Washington.

Fund-raising in the South for the Republicans would be a relatively easy matter if Goldwater is the choice, the Republicans said.

The survey showed that of 305 delegate votes in the South, Rockefeller would get only a few and that Sen. Thruston Morton of Kentucky would get around 30 if the voting were held this week.

Georgia's delegation is one that would give a few votes to Morton, but would be predominantly for Goldwater.

MAN IN THE MIDDLE HAS COMMANDING LEAD

L-R: Thruston Morton, Barry Goldwater, Nelson Rockefeller

Chairman James Dorsey estimated that about 18 of the 24 Georgia delegate votes would go to Goldwater "as their first choice." Later ballots, if needed, might change the count, he added.

"Yes," he answered, "I think Sen. Goldwater could carry Georgia (in the presidential election). But I think there are others who could, too."

It was the first time Dorsey had spoken publicly about the inclinations of the Georgia Republicans and indicated that Rockefeller has little standing in the Georgia party.

The survey indicated that both Morton and Gov. George Romney of Michigan generally are regarded as being stronger candidates in the South than Rockefeller among Republicans.

Mississippi Chairman Wirt A. Yerger, who heads the Southern Association of Republican State Chairmen, mentioned the possibility of a split if Goldwater is denied the leadership.

Rockefeller's nomination "would probably throw the South—or a good portion of it—into some sort of a third party," Yerger said. "Or it might mean that some states would split and go for Kennedy. But that is not going to happen: Rockefeller won't get the nomination."

"I don't think Goldwater would lose a Southern state," insisted

Alabama Chairman John Grenier. "Goldwater would be way out front if the primary were held today," Florida Chairman Tom Fairfield Brown added. His is one of the states where primaries will be held next spring to pick delegates.

North Carolina is another where there will be district primaries next January and February, but Chairman Robert L. Gavin said, "At this time the sentiment seems to be with Goldwater."

Arkansas is an exception, partially because Gov. Rockefeller's brother Winthrop is chairman of the State Industrial Development Commission and would get a split with Goldwater forces.

Kentucky is somewhat undecided at the moment. It would like, if possible, to run favorite son Thruston Morton.

But for the others, it's almost monolithically Goldwater. State-by-state, here is the picture:

ALABAMA—Grenier said his delegation (20 votes) will be "100 per cent for Goldwater," and added "His pluralities in the South will shock even the most professional politicians. The important point is that with Goldwater on the ticket the Republicans will knock off liberal Democratic congressmen like ten pins. The South is the only hope for the Republican Party ever to regain control of the Congress."

ARKANSAS—Chairman William L. Spicer said the 12 votes might be split. "The people in Arkansas are very appreciative of the efforts of Winthrop Rockefeller. . . . The thinking Democrats, independents and Republicans are commenting more and more about Sen. Goldwater. . . . (On Rockefeller) "He can't be as liberal as we have heard because of his fiscal policies in New York."

Map Shows How Republicans Will Vote in 12 Southern States

FLORIDA—Brown said, "There is great enthusiasm for Goldwater among young people, and this is the most encouraging thing to me on the American political horizon. . . . Governors Romney and Rockefeller do have a following." Of the 32 votes, almost all would be for Goldwater now.

GEORGIA — Chairman Dorsey estimated 18 of the 24 votes would go to Goldwater. National Executive Committeeman Robert Snodgrass has said kind things about Morton at open meetings, and most of the delegation is working for the Goldwater camp now.

KENTUCKY—Mrs. W. C. Cruse, temporary chairman, said, "If our native son (Morton) figures anywhere in this—either as president or vice president—we would be wholeheartedly behind him." Speaking privately, she added, "There is more sentiment for Goldwater" than Rockefeller in dividing the 24 votes.

LOUISIANA—Chairman Thomas C. Hall said, "If it isn't unanimous, it almost is" for Goldwater. "The chances are practically nil" of carrying the state for Rockefeller, who is "too much of a liberal" and would make America "too much of a welfare state."

MISSISSIPPI — The 13 votes (could go to 19 if the Republicans were to win the governor's office this fall) "will be as solid as they possibly can be behind the only man we feel can beat Kennedy," Yerger said. Rockefeller is "too much of what we would call an accidental Republican." The Goldwater boom "is the fastest moving political development in the country at this time," Yerger added.

NORTH CAROLINA—Gavin said "there is a tremendous amount of sentiment" for Goldwater, who would "have a stronger appeal for the conservatives in the Democratic Party, too." He added, "It would help all of us" if Miami Beach or Dallas were the convention site.

SOUTH CARGLINA — "It was the South Carolina delegation to the 1960 Republican national convention that spearheaded Sen. Goldwater's nomination," said Chairman J. Drake Edens Jr. The 16 votes will all go to him and "Gov. Rockefeller is certainly not looked on with favor by any South Carolina Republicans that I know of . . . We don't look on (Goldwater) as a Southern candidate. This guy is a great national candidate from any conservative viewpoint."

TENNESSEE—Chairman Erby L. Jenkins said there could be some Rockefeller support, but the 28 votes would be primarily for Goldwater. "In view of the ultra-liberal government of the Kennedy administration, people are beginning to take a new look toward Goldwater's philosophy. In my opinion, he is much stronger today than he was six months ago."

TEXAS — Chairman Peter O'Donnell Jr. is organizer of the Draft Goldwater movement. Although he could not be reached for comment Tuesday he has said he believes all 54 votes would go to Goldwater and that the South also would be solid for the senator from a nearby state.

VIRGINIA — Chairman Horace E. Henderson said, "Without any question the majority of Virginia Republicans would appear to favor Sen. Goldwater." But the 30 votes also would consider "electing a Republican president, not with just carrying the South. . . . We here in Virginia believe any Republican is preferable to four more years of the Kennedy administration," he added.

Faubus Backs Wallace In Defying U.S. Court

N.Y.T. June

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 11 (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas said today that white persons in the South "now have little more chance for equity and justice in the Federal courts than did the unfortunate Jews of Germany in the Nazi courts of Hitler."

Pol. South

Mr. Faubus was commenting at a news conference on President Kennedy's telegram yesterday to Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama. The telegram asked Mr. Wallace not to block the doors of the University of Alabama to two Negro students.

Governor Faubus, who used National Guardsmen to block the integration of Central High School in Little Rock in 1957, said the President's telegram showed "almost complete lack of understanding of the situation."

He said Mr. Wallace was "taking the only course open to him to prevent disorder and violence."

South's Senators In a Crucial Spot

WASHINGTON—Before the debate begins, it may be well for those of us who want the House and Senate to endorse President Kennedy's civil rights program to ask ourselves very searchingly what we expect the clash in Congress to accomplish.

On reflection most of us will agree that mere passage of the bill does not in itself amount to a far-reaching victory for civil liberty and human decency. The bill may be endorsed only after a controversy that has strained national unity and left a painful legacy of bitterness and suspicion. In such an atmosphere it will be hard, if not impossible, for the principles of the new legislation to have a fair chance of acceptance in the South.

By this time it is apparent to everyone that the debate in Congress, particularly in the Senate, will be long and angry.

Amid these converging risks the position of the Southern senators may well be crucial. It is easy to denounce them. But it is far more important to understand them.

Ralph McGill, a brave Southerner and gallant American, has asked us to think of these Southern senators as they confront the racial crisis. Except for Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough of Texas, not one of them has spoken a single healing word that might soften the conflict.

It is a sad record. Mr. McGill is right in seeing all this as a tragedy in self-mutilation. Yet deeper questions await our answer.

These senators are not blundering fanatics caught in a web of ancient prejudices. Many of them would bring honor and distinction to any legislative assembly.

If Northern spokesmen (with whose principles I happen to agree) are self-righteous and are quick to smell out a folly in the South while remaining blind to racial tragedies in other parts of the country, they will kindle a flame of anger in the Southern senators that will never be put out until many precious things have been consumed.

Of course, the North cannot allow itself to be frightened out of its principles or scared into a compromise by a cruel and wearing filibuster. The first few speeches for the North will be decisive in setting the tone for the whole debate. If these speeches assert the essential principles of American freedom, without pronouncing angry moral judgment against the South, then the blame will rest directly on the Southern senators if they forget their greatness and strike random blows of prejudice and fear at their critics.

Talmadge Leaves The Voting to Us

Atl. Jour. 6/21/63

Pol. South

By MARGARET SHANNON

Atlanta Journal Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, June 20—Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, who thinks President Kennedy cannot count on carrying Georgia or any Southern state in 1964, said Friday he is out of the business of telling Georgia what to do in presidenital politics.

The Georgia junior senator was asked whether, in light of what he had to say a few days ago about the Kennedy chances, he thinks Georgia ought to offer a favorite son candidate for the presidential nomination at the Democratic national convention next year.

Sen. Talmadge

"I left the reins of state government eight and a half years ago, and the determination of policy is a matter to be decided on the state level by the governor and the State Democratic Executive Committee," Mr. Talmadge said.

In 1952, when Mr. Talmadge was governor, the Georgia delegation, which he headed, supported Sen. Richard B. Russell for the nomination.

SEN. RUSSELL'S candidacy was more than a favorite son movement, however. He actively sought support in other states.

The Georgia delegation stayed with him throughout the balloting, and never made the gesture of switching to the nominee, Adlai Stevenson. Sen. Russell's peak vote at the convention was 294.

The favorite son device is often used at national party conventions as a means of registering protest and, more frequently, as a way to give a state bargaining power in the nomination of presidential and vice presidential candidates, in shaping the platform, or in other political matters.

SEN. TALMADGE'S appraisal of the extent of President Kennedy's political trouble in the south was first voiced publicly after the President's June 11 television speech on civil rights and racial unrest.

The senator said in an interview Friday that the President's civil rights message to congress this week "won't help him any in the South."

The Georgia Democrat said it is too early to predict how Georgia or other Southern states will vote 17 months hence. He said, however, that if New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller is the Republican nominee, "most Georgians will vote for Kennedy."

Sen. Talmadge said Southerners in the past often have voted Republican as a way of showing their dissatisfaction with the Democratic candidate.

HE SAID HE bases his estimate of the poor Kennedy standing in Georgia now on "mail, visitors, and conversations with many people in Georgia."

The senator said the President's civil rights stand will not help the rest of the Kennedy legislative program in congress.

He said, however, that it will not affect his voting on other issues and he will "continue to view each piece of legislation as a separate entity" and judge it on its own merit.

Sen. Talmadge said the country will become "a police state" if the major Kennedy civil right proposals are enacted.

"IF THE FULL import of these proposed laws ever gets to the grass roots, it will have a shocking effect throughout the country," he said.

The Georgian said widest opposition in the Senate will be to three key Kennedy proposals, which he described as:

—Telling owners of privately owned public accommodations, such as restaurants, stores, hotels and theaters, that they have "no freedom to select their own customers."

—Giving some federal bureaucrat authority to withhold federal funds in any federal program in any state in the nation.

—Setting up the attorney general as "the arbiter or guardian of the civil rights of every citizen in America with the power to file a suit at taxpayers' expense for action without a jury trial before a federal judge appointed for life.

Sen. Talmadge said he favors President Kennedy's request for stepping up vocational training as an aid to combating unemployment among both whites and Negroes.

"Many of these are young people, teen-agers, and it is necessary to take some action to teach them something useful."

factors seem to make this inevitable. The high birth rate of the mid-1940's will result in a sharp increase in the college-age population beginning next year or so. Furthermore, a higher percentage of high school graduates are going on to college and graduate schools.

If the country is going to meet the essential needs in these and other areas, we shall have to avoid inefficiency and deny ourselves the luxury of unwise and unnecessary expenditures in all areas. For instance, we must see that people do not occupy expensive hospital beds in acute general hospitals merely because they have hospital insurance. We must see that less expensive care is available through extended care units, nursing homes, organized home care, and outpatient services when these are sufficie natnd, indeed, better suited for the patient.

No longer can we afford the haphazard construction of hospital and other health facilities resulting from inadequate community planning and organization. Nor can we afford the luxury of administrators putting the interests of their own hospitals above the interests of the community as a whole. The wise use of our resources must be a concern of government at all levels and of the private volunteer agencies and the individual citizen as well.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, at this time I wish to speak in regard to a situation which is developing in the Republican Party, my party, which I think is of the utmost consequence for our Nation. In this connection, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for an additional 3 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am very deeply disturbed, and I think the country has every right to be very deeply disturbed, about a debate which seems to be pending at this time as to what the intentions of the Republican Party are in regard to civil-rights legislation, and especially, about the bandying about of the term "lily white" with respect to the destiny and the policy of my party.

I was deeply concerned to read in the New York Times of today a statement by Roy Wilkins, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in which he said:

> It is the Republicans, not the Dixiecrats, who are the conversation pieces around the Nation.

I believe this is a mortal threat to my party. It would be a very serious threat to the country if the Republican Party went lily white. I refuse to believe at all that it will. I shall fight it with every element of my being as a grave disservice to the party of Lincoln and a grave disservice to our Nation, especially at this time when it is very clear that the votes of Republicans will make or break civil rights legislation. At long last the moral note with respect to civil rights has been sounded by the President. But the vote will be a moral vote, and the President does not have the necessary votes in his own party to support his program. We all know it. We all know that civil rights legislation has not a prayer and cloture—which we will have to have at some stage of these proceedings—has not a prayer, unless we have Republican votes.

In the course of the discussion, which looks almost like a onesided political counteroffensive—though I do not believe it is so—the President and the Democratic leaders in respect of civil rights are as sincere as we are on this side. What is being overlooked is that Republicans have given support. For example, I have previously referred to the 18 out of 33 Republican votes for cloture last February on the effort to amend rule XXII. I have referred to the overwhelming Republican vote for the so-called part III in the 1957 civil rights bill, which we lost, but we certainly did not lose it because of the failure of Republican support.

I am not making any apologies for the party. I am pointing out only that the general impression which is now being created, that the party is fighting some sort of struggle about whether or not to be lily-white, is solely attributable to the fact that more than a majority for civil rights is expected of the Republican Party. I am sure we will furnish a majority, but what is asked for is more than that. I think there is the greatest likelihood that we will meet that test, too. But I think it will call for Republicans throughout the country—and that is my reason for speaking out—to speak out upon this subject and to make clear that the Republican rank and file knows that we are the party of Lincoln and that we fully intend to support effective civil rights, legislation, to demand of their legislators that they do the same, and ask the public not to be confused by the debate which now seems to be taking place in the newspapers, or by the doubts which some people entertain.

Mr. President, second and very importantly, the point about the bipartisan character of the effort, if it is to succeed at all, must be fully recognized and understood. It cannot be glossed over or fuzzed over. There is no hope for it unless the Democrats as well as Republicans support it, and unless it will be the considered, express, and articulate intention of the Democrats and their leaders to cooperate fully to respect and give dignity to Republicans who themselves are cooperating in relation to civil rights, so that the issue will not be merely a question of the President's program, but a matter of supporting the country's program and the basic needs of our Nation.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask for 2 additional minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. I pointed out—and I am not given to glossing over things—that even as to the attitude of the minority leader, it is a fact that although he opposes the public accommodations section—which I think is very important and I shall fight very hard for it—as the minority leader on the Republican side, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has supported a number of the issues, one being the very important part III of the 1957 bill to desegregate the public school system, an issue which has not had affirmative support on the floor of the Senate, and to which his weight gives great affirmative support. I am still hopeful that we might even persuade him to be for some version of a public accommodations section. All I am pointing out is that we on the Republican side, first, do not deserve these speculative fears, but they exist. Therefore they must be recognized by two groups in our country: First, Republicans themselves, who must be more articulate on the subject, and, second, Democrats, who must recognize that the effort is a bipartisan program. It is not merely a question of supporting the President. It is a program in support of basic constitutional law, public order, and public morality.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I commend the Senator from New York for his remarks today. As one of the Senators on the Democratic side of the aisle, serving today as the acting majority leader, I wish to make crystal clear that there is absolutely no room for partisan bickering and partisan advantage on the question of civil rights legislation, if we wish to pass the measure. It is the desire of the Senator from Minnesota, as it is the desire of my colleague and friend from New York [Mr. JAVITS], my able compatriot, the good Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL], and others, to pass an effective and meaningful civil rights program that would embody the suggestions and proposals that were sent to Congress by the President in his message and in the bills that have been introduced. Some of those bills may be modified, because they will go through the legislative process. But the principles and substance of those bills represent what we feel is an essential program.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may use the 3 minutes allocated to me in the morning hour.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. To make false accusations against political leaders or political parties is a disservice to the cause of civil rights legislation and to the program that our country needs.

I know that if we are to be able to close off the debate in case there is filibuster, we shall need 22 or 23—perhaps more—votes from our Republican friends. If we are to pass civil rights legislation we shall have to have help from our Republican friends.

So I should like to make it crystal clear that if the President's program is to be more than a message, if it is to be a program of action, we must have bipartisan cooperation. When I joined as a consponsor with my colleagues on this side and on the Republican side, I took that pledge, and I will fulfill that pledge, commitment, and promise. I thank the Senator from New York for speaking today as he did. He had every right to do so. I assure him and his colleagues that the Senator from Minnesota will do everything that he can to preserve the unity, cooperation, and spirit of understanding that now exists on this very vital important subject of national policy. The problem is like fighting a war against discrimination and bigotry. This is a great national effort. We ought to have the same kind of unity and sense of purpose to overcome the bitter problems of discrimination, prejudice, and bigotry as we have in our struggle against Communist tyranny. Unless we can have that kind of unity, we shall be defeated.

So I say again to Senators on the Republican side that we need to march together. We need to learn how to work together. We need to learn how to work together on this issue if we desire victory; and the Nation needs a victory on this question.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. I wish to make myself understood. First, I am not accusing the press of fomenting something that is not so. Reporters at the Republican National Committee meeting got certain impressions. Reporters at the Young Republicans meeting in San Francisco got certain impressions. One of our leading candidates for the presidency is stating certain views about civil rights. I do not maintain that there is no foundation for what those reporters have said. What I am appealing for is that the Republicans express themselves, and that Democrats who believe in bipartisanship will state that the effort will not be a political approach. I point out that we can escalate the civil rights bill to include the FEPC program which the President sent us. He said also that he would favor discretionary authority to cut off aid to States if Federal money is used to build segregated projects. We might decide to make that requirement mandatory, though it may not be part of his program. The point is that we need a meaningful program. For that we must unite.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President——

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California seek recognition?

Mr. KUCHEL. I do.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from California.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, with fellow Republicans and my friends across the aisle on the Democratic side I placed my name on proposed legislation in the field of civil rights, which came here a few days ago from the White House. Beyond that, with a group of my colleagues on the Republican side, I introduced substantially the same group of proposals many months ago. We did the same thing in the last Congress. We have done so, generally, for many, many years. In doing so we acted as Americans. I should like to speak for a moment simply as a Republican, proud of the heritage of his own political party.

The only place I know of to find out what the Republican Party of the United States of America stands for in 1963 is to read and study the compact it made at the city of Chicago with the American people in the last presidential campaign. The 1960 Republican national platform is a progressive document. It solemnly promised that the Republican Party would work to eliminate the evil, miserable, contemptible filibuster from the rules of the U.S. Senate. I have tried to carry out that compact on more than one occasion. The Republican platform in 1960 promised to move forward in the field of civil rights—it dealt specifically with the cause of equal treatment under law for all Americans.

There is not an individual on the Democratic side of the aisle who for one moment would deny any of us over here the great pride we take in the memory of the first President of our party, Abraham Lincoln. I have followed the Lincoln philosophy. So did our great leader Dwight Eisenhower, under whose leadership we made progress, legislatively, in 1957.

There is no way that any one Member of the U.S. Senate or any one citizen can direct or order another citizen to make up his mind in any fashion. One can reason. One can attempt to persuade. In the last analysis, I suppose we should all be thankful that every American citizen can make up his mind on any public question simply as he sees the light.

So far as I am concerned, what the Republican Party pledged to the American people in 1960 I intend—as best I can—to see carried out in the U.S. Senate; and I am glad, in a bipartisan fashion, to move forward hopefully toward success legislatively so that we will not view as a sham the American theory of equal treatment under law for all Americans.

THE NEW "MARINE HIGHWAY" TO ALASKA

Mr. GRUENING. Mr. President, a new approach to Alaska is now available. It has unique aspects. In Alaska it is known as a "marine highway." It consists of an impressive ferry system composed of three mammoth vessels operated by the State of Alaska which ply daily betwen Prince Rupert, British Columbia, and all principal southeastern Alaska point, and thence to the interior of Alaska over highways.

The marine highway became a necessity when, 9 years ago, the only U.S. carrier abolished its passenger service between the lower 48 States and Alaska. This left as the only means of passenger transportation between the older States and Alaska the commercial air services and by automobile over the long, unpaved Alaska highway through Canada.

As long as Alaska was a territory, remedying this situation was impossible. The restrictive Organic Act fastened on the territory in 1912, by which Alaska was shackled up to the time statehood was achieved, forbade the territory to incur any debt.

But statehood once achieved, Governor Egan proposed a $23 million bond issue to establish two ferry systems in Alaska. the legislature approved; the people of Alaska ratified the proposal; and the construction of three ferries—in U.S. shipyards, of course—ordered. The first of these, the S.S. Malaspina, has been operating since late last winter. The prospective visitor drives through the beautiful Canadian Rockies to Prince Rupert or he can connect with the Alaska ferries through a Canadian ferry service from Vancouver, British Columbia.

These ferries, luxuriously appointed, make possible the viewing of one of the most beautiful, and yet not too well-known trips up the "Inside Passage"—a scenic waterway protected from the ocean swells by an archipelago of forested islands.

The new highway is described in the current issue of U.S. News & World Report. It is illustrated profusely and I regret that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not allow the use of photographs. But I ask unanimous consent that the text of the article: "Now a New 'Highway' To Alaska By Sea" be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOW A NEW "HIGHWAY" TO ALASKA BY SEA

You can now take a short cut to Alaska, where the 1963 tourist season is just beginning.

Motorists heading for the 49th State can save 600 miles of driving and a day's time by using the new route.

This short cut is not a road but a recently established ferry line, in which the State of Alaska has invested $15 million.

If everything works out as planned, the State will get its money back—and more.

For Alaskans, the ferry opens up a regular line of communication with the southeastern tip of their State, relatively isolated up to now. It also promises cheaper transportation of people and goods in an area where the cost of living has been high.

For visitors, the State-owned ferry line provides not only an alternate route to reach the interior of Alaska, but also some of the most magnificent scenery in the world. It is expected to give a big lift to the tourist business.

Two automobile routes now lead to Alaska.

One is the famous Alaska Highway, stretching for 1,523 miles across the northwestern corner of Canada and continuing to Fairbanks and Anchorage.

The other is the new, 450-mile marine highway through the fiords of the Alaskan Panhandle.

Many visitors to Alaska this year, it is reported, plan to go by one route, return by the other.

STOP, SEE, CONTINUE

The southern terminus of the ferry line is at Prince Rupert, in British Columbia, about 600 miles north of Seattle.

WASHINGTON, July 1 — Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., leader of Southern senators opposing civil rights legislation, says Republican Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona could carry a large part of the South for president if the election were this fall.

He said on a television program Sunday (Washington Report, CBS) that it is difficult to tell what the situation will be next year when the election actually takes place.

But he said that if Sen. Goldwater is the Republican candidate and if the Arizonan maintains his present views on states' rights, he would be hard to beat in the South in 1964.

Sen. Russell

Sen. Goldwater

SEN. RUSSELL thus agreed, in effect, with Georgia's junior senator, Herman E. Talmadge, who has said that as of now President Kennedy cannot be sure of carrying Georgia or any other Southern state in 1964. Two months ago, Sen. Russell told a group of visiting Georgia Jaycees that the Republican nomination "isn't going to be worth much in 1964."

He said then that Sen. Goldwater and New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller could "kill each other off" in a fight for the nomination and if the two "go to the wire, Goldwater will go the way of Taft."

SINCE THAT TIME, Gov. Rockefeller's remarriage has hurt his chances and the racial situation has deepened the Kennedy unpopularity in the South and helped the Goldwater popularity.

Sen. Russell said on the television program that the public accommodations section of the President's civil rights bill is not the most objectionable feature, though he opposes it completely. He denied that removing that section would end Southern opposition.

He said the worst feature is what he called the "genocide provision"—a proposal to permit withholding of federal funds from programs and projects when racial discrimination exists in them.

The Georgia senator called it the "most vicious and un-Christian" proposal he has heard of in his 30 years in the Senate.

He said that in the South the principal victims would be Negroes, such as dependent children, the aged and the blind who receive welfare funds.

SEN. RUSSELL was asked if he had any legislative alternatives to offer to the Kennedy proposals. And he said he does not.

He said the present civil rights drive is hurting the cause of race relations by undertaking to get it all done overnight.

The senator repeated his concern about the attitude of President Kennedy and Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy toward Negro demonstrations and what he called a "general disparagement of law and order."

He said he has not threatened a filibuster against civil rights legislation. He said it will take "time and energy" to "educate the country" on the issues.

MOST DIXIE STATES SAY 'NO'

Unpledged Elector Idea Withering

By JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, July 18 (AP) — An unpledged elector movement aimed at forcing the choice of the next president by the House of Representatives appears to be withering on the political vine in Dixie.

An Asociated Press survey of 11 Southern states indicates that in only three — Mississippi, Alabama and South Carolina — does there appear to be any significant possibility that major party nominees might be denied electorial votes.

Even if the sum total of 25 electorial votes of the three states were withheld — which doesn't seem likely — the action would be effective only if the next election provided the closest electorial vote outcome since the Wilson-Hughes contest of 1916. Woodrow Wilson won the presidency by a margin of 23 electorial votes.

UNDER the Constitution, the House selects the president only if none of the candidates receives a majority of the electorial votes. If the House renders the verdict, each state delegation casts a single vote, regardless of the state's size.

Despite the closeness of the popular vote results in 1960, President Kennedy still would have been elected if the three states' votes had been lopped off this 303 electorial vote total. Election in 1964 will require a minimum of 270 electorial votes.

Govs. Ross Barnett of Mississippi and George Wallace of Alabama have been promoting the independent elector scheme as a means of defeating Kennedy's bid for re-election.

But Democratic politicians outside their states — and some within Wallace's — are wary of bolting. Republicans, hopeful of collecting some Southern electorial votes for their party's nominee, don't like the move.

Here is how the situation shapes up on a state by state basis:

GEORGIA — Gov. Sanders, a moderate on the racial issue, controls the state party machinery and the legislature. He said he will have no part of any independent elector or third party movement.

Segregationists are trying to promote an independent elector ticket, but Democratic State Chairman J. B. Fuqua of Augusta says, "I don't think it has a chance."

Agreeing, Republican State Chairman James W. Dorsey of Atlanta said: "I think the voters of Georgia will make a clear cut choice between the Republican and Democratic nominees."

Georgia Democrats have never bolted their party ticket. The state's House members would be expected to support the Democratic nominee if the presidential election were thrown into the House.

Gov. Sanders Gov. Barnett Gov. Wallace Sen. John Sparkman Sen. Lister Hill Sen. Goldwater

MISSISSIPPI — The unpledged elector movement, supported by Barnett, appears likely to be successful if the Republicans choose a liberal candidate.

Under state law, party conventions could put both loyalist and uninstructed delegations on the ballot of a primary to be held after the national conventions nominate their presidential candidates. The delegation which lost would be dropped from the general election ballot. It could petition its way onto that ballot, but could not use the party emblem.

Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson says the system "means the party label will be denied to those who don't represent the thinking of a majority of Mississipplans."

Rubel Phillips, Republican candidate for governor, said the plan "may be useful."

Mississippi gave its nine electoral votes to the States Rights ticket headed by Strom Thurmond in 1948. Its eight unpledged electors voted for Sen. Harry F. Byrd, D-Va., in 1960.

ALABAMA—Wallae has urged Dixie Democrats to join in a movement he says can keep either major party candidate from getting a majority of electoral votes. He said this would "create compounded confusions from which we can gain some meaningful concessions."

Despite Wallace's stand, Sens. John Sparkman and Lister Hill are expected to support the national Democratic ticket, as are several House members.

Alabama gave its 11 electoral votes to the 1948 States Rights ticket. It split its 1960 vote, giving Kennedey 5 and Sen. Harry F. Byrd, D-Va., 6.

SOUTH CAROLINA — E. P. (Ted) Riley, Democratic state chairman, thinks it's too early to predict whether there will be an unpledged elector movement in the state.

"It is no good to have independent electors unless they do some good," he said.

J. Drake Edens, Republican state chairman, said history has proved that unpledged electors may "offer some attraction in theory" but never work out. He said the way for voters to express their opposition to Kennedy administration policies is to back Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.

When Thurmond was governor and headed the States Rights ticket in 1948, he got 39 electoral votes, including South Carolina's eight. The state went to Kennedy in 1960.

NORTH CAROLINA—Bert Bennett, Democratic state chairman, says the unpledged elector movement "is against North Carolina's way of doing things."

Robert Gavin, who recently resigned as Republican state chairman, observed: "I think the fight in 1964 is going to be between the regular Republican and the regular Democratic party."

North Carolina always has voted with either the Democratic or Republican parties and has not given significant support to third party efforts.

VIRGINIA—A bill for unpledged electors which died in the state legislature in 1962 may be offered again next year. But State Sen. Thomas H. Blanton, Democratic party chairman, said "It won't amount to much — it never amounted to anything in the past."

Walter R. Gambill, vice chairman of the State Republican party commented: "The next president of the United States will be elected by the Democrats or by the Republican party. We can't afford to be playing games with any unpledged elector movement. It's a lot of waste motion."

Virginia has not gone Democratic in a presidential election since 1948. In 1952 the presence on the ballot of a States Rights' candidate, T. Coleman Andrews, had no effect on the result.

TENNESSEE — Having voted Republican in the last three elections, Tennessee no longer is considered part of the once solid South. Any movement for unpledged electors would have to come at next spring's party convention but there are no signs of any campaign for it.

H. S. Walters, Democratic state chairman, says he doesn't think there will be any such movement.

"There are a few people who are upset about the civil rights problem but by next year there won't be any feeling about it by the time the election comes around," he said.

A Dixiecrat movement failed in the state in 1948, although one elector cast his ballot for Thurmond.

ARKANSAS—Any successful independent elector movement would have to have the support of Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who gave reluctant backing to Kennedy in 1960.

Tom Harper, Democratic state chairman, and William Spicer, Republican chairman, say nobody has expressed an interest in such a movement.

Arkansas stayed with President Harry S. Truman against the Dixiecrat movement in 1948. A States Rights ticket of electors got only about 10 per cent of the vote then.

LOUISIANA—The state Senate killed a bill passed by the House to provide for unpledged electors. Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., and Rep. Gillis Long, D-La., were outspokenly against the measure.

Segregationists now are taking their fight to the state Democratic Central Committee. Members of the new committee will be chosen in a Dec. 7 primary.

In 1948, Louisiana gave its 10 electoral votes to Thurmond. The central committee beat down 51 to 49 a move to put unpledged electors on the ballot in 1960.

FLORIDA—An unpledged electors bill died in the 1963 state legislative session. Leaders do not expect it to be revived.

Warren Goodrich, chairman of the state Democratic Executive Committee, said he opposed the bill because if pledged electors were chosen in a spring primary they would be committed to an unknown candidate. If unpledged electors were chosen, he said the voters would be virtually disenfranchised.

State Rep. Charles Holley of St. Petersburg, a republican with gubernatorial aspirations, said the proposal would have hurt GOP chances since the Republican presidential candidate's name would not be on the ballot.

TEXAS—No indication anywhere in the state of any movement aimed at choosing unpledged electors.

SENATOR JACOB K. JAVITS (R-N.Y.) SB

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
TUESDAY, JULY 23, 1963

STATEMENT BY SENATOR JACOB K. JAVITS

It is most astonishing to read of the action by the Governors' Conference in Miami Beach in voting yesterday to prevent the Governors from taking a formal stand on any issue, including civil rights. There is no question that civil rights is the major domestic issue before the nation today. From the moment the President decided to request urgent civil rights legislation, this Administration has wisely attempted to summon the nation's leaders behind this great moral and constitutional issue. I believe the President deserves great credit for that initiative; he has met with mayors, Negro leaders, union leaders, business leaders, civic leaders, and others to seek their support and to urge them to exert their influence on behalf of this great cause. In the face of this need for every public official to stand up and be counted, it is incredible that the Democratic delegation to the Governor's Conference should almost unanimously (with one distinguished exception, Governor Egan of Alaska) vote to gag the conference on civil rights. It is an ignoble display of timidity; a shocking abdication of responsibility by the top officials of our state governments. It is no answer for those who were guilty of this feeble leadership to claim that the Republicans -- who were unanimous on this issue -- were "playing politics." The nation cannot accept that lame excuse for the pitiable reluctance of the Democratic Governors to face the No. 1 domestic issue facing the people of our country. It confounds all who want to strengthen the Federal system by strengthening the role of the States when Governors reject their responsibility as did the Democratic Governors. Politics is the science and art of government, and the Democratic Governors have sadly demonstrated at Miami a new low in statesmanship on civil rights.

. . . So Long As

There is a Nation

Pol. South

Nothing has more profoundly and painfully revealed the farce of states rights claims than the flight from state responsibility by most of the nation's governors in their recent convention at Miami Beach. Alabama's Governor Wallace and Mississippi's Barnett provided a small side show of comic relief, but they did not themselves appear to be quite convinced by what they were saying. Arkansas' Faubus knew when to be quiet. He was too far away from home to cut any states rights hay.

The truth about states rights, Southern style, is very much like the facts about Southern style cooking. A great deal depends on the cook. And like most regional cooking, it has about disappeared.

Thomas Bragg, one-time attorney general of the Confederate States and a crony of Jefferson Davis, once said of the states rights provision in the Constitution of the Confederacy that it was a hellish covenant.

Federal Excursions

Early in 1862 Federal excursions along the exposed Atlantic coast had so alarmed the governors of coastal states, they were demanding of President Davis that weapons and men sent to the Virginia theater of war be immediately returned to the several states. Davis said to Bragg that this was a certain recipe for disaster. Bragg wrote in his diary: "The President was much irritated and declared that if such was to be the course of the states toward the government, the carrying on of the war was an impossibility . . ."

There is nothing in the history of the South to recommend the old theory of state sovereignty. Every historian of repute who has written of the Civil War has emphasized the immense harm done by the sovereignty of the states

Early in 1862 Federal excursions along the exposed Atlantic coast had so alarmed the governors of coastal states, they were demanding of President Davis that weapons and men sent to the Virginia theater of war be immediately returned to the several states. Davis said to Bragg that this was a certain recipe for disaster. Bragg wrote in his diary: "The President was much irritated and declared that if such was to be the course of the states toward the government, the carrying on of the war was an impossibility . . ."

There is nothing in the history of the South to recommend the old theory of state sovereignty. Every historian of repute who has written of the Civil War has emphasized the immense harm done by the sovereignty of the states in the Confederacy. Robert Henry, a Tennessean and a Southern partisan, wrote in his first-rate "Story of the Confederacy": "From the beginning, in the theory of the sovereignty of the states, the new government had carried within itself the seeds of destruction and now (1864), with disasters crowding, disintegration began. . . ."

Increasing Liability

From the first year of the Civil War the clash between the government at Richmond and the states was an increasing liability. With Sherman in and about Atlanta, Hood was 30 miles south of the city. He besought President Davis for reserves. Davis could not provide them because the states refused.

At that moment of despair, Georgia's Governor Brown, exercising his state sovereignty, actually withdrew the Georgia state troops from Hood's command and granted blanket furloughs for them to return to their homes. The Confederate government was never able to recall those state troops.

Earlier in the war the central government was obliged to pass a draft law to create an army. State governors attacked this as "subversive of state sovereignty." All through the war the Davis government was opposed by state exemption laws, by often frenzied resistance to the passage by Congress of acts declaring a public emergency, and by many petty, vicious and vindictive acts by the sovereign states.

This stain of pettiness has marked the claims of states rights ever since the Civil War settled the issue. From time to time state governors have cried states rights in attempting to deny necessary central authority invoked on behalf of the general welfare.

The 55 men who met at Philadelphia in the spring of 1787 and drafted the federal Constitution were, in literal fact, giving birth to a single commonwealth or nation. This nation replaced the old Confederation of the 13 former colonies, which was founded on a system of state sovereignty. Historial vestigial remains of state sovereignty are to be seen in the states today. But the states are not sovereign — and there could be no United States if they were. So long as there is a nation, the central authority must protect the rights of all citizens and must uphold the Constitution.

Governors Resist Wallace Demands

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va.—The Southern Governors Conference showed surprising resistance Sunday night to Alabama Gov. George Wallace's demand that it attack President John F. Kennedy and to his call for an investigation of "Communists" in the civil rights movement.

Chairman Orval Faubus of Arkansas said "I'm not interested in" Wallace's resolution and immediately began sounding out other governors about a resolutions committee Faubus must appoint Monday.

Faubus labeled the Alabama anticivil rights resolution "secondary in importance." He said the conference should concern itself with other matters.

SHUNTING TALKED

Several other governors, obviously seeking anonymity in moving to block Wallace's resolution, talked informally about a committee which never would report it to the conference floor.

It was learned on high authority that some of them had been sounded out about the possibility of serving on a committee which would keep the issues out of the conference.

And Chairman Faubus said he believed the conference would be better off with a rule requiring unanimous approval for any resolution that passed. Resolutions now can be passed with a 3-4 vote.

Wallace remained undaunted, however. He made no move to withdraw his motion and counted on Deep South sentiment to bring his proposal to a full debate.

ADMITS HE SHIFTED

Wallace himself admitted his resolutions contrast with his vote at the National Governors Conference last month against any resolutions, but added:

"I'm consistent. I do what I want to do in Miami and I do what I want to do in West Virginia . . . I didn't want to see any civil rights resolutions passed in Miami . . .

"I do feel that any resolution that could disendorse that program (Kennedy's civil rights bills) would be good," Wallace said.

As he outlined the resolution it would ask the President and Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy to repudiate their statements calling the Negro march "in the great tradition."

CHARGES REDS LEAD

Wallace said they also should begin an investigation of Communists who, he said, are leading the march.

The fiery Alabaman specifically charged that Communists now "seek to lead the march on Washington" and that many of the Negro movement's leaders are Communists. He said the Rev. Martin Luther King "belongs to more Communist-front organizations than anyone else in America."

As he talked at a press conference, Wallace kept referring to an issue of the Augusta Courier, the red-headline weekly published by Roy V. Harris in Georgia.

Wallace and Faubus shared the spotlight as the governors gathered for their 29th annual regional conference. But they frequently took different courses.

GOLDWATER LEADING?

Faubus said, "polls I have access to" show that conservative Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) is "10 to 15 per cent" ahead of any other candidate for president in Arkansas.

But Wallace said Alabama will go neither Democratic nor Republican but, instead, will select independent electors. He allowed that Georgia also might have independents.

"There is a good chance they will have enough signatures to have unpledged electors," Wallace said of Georgia.

That would be the only way to keep Georgia presidential electors unpledged, since there is no provision for them in the existing law.

"I've never seen a state as against the administration as Alabama is against the present administration," Wallace said.

He admitted he might be a candidate for the presidential nomination in these states: "any of them that have primaries."

"A Southerner running in the primaries in some of the other states might shak. you up a little," Wallace told his questioners.

The governor said he has received "over a quarter of a million pieces of mail" from voters around the country since he said a month ago some Southerner might enter the primaries.

But Faubus expressed no interest in a third-party movement

Wallace Fires Civil Rights Blast As Southern Governors Assemble

By J. Richard Toren

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Aug. 18 (UPI)—Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace fired the first salvo today in his battle to get Southern Governors on record against civil rights demonstrations and legislation.

The Governor sharply criticized the civil rights march planned in Washington next week at a news conference on the opening day of the Southern Governors' Conference here today and added:

"I hope this Conference takes action to disapprove this kind of mob violence."

But Wallace apparently will receive little support from his colleagues, most of them facing civil rights problems in their home states. They have traditionally avoided the touchy subject in their fun-and-talk sessions together.

Civil rights is not on the agenda and probably would have remained the subject only of private discussions had Wallace not decided to submit resolutions on the subject.

Wallace plans to introduce four proposals condemning the Aug. 28 civil rights march, alleged Communist participation in racial demonstrations, the Kennedy Administration's civil rights proposals and the use of Federal troops to enforce school desegregation.

If his proposals are not acted on by the Governors, Wallace said he would then "take what action is needed to awaken the American people." He did not elaborate.

Fifteen Governors from Dixie and border states were on hand or near arrival for the 29th annual meeting at the Greenbrier resort here.

Wallace today criticized President Kennedy for endorsing the Washington protest march as being in "the American tradition" and said a person with this view is "either uninformed, misinformed or deliberately misleading the American people."

He said the march amounted to "mob violence" and has required alerting of "thousands of troops and policemen."

Conference Chairman Orval Faubus of Arkansas will appoint a resolutions committee to consider Wallace's proposals and any offered by other Governors.

Conference rules require a two-thirds vote of all Governors to force resolutions to the floor and a three-fourths vote is required to pass them.

The first work of the Conference begins Monday with reports on work of the Southern Regional Education Board and other regional organizations. The chairman's annual address also will be made Monday.

Sanders Helps Stop Wallace on Rights

Constitution Political Editor

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va.—Gov. Carl Sanders Monday helped block an Alabama move against civil rights at the Southern Governors' Conference.

Sanders threw his support against Gov. George Wallace's resolutions on civil rights by saying he voted against such resolutions at the National Governor's Conference and will follow the same course here.

"I will neither be a party to, nor participate in, any effort to override the chairman or the resolutions committee," Sanders said after Chairman Orval Faubus of Arkansas asked that the resolutions be dropped.

But Wallace said he still intends to present them to the resolutions committee when Faubus appoints it. The resolutions call for censure of the Kennedy administration for its handling of civil rights programs and for its "encouragement" of the proposed Negro march on Washington next week.

But Sanders was one of a group of governors who declared, "I did not come up here to politick."

The group appeared to have sufficient strength to beat back Wallace's effort to have the resolution brought to the floor. The Georgia governor also blazed away at Wallace's attempt to whip up independent elector sentiment at the conference of 15 Southern and border state governors.

"A vote for independent electors would be like taking a one-way trip to the moon with no way to get back," Sanders said. "It would serve no useful purpose, other than a protest and, contrary to what the governor of Alabama seems to think, I don't believe the people of Georgia have any intention of engaging in an exercise in futility with him or anyone else."

Wallace predicted Sunday that Georgia might have enough petitions from registered voters to join the independent electors movement.

Faubus moved for peace this time.

"It is my hope," he said as Wallace faced him across the conference table, "that controversial issues can be kept out of this conference."

Both Wallace and Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi said they will push for passage of the resolutions.

Meanwhile, a group of pickets marched on the posh old Greenbrier Hotel to denounce Wallace and demand more advanced civil-rights programs in the South.

Dixie Governors' Conference Hotel Picketed by 100 Rights Demonstrators

DCI-G South

By Herb Little

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Aug. 19 (AP)—About 100 civil rights demonstrators sang and marched today outside the luxury resort where 16 Southern governors are holding their 29th annual meeting.

They won a promise of an executive order banning racial discrimination from W. Virginia Gov. W. W. Barron, who told them at the gate that he supports the Kennedy Administration's civil rights bill.

The pickets, almost all Negroes, came to protest the segregation policies avowed by a majority of governors in the conference.

privately with demonstration leaders in his resort suite, said the only thing still to be decided in his order is how far it could go under West Virginia's constitution and laws.

The demonstrators arrived to parade shortly after Mississippi's Gov. Ross Barnett proposed at a news conference that the Nation's negro population be redistributed in a 90-10 per cent White-Negro ratio in all states.

The demonstrators did not know about this development.

They did know, however, of Alabama Gov. George Wallace's announced intention to try to get the confeernce to pass several pro-segregation resolutions, including one to condemn the Aug. 28 civil rights march in Washington.

The demonstrators drove here from the state capital, Charleston, about 120 miles away, picking up recruits along the way. They marched two by two, singing and carrying placards, to the entrance to the wooded grounds of the Greenbrier.

A hotel security guard told leaders the party could not march onto the grounds to demonstrate. Later, however, they were permitted in, but without singing and without singing and without placards.

Th demonstrators were orderly and well-dressed. They scruptulously obeyed orders to keep off th grass. Most were Negroes in their late teens and early 20s.

Barnett, whose Mississippi has a 42 per cent Negro population, told newsmen, "This race problem is a problem of numbers." He said relocation is a "workable plan."

Barnett said each state should voluntarily work out relocation of Negroes "to equalize the population."

His proposal, he said, could be implemented through the Department of Labor in much the same way that Cuban refugees are being relocated.

Barnett held his first nws conference only hours after Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas had appealed for the Southern Governors Conference to skirt controversial issues.

man, told the opening session, "We must not allow the conference to be divertd from its basic purpos . . . "If we engage in debate over controversial issues, we can cause division and possibly destroy the basic usefulness and purpose of the conference."

Kennedy at Parley

By WILLIAM O. SMITH
Atlanta Journal Staff Writer

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Aug. 21—Govs. George Wallace and Ross Barnett Wednesday lambasted President Kennedy again for his civil rights program just before the Southern Governors Conference ended, but the conference did not take any official stand.

Alabama's Gov. Wallace kept his promise and filed four resolutions—one condemning the civil rights bill of President Kennedy, and one asking the President to repudiate the Aug. 28 march on Washington by Negroes.

The Alabama governor waited until the last possible minute of the three-day meet before he presented the resolution and declared the people in his state are not going to tolerate "further illegal usurpation of power by the federal government . . ."

"In my judgement, people all over this country are fed up with a federal government which intrudes to the point of regulating their lives each and every day," he said.

Gov. Barnett, Mississippi segregationist, urged Americans not to sit by silently and let the central government establish a dictatorship."

THE RESOLUTIONS were not filed by Gov. Wallace for action by the conference and were simply made a part of the record.

Thus the conference of 15 governors ended without an explosive civil rights battle as Gov. Wallace had hoped would happen with his resolutions.

A possible conference battle over civil rights was stopped when the governors, with a surprise second by Gov. Wallace, adopted a rule Tuesday saying unanimous approval must be given all resolutions.

Gov. Farris Bryant of Florida was elected chairman to succeed Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus.

Delaware Gov. Elbert Carvel was elected vice chairman.

Gov. Barnett officially invited the conference to meet in Biloxi, Miss., next June, but a committee was appointed to make a decision.

Georgia Gov. Carl Sanders told newsmen he wants the conference at Sea Island in 1965, but would be receptive to a meeting there next year if the conference desires. He did not make a formal bid.

THE ONLY RESOLUTION presented by Gov. Sanders sailed through unanimously and endorses U.S. action imposing retaliatory tariffs on the European Common Market countries for their levies and tariffs on poultry from this country.

Mr. Sanders said in his resolution export of poultry from the United States to the Common Market countries have decreased from $50 million to $15 million.

This has caused an adverse effect in the poultry industry and caused extensive damage to the entire economy of the Southern states, he said. Georgia is one of the nation's leading poultry producers.

Gov. Wallace Wednesday attacked President Kennedy for what he called "misuse" of the National Guard in federalizing to enforce integration efforts.

Pointing out federalization of the guard has occurred in Alabama, Arkansas, and Mississippi, he said: "I resent it. I don't like it. My people don't like it. And the morale in our guard is low."

He said the President acted without statutory authority and cautioned this continued flagrant disregard" of the Constitution "could lead to a military dictatorship . . ."

HIS STATEMENTS came after the president of the National Guard Association of the U.S. criticized the federal government for not supporting the guard so it can maintain its readiness peak.

Maj. Gen. William H. Harrison Jr. said this is a "paradox" because the federal government wants the guard at a high level of combat readiness.

Arizona Gov. Paul Fannin told the conference that federal intervention in the field of regulated highway traffic is not needed.

Such regulations, "even though modest in the beginning, could lead to the establishment of a federal police force and the subsequent threat of a police state."

He said two bills are now pending in Congress which "are potential stepping stones in this dangerous direction."

Earlier, a flurry of controversy struck the conference when word got out that Dr. Edward Teller, known as the "father of the hydrogen bomb" would address the conference Wednesday morning.

Not long afterwards, Gov. Faubus announced that he had sent Dr. Teller word that he could not speak after all.

Dr. Teller, who attacked the limited test ban treaty in Washington Tuesday, stirred quite a controversy among the governors before Chairman Orval Faubus of Arkansas ruled he couldn't speak.

West Virginia Gov. William Wallace Barron said he protested because he feels President Kennedy should have a spokesman here to defend the treaty if Dr. Teller is allowed to attack it.

North Carolina Gov. Terry Sanford said he would demand rebuttal time.

Gov. Faubus told newsmen Wednesday he personally was not opposed to Dr. Teller addressing the governors, but felt that the schedule Wednesday was too tight to allow a mass of new speakers.

THE CONTROVERSY erupted during the state dinner here Tuesday night and it was after midnight when Gov. Faubus sent word to Dr. Teller in Washington that he would not be welcome.

The Arkansas governor told newsmen that insofar as he knows, Dr. Teller had not actually been invited to speak here by any of the 17 Southern governors.

He explained that spokesmen for the Southern Nuclear Energy Board, which is operated by the conference, approached him Monday about allowing Dr. Teller to speak and he told them that the conference would have to make the final decision.

But when the protests started rolling in after word got out during the state dinner that Dr. Teller would speak, Gov. Faubus ruled that the nuclear physicist would not be allowed to speak.

At the state dinner Tuesday night Secretary of the Army Cyrus R. Vance told the Southern governors that the United States is maintaining its lead in nuclear power and that the Soviets "could not hope for victory" even if "they struck first and without warning."

THIS LEAD is being maintained with the help of allies even though the Soviets "are moving steadily toward a more powerful strategic nuclear force . . ."

He said the Soviets could not win "even in the technical sense, and they would lay themselves open to vast devastation."

A nuclear war would produce great damage to U.S. and allied populations and economies and "it is a matter of the greatest importance that such a nuclear war be prevented," Mr. Vance said.

"Fortunately, the Russians seem to realize this and we have reason to believe that they will avoid actions that would bring on such a catastrophe," he added.

The Army secretary branded as a "myth" the belief that the Communists have an overwhelming superiority in ground forces.

HE POINTED OUT that NATO has more men under arms and greater over-all strength than the Russians, both worldwide and in Europe.

"Worldwide, NATO has 5.8 million men under arms to the Warsaw Pact total of 4.3 million," he said. "NATO ground forces, of which 2.2 million are in Europe, total 3.2 million, as against the Soviet army's active unit total of 2 million."

Governors Save Face, Skirt Rights

By REG MURPHY

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va.—The Southern Governors Conference pushed aside the civil rights fight Tuesday after allowing all participants to save face.

It agreed to change the rules to require a unanimous vote on all resolutions, which meant the anti-civil rights motions of Gov. George Wallace will be sidetracked.

Governors seek study of reported waste in Vo-Ag training, Page 13. Political analysis, Page 17.

But in the process, the Alabama governor seconded the motion for the unanimity rule and began preparing a speech for the Wednesday business section to take the place of his resolutions.

attacked the Kennedy administration's civil rights program, the Negro march on Washington, al leged communism in the Negro movement and other things.

Barnett also was given the opportunity of presenting a Mississippi lawyer who told the conference the civil rights bills in Congress would destroy "every check against federal power."

The lawyer, former American Bar Association president John Satterfield of Yazoo City, said the bills are "10 per cent so-called civil rights and 90 per cent extension of federal power . . . They would extend into private lives full federal control."

Later, Sanford of North Carolina said he would "guarantee" no civil rights resolution will escape the resolutions committee of which Barnett is a member.

And Sanford added this comment to Barnett's plan to relocate Negroes all over the country by a federal agency: "My reaction was ho-hum. Leave off the exclamation mark."

Sanford in those words also summed up much of the other activity at the conference, where the governors took time out Tuesday afternoon for a golf tournament before gathering again to hear Secretary of the Army Cyrus Vance.

Opponent of Test Ban Treaty Believed Victim of Opposing Political Forces at Parley

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Aug. 21—Southern Governors almost heard an unscheduled speech today by Dr. Edward Teller, a foe of the treaty to limit nuclear testing.

However, when word of the invitation to the physicist got around last night, a backstage political uproar developed and Dr. Teller's midnight ride to alert the Governors was called off fast.

The physicist was presumably the innocent victim of opposing political forces here. His speech was scheduled and called off in a matter of hours, but there was a night of comic-opera confusion as his disappointed sponsors tried to find him and turn him back.

Dr. Teller was to take an overnight train from Washington, where he had testified against the treaty. He was to be flown back to Washington after an early morning speech so that he could address a National Press Club luncheon.

Dr. Teller never arrived. When a decision to ban his speech was reached about 11 P. M., intercepts for the physicist were ordered at Washington and at three or four rail stops along the way. One man drove 35 miles to cut him off at Clifton Forge. Dr. Teller was not aboard the train.

in Washington, he pleaded fatigue and said he did not know when or where he got off "because it was dark." He would not discuss how he managed to get back to Washington.

The Teller speech sponsors pleaded not guilty to political intrigue, but Democratic party loyalists thought otherwise. They felt that the rules of the Southern Governors Conference had already been violated when Gov. Ross R. Barnett of Mississippi was allowed to present a Yazoo City constituent for an unscheduled speech yesterday.

The speaker, John Satterfield, past president of the American Bar Association, used the occasion to indict President Kennedy's civil rights program.

It was the Satterfield speech that gave two men the idea to import Dr. Teller. Frank Norton, chairman of the Southern Interstate Nuclear Board, and Dr. J. R. Maxfield Jr., the medical member of the board, both Texans, proposed the idea.

The nuclear board is a creation of the Southern Governors Conference, dedicated to regional development of peaceful nuclear forces. As explained by Robert H. Solomons, executive director of the board, after the uproar had subsided, Mr. Norton's purpose was to have Dr. Teller explain the technical aspects of the treaty so that the Governors could understand its possible economic effect on the South. Some Governors, however, saw an attempt to embarrass President Kennedy.

Mr. Norton and Dr. Maxfield went to Gov. Henry Bellmon of Oklahoma, the only Republican in the 17 states' conference, for approval to invite Dr. Teller. Mr. Bellmon carried the proposition to Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas, the conference chairman.

Mr. Faubus, who has taken a relaxed view of his chairmanship duties, thought it would be all right to have Dr. Teller, especially in view of the Satterfield precedent.

Mr. Norton then invited Dr. Teller. As the news was circulated among the Governors, who were still attending dinner, Gov. John B. Connally of Texas, Gov. Terry Sanford of North Carolina and others protested. Mr. Faubus quickly exercised a veto. Then came the efforts to head off Dr. Teller.

The conference closed today with a few parting shots at the Kennedy civil rights policies by Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama and Mr. Barnett. Mr. Wallace did not introduce his four resolutions on civil rights in view of the unanimous consent rule for adoption. Instead, he offered for the record a statement condensing the substance of them.

The conference chose Gov. Farris Bryant of Florida its new chairman, and Gov. Elbert N. Carvel of Delaware vice chairman.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21 (UPI) — Dr. Edward Teller jousted with television crews at the National Press Club today.

Dr. Teller stepped to the club podium to make a speech and demanded that the glaring spotlights used by the television camera crews be "completely turned off."

The cameramen did, but a few moments later they turned the lights on again, aiming them at the ceiling in the hope of getting enough reflected illumination for their cameras.

No sooner were they turned on than Dr. Teller stopped speaking and said:

"Turn off all the lights or I will not speak another word."

The television crews again bowed to the physicist's demand.

Asked why he objected to the lights, Dr. Teller said:

"I would rather see than be seen, and also they give me a headache, especially after a sleepless night."

The loss of sleep resulted from an incompleted trip to address the Southern Governors Conference at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. After the invitation was canceled, he left the train and returned here.

Rule Change By Governors Averts Rift

Pol.-Southern

By Herb Little

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Aug. 20 (AP) Southern Governors squelched the threat of a blowup over civil rights at their annual conference by deciding today to require unanimous votes to pass resolutions.

This erased any chance—and there was little to begin with—that the conference would adopt four resolutions proposed by Alabama's civil rights policies of the Kennedy administration.

The action didn't mean that all the Dixie governors who went along with the rule change lack sympathy, in varying degrees, with Wallace's views.

What the move did show was determination by the conference not to be ripped apart in a civil rights brawl to the detriment of the 17-state group's established pattern of devoting itself to noncontroversial subjects on which the states can work together.

Twelve governors were present when approval was given without discussion or dissent to a motion by Gov. Donald S. Russell of South Carolina to require unanimity for resolutions. Rules previously required a three-fourths majority.

Wallace pulled a surprise by joining the harmony move.

"I think the suggestion of the Governor of South Carolina is excellent," Wallace said. Then he seconded Russell's motion.

Wallace still planned to go through the motion of offering his resolutions to the conference Wednesday and making a speech about them. But he said he would not make a fight for their adoption.

He conceded slim chance for the resolutions even before the rule change because of the presence of governors from such border states as Kentucky, Oklahoma, West Virginia and Delaware plus several comparatively moderate governors from farther south.

Some of the other Governors had done missionary work for Wallace to avert the threatened fight.

But Wallace said later he favored the unanimity rule. He said it would give any conference state a veto over objectionable resolutions.

Rockefeller Says G.O.P. Choice Can Win in the South Next Year

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

BAL HARBOUR, Fla., Nov. 13—Governor Rockefeller said today that he could carry some Southern states against President Kennedy next year.

The Governor said, "Whoever is nominated by the Republican party on a platform dedicated to the realities of present American life will get a strong vote in the South."

Mr. Rockefeller, who was making his first political excursion into the South as an active Presidential candidate, made this assessment in a question period following a luncheon speech to the annual convention of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association at the Americana Hotel here.

Observers at a Southern Republican Conference in Charleston, S. C., last week concluded that Mr. Rockefeller enjoyed very little party support in the South, most of which appeared strong for Senator Barry Goldwater.

Mr. Rockefeller made no attempt today to moderate his civil rights position in recognition of his political visit to the South.

Asked About Rights

Asked if he believed that his advocacy of equal opportunity for all would alienate Southern voters, the Governor replied:

"No, I honestly don't. My position on civil rights is based on our traditional Judeo-Christian concepts, part of our American heritage, that everyone should have equal rights and equal opportunities for a share in the American dream.

"I think all of us know this is right in our hearts, although it may be difficult to achieve. I don't think that any citizen in the country disagrees in his heart that we as a nation have to achieve this goal of equality of opportunity ultimately.

"I stand for equal opportunity, as my family always has, and for taking the steps necessary to achieve it."

The luncheon audience of 500 editors and their wives applauded.

Greeted at Airport

Mr. Rockefeller was greeted at Miami International Airport by about 300 people, including a number of Florida Republican leaders and some college-age Goldwater supporters.

The Goldwater adherents had placards reading "Liberate New York and Cuba," "Majority Rights Before Civil Rights" and "More Brothers? John, Laurance, Winthrop, David?"

The protests outnumbered the pro-Rockefeller signs by about 2 to 1, and the Dade County deputy sheriff ruled no signs were allowed in the airport without a permit.

Among those greeting Mr. Rockefeller at the airport were Florida's Republican National Committeeman, Anthony Battaglia, and National Committeewoman, Mrs. Clair Williams, who is also assistant to the Republican national chairman, Representative William E. Miller of upstate New York.

Wife Not With Him

Mrs. Rockefeller did not accompany the Governor, an aide explained that she had not wanted to make the strenous trip. The Governor left New York City about 8:45 A.M. and returned in the evening.

In his speech to the editors, the Governor made a strong attack on the views of Senator Goldwater, his undeclared opponent for the nomination, without naming him.

"Can you imagine," Mr. Rockefeller asked, "the Republican party, with all its traditions presenting to the American people a candidate and a platform calling for United States withdrawal from the United Nations, granting military field commanders discretion to use nuclear weapons, cutting off all foreign aid, selling T.V.A., ending all farm price supports, leaving the protection of human rights to the states—including Alabama and Mississippi—and favoring enactment of a Federal "right to work" law and abolition of the personal income tax?

"Such a program is not either realistic in terms of our 20th-century problems, nor does it offer constructive alternatives to the failure of the Kennedy Administration at home and abroad."

A Mess? Virginia, Kentucky Suffice

Atl. Con. 11/22/63

Pol. South

By REG MURPHY
Constitution Political Editor

If you think the Georgia Legislature is a mess, look at Virginia and Kentucky for a minute.

Gov. Albertis S. Harrison is trying to save poll taxes for state and local elections in Virginia, even though they will be outlawed shortly for federal voting.

Reg Murphy

And Gov. Bert Combs in Kentucky is making his swan song in a special legislative session to raise the salaries of judges.

Even the Georgia Legislature has the good sense to raise pay in regular sessions, instead of putting the state to the extra expense of paying legislators, too.

Both the Virginia and Kentucky activities are instructive, however, on how it was in the Old South and how it can't be today.

Harrison is fighting the old fight to limit voter registration and thereby save the Byrd machine, the most dominant in the South.

Analysis and comment.

State policy has been to keep registration low. That gives the machine fewer people to control. The outcome of elections is less uncertain.

But soon the 36th state will ratify the 24th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and make poll taxes illegal in federal elections. (Georgia outlawed poll taxes in 1946.)

So Harrison has asked the Virginia gentlemen in the House and Senate to pass a new law to require a $1.50 yearly fee to vote in state and local elections.

PAY RAISES

The legislators are expected to follow his wishes promptly. After all, they want to limit their own constituencies, too.

And the Kentucky colonels are being asked to raise the pay of high court justices from $12,000 to $22,000. Titles are grand in Blue Grass country, but green money is better.

Curiously, the Kentucky judges already have commissioners who write opinions but have no voice in deciding the cases. Combs wants to raise their pay from $11,500 to $20,000.

TARNISHED IMAGE?

The Georgia Legislature already has raised high court justices to $22,500—and in regular session.

Some moneyed Republicans suggested to Combs the pay matter was not urgent enough for a special session. But he shrugged them off as being too wealthy to know.

This, then, is what the Old Confederacy has come to—poll taxes for the voters and extra sessions to pay the judges. It almost tarnishes the image, doesn't it?

South Will Support Johnson In 1964, Sanders Forecasts

Pol. South

AUGUSTA (AP)—Gov. Carl E. Sanders said Thursday he believes the South will support President Lyndon B. Johnson if the Texan becomes the Democratic nominee next year.

"Since he is a Southerner, I feel his appeal would be strong in the South," said Sanders after returning from Washington, where he sat in the executive gallery of the House during Johnson's speech to Congress.

Sanders talked about his trip to Washington as he spent a quiet Thanksgiving at home with his family. He flew to Augusta Wednesday night. He will return to Atlanta Friday.

The governor reiterated that he accepted Johnson's invitation to the congressional speech as a gesture of friendship and moral support for the new President, who took over after the tragic death of John F. Kennedy.

"I thought it was an honor and that I did the right thing in accepting," Sanders said. "It was a very fine gesture on the part of the President."

Sanders was reluctant to talk politics and repeated that his Washington trip sprang from a personal relationship with Johnson.

"I've known Lyndon Johnson a long time," he said. "He apparently thinks highly of me and the feeling is mutual."

"I've maintained a consistent position in the Democratic Party and it is reasonable and logical that the President would ask me, as a Southerner, to come up to Washington."

Sanders said he wasn't fishing for a presidential appointment, that he is interested in being governor of Georgia. However, he left no doubt he would be working in Johnson's behalf if Johnson is the nominee.

At the 1960 Democratic convention, Georgia's delegation stayed with Johnson in his fight to win the presidential nomination.

South Would Go to Johnson In Vote Now, Talmadge Says

Pol. South

By TED LIPPMAN
Constitution Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President Lyndon B. Johnson would carry Georgia "by a very substantial majority" and would carry "the overwhelming majority of the Southern states" if the presidential election were held now, Sen. Herman Talmadge said Sunday.

He said Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., is not as strong in the South now as he was prior to the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

The Georgia senator made those statements during an interview on a local television program.

On another matter, Sen. Talmadge said he thought race relations in the South are improving. He had been asked about the civil rights bill before Congress. He outlined his opposition to several features of the proposed bill. Then, in answer to a question about "what we can do to improve good will among men," he said:

Georgia Republicans see Goldwater slipping. Story on Page 6. Labor leaders say Johnson running. Story on Page 16.

"I think we're making tremendous strides in that field. The attitudes and mores of people are changing to a great degree throughout the country. They're beginning to recognize individuals now with reference to individual worth and not considering them as groups or classes and I think that is as it should be.

"If we'd leave the situation alone and promote more human relations on the local level, I think it would solve itself much sooner than many people think. But if we have conflicts and continued police-state laws, I think

Talmadge: Johnson Could Win

it'll merely aggravate the situation rather than solve it."

A few seconds later, Sen. Talmadge seemed to be urging localities to settle their racial differences. In response to a question about the future of segregation in the South, he said:

". . . We know that regardless of what the attitude of the people may be in any area of our country, when the full power of and might of the federal government is brought to bear, the local people cannot withstand it.

"And that is the reason I think local people should get together and consider their relations with their fellowman and solve it on the local level, rather than have oppressive, coercive legislation that would destroy really the freedom of all of our people in the process."

Public Law 87-27
87th Congress, S. 1
May 1, 1961

AN ACT

To establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically distressed areas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Area Redevelopment Act". Area Redevelopment Act.

DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The Congress declares that the maintenance of the national economy at a high level is vital to the best interests of the United States, but that some of our communities are suffering substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment; that such unemployment and underemployment cause hardship to many individuals and their families and detract from the national welfare by wasting vital human resources; that to overcome this problem the Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, should help areas of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment to take effective steps in planning and financing their economic redevelopment; that Federal assistance to communities, industries, enterprises, and individuals in areas needing redevelopment should enable such areas to achieve lasting improvement and enhance the domestic prosperity by the establishment of stable and diversified local economies and improved local living conditions; and that under the provisions of this Act new employment opportunities should be created by developing and expanding new and existing facilities and resources rather than by merely transferring jobs from one area of the United States to another. 75 STAT. 47. / 75 STAT. 48.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATOR

SEC. 3. There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an Area Redevelopment Administrator in the Department of Commerce who shall receive compensation at a rate equal to that received by Assistant Secretaries of Commerce. The Administrator shall perform such duties in the execution of this Act as the Secretary of Commerce (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") may assign.

ADVISORY POLICY BOARD

SEC. 4. (a) To advise the Secretary in the performance of functions authorized by this Act, there is created an Area Redevelopment Advisory Policy Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), which shall consist of the following members, all ex officio: the Secretary as Chairman; the Secretaries of Agriculture; Health, Education, and Welfare; Interior; Labor; and Treasury; and the Administrators of the Housing and Home Finance Agency and the Small Business Administration. The Chairman may from time to time invite the participation of officials of other agencies of the executive branch interested in the functions herein authorized. Each member of the Board may designate an officer of his agency to act for him as a member of the Board with respect to any matter there considered.

(b) The Secretary shall appoint a National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment which shall consist of twenty-five members and shall be composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, State and local governments, and the public in general. National Public Advisory Committee on Area Redevelopment.

From the members appointed to such Committee the Secretary shall designate a Chairman. Such Committee, or any duly established subcommittee thereof, shall from time to time make recommendations to the Secretary relative to the carrying out of his duties under this Act. Such Committee shall hold not less than two meetings during each calendar year.

(c) The Secretary is authorized from time to time to call together and confer with any persons, including representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and government, who can assist in meeting the problems of unemployment or underemployment in the several areas designated by the Secretary as redevelopment areas.

REDEVELOPMENT AREAS

Standards.

SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary shall designate as "redevelopment areas" those areas within the United States in which he determines, upon the basis of standards generally comparable with those set forth in paragraphs (1) and (2), that there has existed substantial and persistent unemployment for an extended period of time. There shall be included among the areas so designated any area—

75 STAT. 48.
75 STAT. 49.

(1) where the Secretary of Labor finds that the rate of unemployment, excluding unemployment due primarily to temporary or seasonal factors, is currently 6 per centum or more and has averaged at least 6 per centum for the qualifying time periods specified in paragraph (2); and

(2) where the Secretary of Labor finds that the annual average rate of unemployment has been at least—

(A) 50 per centum above the national average for three of the preceding four calendar years, or

(B) 75 per centum above the national average for two of the preceding three calendar years, or

(C) 100 per centum above the national average for one of the preceding two calendar years.

The Secretary of Labor shall find the facts and provide the data to be used by the Secretary in making the determinations required by this subsection.

(b) The Secretary shall also designate as "redevelopment areas" those areas (including Indian reservations) within the United States which do not meet the requirements set forth in subsection (a) but which he determines are among the highest in numbers and percentages of low-income families, and in which there exists a condition of substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment. In making the designations under this subsection and before extending any financial assistance as the result of designations under this subsection, the Secretary shall, by regulation, prescribe detailed standards upon which the designations under this subsection shall be based. In the formulation of such standards the Secretary shall consider, among other relevant factors, the number of low-income farm families in the various rural areas of the United States, the proportion that such low-income families are of the total farm families of each of such areas, the relationship of the income levels of the families in each such area to the general levels of income in the United States, the extent to which "rural development" projects have previously been located in any such area under programs administered by the Department of Agriculture, the current and prospective employment opportunities in each such area, the availability of manpower in each such area for supplemental employment, the extent of migration out of the area, and the proportion of the population of each such area which has been receiving public assistance from the Federal Government or from the State or States in which such area is located or from any municipality therein. In making the designations under this subsection, the Secretary shall endeavor to distribute the projects widely among the several States, so far as is feasible and proper, in order that actual experience with this program may be had in as many States and in as many areas and under as many different circumstances as possible. In making these determinations the Secretary shall be guided, but not conclusively governed, by pertinent studies made, and information and data collected or compiled, by (1) departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, (2) State and local governments, (3) universities and land-grant colleges, and (4) private organizations. Studies.

(c) Upon the request of the Secretary, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, and such other heads of agencies as may be appropriate are authorized to conduct 75 STAT. 49. such special studies, obtain such information, and compile and furnish 75 STAT. 50. to the Secretary such data as the Secretary may deem necessary or proper to enable him to make the determinations provided for in subsection (b) of this section. The Secretary shall reimburse when appropriate, out of any funds appropriated to carry out the purposes of this Act, the foregoing officers for any expenditures incurred by them under this section.

(d) As used in this Act, the term "redevelopment area" refers to any area within the United States which has been designated by the Secretary as a redevelopment area. Definition.

LOANS AND PARTICIPATIONS

SEC. 6. (a) The Secretary is authorized to purchase evidences of indebtedness and to make loans (which for purposes of this section shall include participations in loans) to aid in financing any project within a redevelopment area for the purchase or development of land and facilities (including, in cases of demonstrated need, machinery and equipment) for industrial or commercial usage, including the construction of new buildings, the rehabilitation of abandoned or unoccupied buildings, and the alteration, conversion, or enlargement of existing buildings. Such financial assistance shall not be extended (1) for working capital, or (2) to assist establishments relocating from one area to another. The limitation set forth in clause (2) shall not be construed to prohibit assistance for the expansion of an existing business entity through the establishment of a new branch, affiliate, or subsidiary of such entity if the Secretary finds that the establishment of such branch, affiliate, or subsidiary will not result in an increase in unemployment in the area of original location or in any other area where such entity conducts business operations, unless the Secretary has reason to believe that such branch, affiliate, or subsidiary is being established with the intention of closing down the operations of the existing business entity in the area of its original location or in any other area where it conducts such operations. Limitations.

(b) Financial assistance under this section shall be on such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines, subject, however, to the following restrictions and limitations:

(1) The total amount of loans (including purchased evidences of indebtedness) outstanding at any one time under this section (A) with respect to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(a) shall not exceed $100,000,000 and (B) with respect to projects in redevelopment areas designated under section 5(b) shall not exceed $100,000,000.

(2) Such assistance shall be extended only to applicants, both private and public (including Indian tribes), which have been approved for such assistance by an agency or instrumentality of the State or political subdivision thereof in which the project to be financed is located, and which agency or instrumentality is directly concerned with problems of economic development in such State or subdivision.

(3) The project for which financial assistance is sought must be reasonably calculated to provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment within the redevelopment area wherein it is, or will be, located.

75 STAT. 50.
75 STAT. 51.

(4) No such assistance shall be extended hereunder unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise available from private lenders or other Federal agencies on reasonable terms.

(5) The Secretary shall not make any loan without a participation unless he determines that the loan cannot be made on a participation basis.

(6) No evidences of indebtedness shall be purchased and no loans shall be made unless it is determined that there is a reasonable assurance of repayment.

Maximum loan period.

(7) Subject to section 12(5) of this Act, no loan, including renewals or extension thereof, may be made hereunder for a period exceeding twenty-five years and no evidences of indebtedness maturing more than twenty-five years from date of purchase may be purchased hereunder: Provided, That the foregoing restrictions on maturities shall not apply to securities or obligations received by the Secretary as a claimant in bankruptcy or equitable reorganization or as a creditor in other proceedings attendant upon insolvency of the obligor.

(8) Loans made and evidences of indebtedness purchased under this section shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest paid by the Secretary on funds obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 9(a) of this Act, plus one-half of 1 per centum per annum to cover administrative expenses and to provide for losses on loans made and evidences of indebtedness purchased under this section.

(9) Such assistance shall not exceed 65 per centum of the aggregate cost to the applicant (excluding all other Federal aid in connection with the undertaking) of acquiring or developing land and facilities (including, in cases of demonstrated need, machinery and equipment), and of constructing, altering, converting, rehabilitating, or enlarging the building or buildings of the particular project, and shall, among others, be on the condition that—

(A) other funds are available in an amount which, together with the assistance provided hereunder, shall be sufficient to pay such aggregate cost;

(B) not less than 10 per centum of such aggregate cost be supplied by the State or any agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision thereof, or by an Indian tribe or a community or area organization which is nongovernmental in character, as equity capital or as a loan repayable only after the Federal financial assistance extended under this section has been repaid in full according to the terms thereof and, if such a loan is secured, its security shall be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing such Federal financial assistance;

(C) in extending financial assistance under this section with respect to a redevelopment area, the Secretary shall require that not less than 5 per centum of the aggregate cost of the project for which such assistance is extended shall be supplied by nongovernmental sources as equity capital or as a loan repayable only after the Federal financial assistance extended under this section has been repaid in full according to the terms thereof and, if such a loan is secured, its security shall be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing such Federal financial assistance; and

(D) to the extent the Secretary finds such action necessary to encourage financial participation in a particular project by other lenders and investors, and except as otherwise provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), any Federal financial assistance extended under this section may be repayable only after other loans made in connection with such project have been repaid in full, and the security, if any, for such Federal financial assistance may be subordinate and inferior to the lien or liens securing other loans made in connection with the same project.

(10) No such assistance shall be extended unless there shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary an overall program for the economic development of the area and a finding by the State, or any agency, instrumentality, or local political subdivision thereof, that the project for which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such program: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall authorize financial assistance for any project prohibited by laws of the State or local political subdivision in which the project would be located.

LOANS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

Conditions for loans.

SEC. 7. (a) Upon the application of any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public nonprofit organization or association representing any redevelopment area or part thereof, the Secretary is authorized to make loans to assist in financing the purchase or development of land for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities, within a redevelopment area, if he finds that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will tend to improve the opportunities, in the redevelopment area where such project is or will be located, for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities which will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in such area;

(2) the funds requested for such project are not otherwise available on reasonable terms;

(3) the amount of the loan plus the amount of other available funds for such project are adequate to insure the completion thereof;

(4) there is a reasonable expectation of repayment; and

(5) such area has an approved economic development program as provided in section 6(b)(10) and the project for which financial assistance is sought is consistent with such program.

(b) Subject to section 12(5), the maturity date of any such loan shall be not later than forty years after the date such loan is made. Any such loan shall bear interest at a rate equal to the rate of interest paid by the Secretary on funds obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in section 9(a) of this Act, plus one-quarter of 1 per centum per annum.

Limitation.

(c) The total amount of loans outstanding at any one time under this section shall not exceed $100,000,000.

(d) No financial assistance shall be extended under this section with respect to any public facility which would compete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory body determines that in the area to be served by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing facilities or through an expansion which it agrees to undertake.

GRANTS FOR PUBLIC FACILITIES

Conditions for grants.

SEC. 8. (a) Upon the application of any State, or political subdivision thereof, Indian tribe, or private or public nonprofit organization or association representing any redevelopment area or part thereof, the Secretary is authorized to make grants for land acquisition or development for public facility usage, and the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, expansion, or improvement of public facilities, within a redevelopment area, if he finds that—

(1) the project for which financial assistance is sought will tend to improve the opportunities, in the redevelopment area where such project is or will be located, for the successful establishment or expansion of industrial or commercial plants or facilities which will provide more than a temporary alleviation of unemployment or underemployment in such area;

(2) the entity requesting the grant proposes to contribute to the cost of the project for which such grant is requested in proportion to its ability so to contribute;

(3) the project for which a grant is requested will fulfill a pressing need of the area, or part thereof, in which it is, or will be, located, and there is little probability that such project can be undertaken without the assistance of a grant under this section; and

(4) the area for which a project is to be undertaken has an approved economic development program as provided in section 6(b)(10) and such project is consistent with such program.

The amount of any grant under this section for any such project shall not exceed the difference between the funds which can be practicably obtained from other sources (including a loan under section 7 of this Act) for such project, and the amount which is necessary to insure the completion thereof.

Supervision.

(b) The Secretary shall by regulation provide for the supervision of projects with respect to which grants are made under this section so as to insure that Federal funds are not wasted or dissipated.

(c) No financial assistance shall be extended under this section with respect to any public facility which would compete with an existing privately owned public utility rendering a service to the public at rates or charges subject to regulation by a State regulatory body, unless the State regulatory body determines that in the area to be served by the public facility for which the financial assistance is to be extended there is a need for an increase in such service (taking into consideration reasonably foreseeable future needs) which the existing public utility is not able to meet through its existing facilities or through an expansion which it agrees to undertake.

Appropriation.

(d) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $75,000,000 for the purpose of making grants under this section.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT FUND

SEC. 9. (a) To obtain funds for the purpose of extending financial assistance under sections 6 and 7, the Secretary may, with the approval of the President, issue and have outstanding at any one time notes and obligations for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury in an amount not to exceed $300,000,000. Such notes or other obligations shall be in such forms and denominations, have such maturities, and be subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Any such notes or other obligations which are issued by the Secretary to raise funds for financial assistance under section 6 shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but such rate shall not be greater than the current average yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. Any such notes or other obligations which are issued by the Secretary to raise funds for financial assistance under section 7 shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury which shall be not more than the higher of (1) 2½ per centum per annum, or (2) the average annual interest rate on all interest-bearing obligations of the United States then forming a part of the public debt as computed at the end of the fiscal year next preceding the issuance by the Secretary and adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per centum. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations issued under this section and for such purpose is authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such Act are extended to include any purchase of such notes and other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations shall be treated in every respect as public debt transactions of the United States.

Interest rates.

31 USC 774.

(b) Funds obtained by the Secretary under subsection (a) shall be deposited in an area redevelopment fund (hereinafter referred to as the "fund"), which is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States, and which shall be available to the Secretary for the purpose of extending financial assistance under sections 6 and 7 and for the payment of all obligations and expenditures arising therefrom. Receipts arising from the programs of assistance under sections 6 and 7 shall be credited to the fund. Any moneys in the fund determined by the Secretary to be in excess of current needs shall be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

(c) The fund shall contribute to the civil service retirement and disability fund a sum as provided by section 4(a) of the Civil Service Retirement Act (5 U.S.C. 2254(a)), except that such sum shall be determined by applying to the total basic salaries (as defined in that Act) paid to employees performing activities authorized under sections 6 and 7 of this Act and covered by that Act the per centum rate determined annually by the Civil Service Commission to be the excess of the total normal cost per centum rate of the civil service retirement system over the employee deduction rate specified in such section 4(a). The fund shall also pay into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts that portion of the cost of administration of the civil service retirement and disability fund attributable to employees performing activities authorized under sections 6 and 7 of this Act, as determined by the Civil Service Commission.

(d) In the performance of and with respect to the functions, powers, and duties vested in him by sections 6 and 7 of this Act, the Secretary shall—

(1) prepare annually and submit a budget program in accordance with the provisions of sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended; and

59 Stat. 598.
31 USC 847-849.

(2) determine the character of and the necessity for obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, subject to provisions of law specifically applicable to Government corporations.

INFORMATION

SEC. 10. The Secretary shall aid redevelopment areas and other areas by furnishing to interested individuals, communities, industries, and enterprises within such areas any assistance, technical information, market research, or other forms of assistance, information, or advice which are obtainable from the various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government and which would be useful in alleviating or preventing conditions of excessive unemployment or underemployment within such areas. The Secretary shall furnish the procurement divisions of the various departments, agencies, and other instrumentalities of the Federal Government with a list containing the names and addresses of business firms which are located in redevelopment areas and which are desirous of obtaining Government contracts for the furnishing of supplies or services, and designating the supplies and services such firms are engaged in providing.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 11. In carrying out his duties under this Act the Secretary is authorized to provide technical assistance which would be useful in alleviating or preventing conditions of excessive unemployment or underemployment (1) to areas which he has designated as redevelopment areas under this Act, and (2) to other areas which he finds have substantial need for such assistance. Such assistance shall include studies evaluating the needs of, and developing potentialities for, economic growth of such areas. Such assistance may be provided by the Secretary through members of his staff or through the employment of private individuals, partnerships, firms, corporations, or suitable institutions, under contracts entered into for such purposes. Appropriations are hereby authorized for the purposes of this section in an amount not to exceed $4,500,000 annually.

Appropriations.

POWERS OF SECRETARY

SEC. 12. In performing his duties under this Act, the Secretary is authorized to—

(1) adopt, alter, and use a seal, which shall be judicially noticed;

(2) hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, and take such testimony, as he may deem advisable;

(3) request directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics needed to carry out the purposes of this Act; and each department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or instrumentality is authorized to furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Secretary;

(4) under regulations prescribed by him, assign or sell at public or private sale, or otherwise dispose of for cash or credit, in his discretion and upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as he shall determine to be reasonable, any evidence of debt, contract, claim, personal property, or security assigned to or held by him in connection with loans made or evidences of indebtedness purchased under this Act, and collect or compromise all obligations assigned to or held by him in connection with such loans or evidences of indebtedness until such time as such obligations may be referred to the Attorney General for suit or collection;

(5) further extend the maturity of or renew any loan made or evidence of indebtedness purchased under this Act, beyond the periods stated in such loan or evidence of indebtedness or in this Act, for additional periods not to exceed ten years, if such extension or renewal will aid in the orderly liquidation of such loan or evidence of indebtedness;

(6) deal with, complete, renovate, improve, modernize, insure, rent, or sell for cash or credit, upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as he shall determine to be reasonable, any real or personal property conveyed to, or otherwise acquired by, him in connection with loans made or evidences of indebtedness purchased under this Act;

(7) pursue to final collection, by way of compromise or other administrative action, prior to reference to the Attorney General, all claims against third parties assigned to him in connection with loans made or evidences of indebtedness purchased under this Act. This shall include authority to obtain deficiency judgments or otherwise in the case of mortgages assigned to the Secretary. Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (41 U.S.C. 5), shall not apply to any contract of hazard insurance or to any purchase or contract for services or supplies on account of property obtained by the Secretary as a result of loans made or evidences of indebtedness purchased under this Act if the premium therefor or the amount thereof does not exceed $1,000. The power to convey and to execute, in the name of the Secretary, deeds of conveyance, deeds of release, assignments and satisfactions of mortgages, and any other written instrument relating to real or personal property or any interest therein acquired by the Secretary pursuant to the provisions of this Act may be exercised by the Secretary or by any officer or agent appointed by him for that purpose without the execution of any express delegation of power or power of attorney;

(8) acquire, in any lawful manner, any property (real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible), whenever deemed necessary or appropriate to the conduct of the activities authorized in sections 6 and 7 of this Act;

(9) in addition to any powers, functions, privileges, and immunities otherwise vested in him, take any and all actions, including the procurement of the services of attorneys by contract, determined by him to be necessary or desirable in making, purchasing, servicing, compromising, modifying, liquidating, or otherwise administratively dealing with or realizing on loans made or evidences of indebtedness purchased under this Act.

(10) to such an extent as he finds necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, procure the temporary (not in excess of six months) service of experts or consultants or organizations thereof, including stenographic reporting services, by contract or appointment, and in such cases such service shall be without regard to the civil service and classification laws, and, except in the case of stenographic reporting services by organizations, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5); any individual so employed may be compensated at a rate not in excess of $75 per diem, and, while such individual is away from his home or regular place of business, he may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses;

(11) sue and be sued in any court of record of a State having general jurisdiction or in any United States district court, and jurisdiction is conferred upon such district court to determine such controversies without regard to the amount in controversy; but no attachment, injunction, garnishment, or other similar process, mesne or final, shall be issued against the Secretary or his property. Nothing herein shall be construed to except the activities under this Act from the application of sections 507(b) and 2679 of title 28, United States Code, and of section 367 of the Revised Statutes (5 U.S.C. 316); and

62 Stat. 910, 984.

Rules, regulations, and procedures.

(12) establish such rules, regulations, and procedures as he may deem appropriate in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

TERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE

SEC. 13. Whenever the Secretary shall determine that employment conditions within any area previously designated by him as a redevelopment area have changed to such an extent that such area is no longer eligible for such designation under section 5 of this Act, no further assistance shall be granted under this Act with respect to such area and, for the purposes of this Act, such area shall not be considered a redevelopment area: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall (1) prevent any such area from again being designated a redevelopment area under section 5 of this Act if the Secretary determines it to be eligible under such section, or (2) affect the validity of any contracts or undertakings with respect to such area which were entered into pursuant to this Act prior to a determination by the Secretary that such area no longer qualifies as a redevelopment area. The Secretary shall keep the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and interested State or local agencies, advised at all times of any changes made hereunder with respect to the designation of any area.

URBAN RENEWAL

63 Stat. 413. 42 USC 1450-1463.

SEC. 14. Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"REDEVELOPMENT AREAS UNDER THE AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

"SEC. 113. (a) Whenever the Secretary of Commerce certifies to the Administrator (1) that any county, city, or other municipality (in this section referred to as a 'municipality') is situated in an area designated under section 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act as a redevelopment area, and (2) that there is a reasonable probability that with assistance provided under such Act and other undertakings the area will be able to achieve more than temporary improvement in its economy, the Administrator is authorized to provide financial assistance to a local public agency in any such municipality under this title and the provisions of this section.

"(b) Subject to the provisions of subsection (e) of this section, the Administrator may provide such financial assistance under this section without regard to the requirement or limitations of section 110(c) that the project area be predominantly residential in character or be redeveloped for predominantly residential uses under the urban renewal plan, and without regard to any of the limitations of that section on the undertaking of projects for predominantly nonresidential uses. 70 Stat. 1097. 42 USC 1460.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a contract for financial assistance under this section may include provisions permitting the disposition of any land in the project area designated under the urban renewal plan for industrial or commercial uses to any public agency or nonprofit corporation for subsequent disposition as promptly as practicable by such public agency or corporation for the redevelopment of the land in accordance with the urban renewal plan: Provided, That any disposition of such land to such public agency or corporation under this section shall be made at its fair value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan: And provided further, That only the purchaser from or lessees of such public agency or corporation, and their assignees, shall be required to assume the obligations relating to the commencement of improvements imposed under section 105(b) hereof. 63 Stat. 416.

"(d) Following the execution of any contract for financial assistance under this section with respect to any project, the Administrator may exercise the authority vested in him under this section as well as other provisions of this title for the completion of such projects, notwithstanding any determination made after the execution of such contract that the area in which the project is located is no longer a redevelopment area under the Area Redevelopment Act. 42 USC 1455.

"(e) Not more than 10 per centum of the funds authorized for capital grants under section 103 after the date of the enactment of the Area Redevelopment Act shall be used for the purpose of providing financial assistance under this section. Amounts used for such purpose shall not be taken into account for the purpose of the limitation contained in the second proviso of the fifth sentence of section 110(c)." 42 USC 1453.

URBAN PLANNING GRANTS

SEC. 15. (a) Paragraph (3) of section 701(a) of the Housing Act of 1954 is amended by inserting after "counties which" the following: "(A) are situated in areas designated by the Secretary of Commerce under section 5(a) of the Area Redevelopment Act as redevelopment areas or (B)". 73 Stat. 678. 40 USC 461.

(b) Section 701(b) of such Act is amended by adding before the period at the end of the first sentence a colon and the following: "Provided, That a grant may be made under this section to a city, municipality, or county described in clause (A) of subsection (a)(3), or to a State planning agency (as provided in clause (C) of subsection (a)(1)) for the provision of planning assistance to such a city, municipality, or county, for not more than 75 per centum of such estimated cost".

OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING

SEC. 16. (a) The Secretary of Labor is authorized, upon request and whenever he determines such studies are needed, to undertake, or to provide assistance to others for, studies of the size, characteristics, skills, adaptability, occupational potentialities, and related aspects of the labor force of any redevelopment area.

(b) When a redevelopment area has an approved economic development program as provided in section 6(b)(10), the Secretary of Labor, in consultation with the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture, shall determine the occupational training or retraining needs of unemployed and underemployed individuals residing in the redevelopment area. The Secretary of Labor shall notify the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare of the occupational training or retraining requirements of the area, and shall provide for the orderly selection and referral of those unemployed or underemployed individuals residing in the area who can reasonably be expected to obtain employment as a result of the skill they will acquire in the training which is to be made available. The Secretary of Labor shall cooperate with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and with existing State and local agencies and officials in charge of existing programs relating to vocational training and retraining for the purpose of assuring that the facilities and services of such agencies are made fully available to such individuals.

(c) Whenever the Secretary of Labor finds that additional facilities or services are needed in the area to meet the occupational training or retraining needs of such individuals, he shall so advise the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall provide assistance, including financial assistance when necessary, to the appropriate State vocational educational agency in the provision of such additional facilities or services. If the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare finds that the State vocational educational agency is unable to provide the facilities and services needed, he may, after consultation with such agency, provide for the same by agreement or contract with public or private educational institutions.

(d) The Secretary of Labor shall arrange to provide any necessary assistance for setting up apprenticeships, and to promote journeyman and other on-the-job training.

Appropriation.

(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, not in excess of $4,500,000 annually, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(f) In providing assistance under this section with respect to unemployed and underemployed individuals residing in redevelopment areas, the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall give consideration to the special needs of individuals who are agricultural workers or are engaged in other seasonal occupations and who require occupational training in order to qualify them to engage in supplementary employment during the off season and during other periods of reduced activity in the field of their regular or primary occupations.

RETRAINING SUBSISTENCE PAYMENTS

SEC. 17. (a) The Secretary of Labor in consultation with the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture may, on behalf of the United States, enter into agreements with States in which redevelopment areas are located, under which the Secretary of Labor shall make payments to such States either in advance or by way of reimbursement for the purpose of enabling such States, as agents of the United States, to make weekly retraining payments to unemployed or underemployed individuals residing within such redevelopment areas who are certified by the Secretary of Labor to be undergoing occupational training or retraining under section 16 of this Act. Such payments shall be made only for the period the individual is receiving occupational training or retraining under section 16 of this Act, but not in any event to exceed sixteen weeks, and the amount of any such payment for any week shall be equal to the amount of the average weekly unemployment compensation payment (including allowances for dependents when appropriate) payable for a week of total unemployment in the State making such payments.

(b) No weekly retraining payment shall be made to any person otherwise eligible who, with respect to the week for which such payment would be made, has received or is seeking unemployment compensation under title XV of the Social Security Act or any other Federal or any State unemployment compensation law, but if the appropriate State or Federal agency finally determines that a person denied benefits for any week because of this subsection was not entitled to unemployment compensation under title XV of the Social Security Act or such Federal or State law with respect to such week, this subsection shall not apply with respect to such week.

68 Stat. 1130.
42 USC 1361-1371.

(c) Any agreement under this section may contain provisions (including, so far as may be appropriate, provisions authorized or made applicable with respect to agreements concluded by the Secretary of Labor pursuant to title XV of the Social Security Act) as will promote effective administration, protect the United States against loss, and insure the proper application of payments made to the State under such agreement. Except as may be provided in such agreements, or in the rules and regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (d) of this section, determinations by any duly designated officer or agency as to the eligibility of individuals for weekly retraining payments under this section shall be final and conclusive for any purposes and not subject to review by any court or any other officer.

(d) The Secretary of Labor and the Secretary shall jointly prescribe such rules and regulations as they may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Rules and regulations.

(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, not in excess of $10,000,000 annually, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Appropriation.

PENALTIES

SEC. 18. (a) Whoever makes any statement knowing it to be false, or whoever willfully overvalues any security, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or for any applicant any financial assistance under section 6, 7, or 8, or any extension thereof by renewal, deferment of action, or otherwise, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, or for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Secretary, or for the purpose of obtaining money, property, or anything of value, under this Act, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

(b) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Secretary, in the administration of this Act (1) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to him or pledged or otherwise entrusted to him, or (2) with intent to defraud the Secretary or any other body politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer, auditor, or examiner, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of or to the Secretary, or without being duly authorized draws any order or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, or (3) with intent to defraud participates or shares in or receives directly or indirectly any money, profit, property, or benefit through any transaction, loan, grant, commission, contract, or any other act of the Secretary, or (4) gives any unauthorized information concerning any future action or plan of the Secretary which might affect the value of securities, or having such knowledge invests or speculates, directly or indirectly, in the securities or property of any company or corporation receiving loans, grants, or other assistance from the Secretary, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

EMPLOYMENT OF EXPEDITERS AND ADMINISTRATIVE EMPLOYEES

SEC. 19. No financial assistance shall be extended by the Secretary under section 6, 7, or 8 to any business enterprise unless the owners, partners, or officers of such business enterprise (1) certify to the Secretary the names of any attorneys, agents, and other persons engaged by or on behalf of such business enterprise for the purpose of expediting applications made to the Secretary for assistance of any sort, under this Act, and the fees paid or to be paid to any such person; and (2) execute an agreement binding such business enterprise, for a period of two years after such assistance is rendered by the Secretary to such business enterprise, to refrain from employing, tendering any office or employment to, or retaining for professional services, any person who, on the date such assistance or any part thereof was rendered, or within one year prior thereto, shall have served as an officer, attorney, agent, or employee, occupying a position or engaging in activities which the Secretary shall have determined involve discretion with respect to the granting of assistance under this Act.

RECORD OF APPLICATIONS

Public inspection.

SEC. 20. The Secretary shall maintain as a permanent part of the records of the Department of Commerce a list of applications approved for financial assistance under section 6, 7, or 8, which shall be kept available for public inspection during the regular business hours of the Department of Commerce. The following information shall be posted in such list as soon as each application is approved: (1) the name of the applicant and, in the case of corporate applications, the names of the officers and directors thereof, (2) the amount and duration of the loan or grant for which application is made, (3) the purposes for which the proceeds of the loan or grant are to be used, and (4) a general description of the security offered in the case of a loan.

PREVAILING RATE OF WAGE AND FORTY-HOUR WEEK

SEC. 21. All laborers and mechanics employed by contractors or subcontractors on projects assisted by the Secretary under this Act and undertaken by public applicants shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on similar construction in the locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act, as amended (40 U.S.C. 276a—276a-5), and every such employee shall receive compensation at a rate not less than one and one-half times his basic rate of pay for all hours worked in any workweek in excess of eight hours in any workday or forty hours in the workweek, as the case may be. The Secretary shall not extend any financial assistance under section 6, 7, or 8 for such a project without first obtaining adequate assurance that these labor standards will be maintained upon the construction work. The Secretary of Labor shall have, with respect to the labor standards specified in this provision, the authority and functions set forth in Reorganization

49 Stat. 1011.

Plan Numbered 14 of 1950 (15 F.R. 3176; 64 Stat. 1267; 5 U.S.C. 133z-15), and section 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934, as amended (40 U.S.C. 276c). 48 Stat. 948.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 22. The Secretary shall make a comprehensive and detailed annual report to the Congress of his operations under this Act for each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1962. Such report shall be printed and shall be transmitted to the Congress not later than January 3 of the year following the fiscal year with respect to which such report is made. Such report shall show, among other things, (1) the number and size of Government contracts for the furnishing of supplies and services placed with business enterprises located in redevelopment areas, and (2) the amount and duration of employment resulting from such contracts. Upon the request of the Secretary, the various departments and agencies of the Government engaged in the procurement of supplies and services shall furnish to the Secretary such information as may be necessary for the purposes of this section. Report to Congress.

APPROPRIATION

SEC. 23. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

USE OF OTHER FACILITIES

SEC. 24. (a) To the fullest extent practicable in carrying out the provisions of this Act the Secretary shall use the available services and facilities of other agencies and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, but only with their consent and on a reimbursable basis. The foregoing requirement shall be implemented by the Secretary in such a manner as to avoid the duplication of existing staffs and facilities in any agency or instrumentality of the Federal Government. The Secretary is authorized to delegate to the heads of other departments and agencies of the Federal Government any of the Secretary's functions, powers, and duties under this Act as he may deem appropriate, and to authorize the redelegation of such functions, powers, and duties by the heads of such departments and agencies. Delegation of functions, etc.

(b) Departments and agencies of the Federal Government shall exercise their powers, duties, and functions in such manner as will assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act. This Act shall be supplemental to any existing authority, and nothing herein shall be deemed to be restrictive of any existing powers, duties, and functions of any other department or agency of the Federal Government.

(c) Funds authorized to be appropriated under this Act may be transferred, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, between departments and agencies of the Government, if such funds are used for the purposes for which they are specifically authorized and appropriated. Transfer of funds.

(d) Subject to the standards and procedures prescribed by section 505 of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, the head of any agency, for the performance of functions under this Act, including functions delegated pursuant to subsection (a), may place positions in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by such Act, and such positions shall be in addition to the number of such positions authorized by section 505 of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, to be placed in such grades: Provided, That not to exceed a total of five such positions may be placed in such grades under this subsection, to be apportioned among the agencies by the Secretary, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. "Super-grade" positions. 69 Stat. 179. 5 USC 1105.

RECORDS AND AUDIT

SEC. 25. (a) Each recipient of assistance under section 6, 7, or 8 of this Act shall keep such records as the Secretary shall prescribe, including records which fully disclose the amount and the disposition by such recipient of the proceeds of such assistance, the total cost of the project or undertaking in connection with which such assistance is given or used, and the amount and nature of that portion of the cost of the project or undertaking supplied by other sources, and such other records as will facilitate an effective audit.

(b) The Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of the recipient that are pertinent to assistance received under section 6, 7, or 8 of this Act.

LOANS TO LOCAL DEVELOPMENT COMPANIES

72 Stat. 697.
15 USC 696.

SEC. 26. Section 502 of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 is amended by striking out paragraph (6).

RESEARCH

SEC. 27. To assist in the long-range accomplishment of the purposes of this Act, the Secretary, in cooperation with other agencies having similar functions, shall establish and conduct a continuing program of study and research designed to assist in determining the causes of unemployment, underemployment, underdevelopment, and chronic depression in the various areas of the Nation and in the formulation and implementation of national, State, and local programs which will raise income levels and otherwise produce solutions of the problems resulting from these conditions. The Secretary shall include in his annual report under section 22 a detailed statement concerning the study and research conducted under this section together with his findings resulting therefrom and his recommendations for legislative and other action.

APPLICATION OF ACT

SEC. 28. As used in this Act, the terms "State", "States", and "United States" include the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY

SEC. 29. (a) This Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1965.

(b) Notwithstanding the foregoing, effective on July 1, 1965, those assets, funds, contracts, loans, liabilities, commitments, authorizations, allocations, and records of the Secretary under this Act which the Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall determine are necessary to the liquidation of the affairs and functions conducted under this Act, are transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury for purposes of liquidation.

75 STAT. 63.

(c) The termination of this Act shall not affect the disbursement of funds under, or the carrying out of, any contract, commitment, or other obligation entered into pursuant to this Act prior to the date of such termination, or the taking of any action necessary to preserve or protect the interests of the United States in any amounts advanced or paid out in carrying on operations under this Act.

Resolved, That there be printed as a Senate document the committee print entitled "The War on Poverty, the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, a Compilation of Materials Relevant to S. 2642," of the Eighty-eighth Congress, second session; and that there be printed nine thousand additional copies of such document for the use of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Attest:

FELTON M. JOHNSTON, Secretary.

FOREWORD

The selected documents included herein will be essential to the subcommittee in its deliberations on S. 2642. It will be helpful to have these materials compiled in a readily available form and in a single document for the use of the subcommittee and others.

"The War on Poverty," a congressional presentation, was prepared under the direction of Sargent Shriver, special assistant to President Lyndon B. Johnson. The section-by-section analysis of S. 2642 was prepared by the Office of the Legal Counsel, U.S. Department of Justice. "The Economic Opportunity Act of 1964: A summary" is from "Legislative Notes," published by the Office of Education March 16, 1964.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S MESSAGE ON POVERTY

To the Congress of the United States:

We are citizens of the richest and most fortunate nation in the history of the world.

One hundred and eighty years ago we were a small country struggling for survival on the margin of a hostile land.

Today we have established a civilization of free men which spans an entire continent.

With the growth of our country has come opportunity for our people—opportunity to educate our children, to use our energies in productive work, to increase our leisure—opportunity for almost every American to hope that through work and talent he could create a better life for himself and his family.

The path forward has not been an easy one.

But we have never lost sight of our goal—an America in which every citizen shares all the opportunities of his society, in which every man has a chance to advance his welfare to the limit of his capacities.

We have come a long way toward this goal.

We still have a long way to go.

The distance which remains is the measure of the great unfinished work of our society.

To finish that work I have called for a national war on poverty. Our objective: total victory.

There are millions of Americans—one-fifth of our people—who have not shared in the abundance which has been granted to most of us, and on whom the gates of opportunity have been closed.

What does this poverty mean to those who endure it?

It means a daily struggle to secure the necessities for even a meager existence. It means that the abundance, the comforts, the opportunities they see all around them are beyond their grasp.

Worst of all, it means hopelessness for the young.

The young man or woman who grows up without a decent education, in a broken home, in a hostile and squalid environment, in ill health or in the face of racial injustice—that young man or woman is often trapped in a life of poverty.

He does not have the skills demanded by a complex society. He does not know how to acquire those skills. He faces a mounting sense of despair which drains initiative and ambition and energy.

Our tax cut will create millions of new jobs—new exits from poverty.

But we must also strike down all the barriers which keep many from using those exits.

The war on poverty is not a struggle simply to support people, to to make them dependent on the generosity of others.

It is a struggle to give people a chance.

It is an effort to allow them to develop and use their capacities, as we have been allowed to develop and use ours, so that they can share, as others share, in the promise of this Nation.

We do this, first of all, because it is right that we should.

From the establishment of public education and land-grant colleges through agricultural extension and encouragement to industry, we have pursued the goal of a nation with full and increasing opportunities for all its citizens.

The war on poverty is a further step in that pursuit.

We do it also because helping some will increase the prosperity of all.

Our fight against poverty will be an investment in the most valuable of our resources—the skills and strength of our people.

And in the future, as in the past, this investment will return its cost many fold to our entire economy.

If we can raise the annual earnings of 10 million among the poor by only $1,000 we will have added $14 billion a year to our national output. In addition we can make important reductions in public assistance payments which now cost us $4 billion a year, and in the large costs of fighting crime and delinquency, disease and hunger.

This is only part of the story.

Our history has proved that each time we broaden the base of abundance, giving more people the chance to produce and consume, we create new industry, higher production, increased earnings, and better income for all.

Giving new opportunity to those who have little will enrich the lives of all the rest.

Because it is right, because it is wise, and because, for the first time in our history, it is possible to conquer poverty, I submit, for the consideration of the Congress and the country, the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

The act does not merely expand old programs or improve what is already being done.

It charts a new course.

It strikes at the causes, not just the consequences of poverty.

It can be a milestone in our 180-year search for a better life for our people.

This act provides five basic opportunities:

It will give almost half a million underprivileged young Americans the opportunity to develop skills, continue education, and find useful work.

It will give every American community the opportunity to develop a comprehensive plan to fight its own poverty—and help them to carry out their plans.

It will give dedicated Americans the opportunity to enlist as volunteers in the war against poverty.

It will give many workers and farmers the opportunity to break through particular barriers which bar their escape from poverty.

It will give the entire Nation the opportunity for a concerted attack on poverty through the establishment, under my direction, of the Office of Economic Opportunity, a national headquarters for the war against poverty.

This is how we propose to create these opportunities.

First, we will give high priority to helping young Americans who lack skills, who have not completed their education or who cannot complete it because they are too poor.

The years of high school and college age are the most critical stage of a young person's life. If they are not helped then, many will be condemned to a life of poverty which they, in turn, will pass on to their children.

I therefore recommend the creation of a Job Corps, a work-training program, and a work-study program.

A new national Job Corps will build toward an enlistment of 100,000 young men. They will be drawn from those whose background, health, and education make them least fit for useful work.

Those who volunteer will enter more than 100 camps and centers around the country.

Half of these young men will work, in the first year, on special conservation projects to give them education, useful work experience, and to enrich the natural resources of the country.

Half of these young men will receive, in the first year, a blend of training, basic education, and work experience in job training centers.

These are not simply camps for the underprivileged. They are new educational institutions, comparable in innovation to the land-grant colleges. Those who enter them will emerge better qualified to play a productive role in American society.

A new national work-training program operated by the Department of Labor will provide work and training for 200,000 American men and women between the ages of 16 and 21. This will be developed through State and local governments and nonprofit agencies.

Hundreds of thousands of young Americans badly need the experience, the income, and the sense of purpose which useful full or part-time work can bring. For them such work may mean the difference between finishing school or dropping out. Vital community activities from hospitals and playgrounds to libraries and settlement houses are suffering because there are not enough people to staff them.

We are simply bringing these needs together.

A new national work-study program operated by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare will provide Federal funds for part-time jobs for 140,000 young Americans who do not go to college because they cannot afford it.

There is no more senseless waste than the waste of the brainpower and skill of those who are kept from college by economic circumstance. Under this program they will, in a great American tradition, be able to work their way through school.

They and the country will be richer for it.

Second, through a new community action program we intend to strike at poverty at its source—in the streets of our cities and on the farms of our countryside among the very young and the impoverished old.

This program asks men and women throughout the country to prepare long-range plans for the attack on poverty in their own local communities.

These are not plans prepared in Washington and imposed upon hundreds of different situations.

They are based on the fact that local citizens best understand their own problems, and know best how to deal with those problems.

These plans will be local plans striking at the many unfilled needs which underlie poverty in each community, not just one or two. Their components and emphasis will differ as needs differ.

These plans will be local plans calling upon all the resources available to the community—Federal and State, local and private, human and material.

35-831 O—64——2

And when these plans are approved by the Office of Economic Opportunity, the Federal Government will finance up to 90 percent of the additional cost for the first 2 years.

The most enduring strength of our Nation is the huge reservoir of talent, initiative and leadership which exists at every level of our society.

Through the community action program we call upon this, our greatest strength, to overcome our greatest weakness.

Third, I ask for the authority to recruit and train skilled volunteers for the war against poverty.

Thousands of Americans have volunteered to serve the needs of other lands.

Thousand more want the chance to serve the needs of their own land.

They should have that chance.

Among older people who have retired, as well as among the young, among women as well as men, there are many Americans who are ready to enlist in our war against poverty.

They have skills and dedication. They are badly needed.

If the State requests them, if the community needs and will use them, we will recruit and train them and give them the chance to serve.

Fourth, we intend to create new opportunities for certain hard-hit groups to break out of the pattern of poverty.

Through a new program of loans and guarantees we can provide incentives to those who will employ the unemployed.

Through programs of work and retraining for unemployed fathers and mothers we can help them support their families in dignity while preparing themselves for new work.

Through funds to purchase needed land, organize cooperatives, and create new and adequate family farms we can help those whose life on the land has been a struggle without hope.

Fifth, I do not intend that the war against poverty become a series of uncoordinated and unrelated efforts—that it perish for lack of leadership and direction.

Therefore this bill creates, in the Executive Office of the President, a new Office of Economic Opportunity. Its Director will be my personal chief of staff for the war against poverty. I intend to appoint Sargent Shriver to this post.

He will be directly responsible for these new programs. He will work with and through existing agencies of the Government.

This program—the Economic Opportunity Act—is the foundation of our war against poverty. But it does not stand alone.

For the past 3 years this Government has advanced a number of new proposals which strike at important areas of need and distress.

I ask the Congress to extend those which are already in action, and to establish those which have already been proposed.

There are programs to help badly distressed areas such as the Area Redevelopment Act, and the legislation now being prepared to help Appalachia.

There are programs to help those without training find a place in today's complex society—such as the Manpower Development Training Act and the Vocational Education Act for youth.

There are programs to protect those who are specially vulnerable to the ravages of poverty—hospital insurance for the elderly, protection for migrant farmworkers, a food stamp program for the needy, coverage for millions not now protected by a minimum wage, new and expanded unemployment benefits for men out of work, a housing and community development bill for those seeking decent homes.

Finally there are programs which help the entire country, such as aid to education which, by raising the quality of schooling available to every American child, will give a new chance for knowledge to the children of the poor.

I ask immediate action on all these programs.

What you are being asked to consider is not a simple or an easy program. But poverty is not a simple or an easy enemy.

It cannot be driven from the land by a single attack on a single front. Were this so we would have conquered poverty long ago.

Nor can it be conquered by government alone.

For decades American labor and American business, private institutions and private individuals have been engaged in strengthening our economy and offering new opportunity to those in need.

We need their help, their support, and their full participation.

Through this program we offer new incentives and new opportunities for cooperation, so that all the energy of our nation, not merely the efforts of government, can be brought to bear on our common enemy.

Today, for the first time in our history, we have the power to strike away the barriers to full participation in our society. Having the power, we have the duty.

The Congress is charged by the Constitution to "provide * * for the general welfare of the United States." Our present abundance is a measure of its success in fulfilling that duty. Now Congress is being asked to extend that welfare to all our people.

The President of the United States is President of all the people in every section of the country. But this office also holds a special responsibility to the distressed and disinherited, the hungry and the hopeless of this abundant Nation.

It is in pursuit of that special responsibility that I submit this message to you today.

The new program I propose is within our means. Its cost of $970 million is 1 percent of our national budget—and every dollar I am requesting for this program is already included in the budget I sent to Congress in January.

But we cannot measure its importance by its cost.

For it charts an entirely new course of hope for our people.

We are fully aware that this program will not eliminate all the poverty in America in a few months or a few years. Poverty is deeply rooted and its causes are many.

But this program will show the way to new opportunities for millions of our fellow citizens.

It will provide a lever with which we can begin to open the door to our prosperity for those who have been kept outside.

It will also give us the chance to test our weapons, to try our energy and ideas and imagination for the many battles yet to come. As conditions change, and as experience illuminates our difficulties, we will be prepared to modify our strategy.

And this program is much more than a beginning.

Rather it is a commitment. It is a total commitment by this President, and this Congress, and this Nation, to pursue victory over the most ancient of mankind's enemies.

On many historic occasions the President has requested from Congress the authority to move against forces which were endangering the well-being of our country.

This is such an occasion.

On similar occasions in the past we have often been called upon to wage war against foreign enemies which threatened our freedom. Today we are asked to declare war on a domestic enemy which threatens the strength of our Nation and the welfare of our people.

If we now move forward against this enemy—if we can bring to the challenges of peace the same determination and strength which has brought us victory in war—then this day and this Congress will have won a secure and honorable place in the history of the Nation, and the enduring gratitude of generations of Americans yet to come.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 16, 1964.

S. 2642

A BILL To mobilize the human and financial resources of the Nation to combat poverty in the United States

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Repeesentatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Economic Opportunity Act of 1964."

FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. Although the economic well-being and prosperity of the United States have progressed to a level surpassing any achieved in world history, and although these benefits are widely shared throughout the Nation, poverty continues to be the lot of a substantial number of our people. The United States can achieve its full economic and social potential as a nation only if every individual has the opportunity to contribute to the full extent of his capabilities and to participate in the workings of our society. It is therefore the policy of the United States to eliminate the paradox of poverty in the midst of plenty in this Nation by opening to everyone the opportunity for education and training, the opportunity to work, and the opportunity to live in decency and dignity. It is the purpose of this Act to strengthen, supplement, and coordinate efforts in furtherance of that policy.

TITLE I—YOUTH PROGRAMS

PART A—JOB CORPS

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 101. The purpose of this part is to prepare for the responsibilities of citizenship and to increase the employability of youths aged sixteen through twenty-one by providing them in residential centers with education, vocational training, useful work experience, including work directed toward the conservation of natural resources, and other appropriate activities.

ESTABLISHMENT OF JOB CORPS

SEC. 102. In order to carry out the purposes of this part, there is hereby established within the Office of Economic Opportunity (hereinafter referred to as the "Office"), established by title VI, a Job Corps (hereinafter referred to as the "Corps").

JOB CORPS PROGRAM

SEC. 103. The Director of the Office (hereinafter referred to as the "Director") is authorized to—

(a) enter into agreements with any Federal, State, or local agency or private organization for the provision of such facilities and services as in his judgment are needed to carry out the purposes of this part;

(b) provide education and vocational training to enrollees in in the Corps or, where appropriate, arrange for the provision thereof by another Federal agency or by State or local public educational agencies;

(c) provide or arrange for the provision of programs of useful work experience and other appropriate activities for enrollees;

(d) establish standards of safety and health for enrollees, and furnish or arrange for the furnishing of health services; and

(e) prescribe such rules and regulations and make such arrangements as he deems necessary to provide for the selection of enrollees and to govern their conduct after enrollment, including appropriate regulations as to the circumstances under which enrollment may be terminated.

COMPOSITION OF THE CORPS

SEC. 104. (a) The Corps shall be composed of male individuals who are permanent residents of the United States, who have attained age sixteen but have not attained age twenty-two at the time of enrollment, and who meet the standards for enrollment prescribed by the Director. Participation in the Corps shall not relieve any enrollee of obligations under the Universal Military Training and Service Act (50 U.S.C. App. 451 et seq.).

(b) In order to enroll as a member of the Corps, an individual must agree to comply with rules and regulations promulgated by the Director for the government of the Corps.

(c) The total enrollment of any individual in the Corps shall not exceed two years except as the Director may determine in special cases.

ALLOWANCES AND MAINTENANCE

SEC. 105. (a) Enrollees may be provided with such living, travel, and leave allowances, and such quarters, subsistence, transportation, equipment, clothing, recreational services, medical, dental, hospital, and other health services, and other expenses as the Director may deem necessary or appropriate for their needs. Transportation and travel allowances may also be provided, in such circumstances as the Director may determine, for applicants for enrollment to or from places of enrollment, and for former enrollees from places of termination to their homes.

(b) Upon termination of his enrollment in the Corps, each enrollee shall be entitled to receive a readjustment allowance at a rate not to exceed $50 for each month of satisfactory participation therein as determined by the Director: Provided, however, That under such circumstances as the Director may determine, a portion of the readjustment allowance of an enrollee not exceeding $25 for each month of satisfactory service may be paid during the period of service of the enrollee directly to a dependent (as that term as defined in section 401 of title 37, United States Code) and any sum so paid shall be supplemented by the payment of an equal amount to the dependent by the Director. In the event of the enrollee's death during the period of his service, the amount of any unpaid readjustment allowance shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of the Act of August 3, 1950 (5 U.S.C. 61f).

APPLICATION OF PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL LAW

SEC. 106. (a) Except as otherwise specifically provided in this part, an enrollee shall be deemed not to be a Federal employee and shall not be subject to the provisions of laws relating to Federal employment, including those relating to hours of works, rates of compensation, leave, unemployment compensation, and Federal employee benefits.

(b) Enrollees shall be deemed to be employees of the United States for the purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 1 et seq.) and of title II of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401 et seq.), and any service performed by an individual as an enrollee shall be deemed for such purposes to be performed in the employ of the United States.

(c)(1) Enrollees under this part shall, for the purposes of the administration of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act (5 U.S.C. 751 et seq.), be deemed to be civil employees of the United States within the meaning of the term "employee" as defined in section 40 of such Act (5 U.S.C. 790) and the provisions thereof shall apply except as hereinafter provided.

(2) For purposes of this subsection—

(A) The term "performance of duty" in the Federal Employees' Compensation Act shall not include any act of an enrollee

(i) while he is on authorized leave or pass; or

(ii) while he is absent from his assigned post of duty, except while participating in an activity authorized by or under the direction or supervision of the Corps.

(B) In computing compensation benefits for disability or death under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act, the monthly pay of an enrollee shall be deemed to be $150, except that with respect to compensation for disability accruing after the individual concerned reaches the age of twenty-one, such monthly pay shall be deemed to be that received under the entrance salary for GS–2 under the Classification Act of 1949 (5 U.S.C. 1071 et seq.).

(C) The term "injury" as defined in section 40 of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act (5 U.S.C. 790) shall include disease, illness, or injury if it arises out of service in the Corps.

(D) Compensation for disability, including medical care, shall not begin to accrue until the day following the date on which the enrollment of the injured enrollee is terminated.

(d) An enrollee shall be deemed to be an employee of the Government for the purposes of the Federal Tort Claims Act (28 U.S.C. 2671 et seq.).

(e) Personnel of the uniformed services who are detailed or assigned to duty in the performance of agreements made by the Director for the support of the Corps shall not be counted in computing strengths under any law limiting the strength of such services or in computing the percentage authorized by law for any grade therein.

PART B—WORK-TRAINING PROGRAMS

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 111. The purpose of this part is to provide useful work experience opportunities for unemployed youths, through participation in State and community work-training programs, so that their employability may be increased or their education resumed or continued and so that public agencies and private nonprofit organizations will be enabled to carry out programs in the field of conservation and development of natural resources and recreational areas, or other programs which will permit or contribute to an undertaking or service in the public interest that would not otherwise be provided.

DEVELOPMENT OF PROGRAMS

SEC. 112. In order to carry out the purposes of this part, the Director shall assist and cooperate with State and local agencies and private nonprofit organizations in developing programs for the employment of young people in State and community activities hereinafter authorized, which, whenever appropriate, shall be coordinated with programs of training and education provided by local public educational agencies.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 113. (a) The Director is authorized to enter into agreements providing for the payment by him of part or all of the cost of a State or local program submitted hereunder if he determines, in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, that—

(1) enrollees in the program will be employed either (A) on publicly owned and operated facilities or projects, or (B) on local projects sponsored by private nonprofit organizations, other than projects involving the construction, operation, or maintenance of any facility used or to be used for sectarian instruction or as a place for religious worship;

(2) the program will increase the employability of the enrollees by providing work experience and training in occupational skills or pursuits in classifications in which the Director finds there is reasonable expectation of employment, or will enable student enrollees to resume or to maintain school attendance;

(3) the program will permit or contribute to an undertaking or service in the public interest that would not otherwise be provided, or will contribute to the conservation, development, or management of the natural resources of the State or community or to the development, management, or protection of State or community recreational areas;

(4) the program will not result in the displacement of employed workers or impair existing contracts for services;

(5) the rates of pay and other conditions of employment will be appropriate and reasonable in the light of such factors as the type of work performed, geographical region, and proficiency of the employee;

(6) to the maximum extent feasible, the program will be coordinated with vocational training and educational services adapted to the special needs of enrollees in such program and sponsored by State or local public educational agencies: Provided, however, That where such services are inadequate or unavailable, the program may make provision for the enlargement, improvement, development, and coordination of such services with the cooperation of, or where appropriate pursuant to agreement with, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; and

(7) the program includes standards and procedures for the selection of applicants, including provisions assuring full coordination and cooperation with local and other authorities to encourage students to resume or maintain school attendance.

(b) In approving projects under this part, the Director shall give priority to projects with high training potential.

ENROLLEES IN PROGRAMS

SEC. 114. (a) Participation in programs under this part shall be limited to young men and women who are permanent residents of the United States, who have attained age sixteen but have not attained age twenty-two, and whose participation in such programs will be consistent with the purposes of this part.

(b) Enrollees shall be deemed not to be Federal employees and shall not be subject to the provisions of laws relating to Federal employment, including those relating to hours of work, rates of compensation, leave, unemployment compensation, and Federal employee benefits.

(c) Where appropriate to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Director may provide for testing, counseling, job development, and referral services to youths through public agencies or private nonprofit organizations.

LIMITATIONS ON FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 115. Federal assistance to any program pursuant to this part paid for the period ending two years after the date of enactment of this Act, or June 30, 1966, whichever is later, shall not exceed 90 per centum of the costs of such program, including costs of administration, and such assistance paid for periods thereafter shall not exceed 75 per centum of such costs, unless the Director determines, pursuant to regulations adopted and promulgated by him establishing objective criteria for such determinations, that assistance in excess of such percentages is required in furtherance of the purposes of this part. Non-Federal contributions may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to plant, equipment, and services.

EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE

SEC. 116. The Director shall establish criteria designed to achieve an equitable distribution of assistance under this part among the States. In developing such criteria, he shall consider among other relevant factors the ratios of population, unemployment, and family income levels. Not more than 12½ per centum of the sums appropriated or allocated for any fiscal year to carry out the purposes of this part shall be used within any one State.

PART C—WORK-STUDY PROGRAMS

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 121. The purpose of this part is to stimulate and promote the part-time employment of students in institutions of higher education who are from low-income families and are in need of the earnings from such employment to pursue courses of study at such institutions.

AGREEMENTS FOR PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

SEC. 122. The Director is authorized to enter into agreements with institutions of higher education (as defined by section 103 of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 (20 U.S.C. 403)) for payment by him of part of the compensation of students employed under work-study programs as hereinafter provided.

CONDITIONS OF AGREEMENTS

SEC. 123. An agreement entered into pursuant to section 122 shall—

(a) provide for the operation by the institution of a program for the part-time employment of its students in work (1) for the institution itself, or (2) under arrangements satisfactory to the Director, for public agencies or private nonprofit organizations whose activities contribute to the objectives of this Act: Provided, however, That no such work shall involve the construction, operation, or maintenance of any facility used or to be used for sectarian instruction or as a place for religious worship.

(b) provide that employment under such work-study program shall be furnished only to a student who (1) is from a low-income family, (2) is in need of the earnings from such employment in order to pursue a course of study at such institution, (3) is capable, in the opinion of the institution, of maintaining good standing in such course of study while employed under the program covered by the agreement, and (4) has been accepted for enrollment as a full-time student at the institution or, in the case of a student already enrolled in and attending the institution, is in good standing and in full-time attendance there either as an undergraduate, graduate, or professional student;

(c) provide that no student shall be employed under such work-study program for more than fifteen hours in any week in which classes in which he is enrolled are in session;

(d) provide that in each fiscal year during which the agreement remains in effect, the institution shall expend (from sources other than payments by the Director under this part) for the employment of its students (whether or not in employment eligible for assistance under this part) an amount that is not less than its average annual expenditure for such employment during the three fiscal years preceding the fiscal year in which the agreement is entered into;

(e) provide for payment by the Director of a portion of the compensation of each student employed under such work-study program in accordance with the agreement, but not to exceed 90 per centum of such compensation for work performed during the period ending two years after the date of enactment of this Act, or June 30, 1966, whichever is later, and 75 per centum thereafter;

(f) provide, subject to section 124, that the institution undertakes to act, if so requested by the Director, as his agent for the payment of the Director's share of the student's compensation;

(g) include provisions designed to make employment under such work-study program, or equivalent employment offered or arranged for by the institution, reasonably available (to the extent of available funds) to all eligible students in the institution in need thereof; and

(h) include such other provisions as the Director shall deem necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this part.

PAYMENTS TO STUDENTS

SEC. 124. (a) The Director's share of the compensation of a student employed under a work-study program covered by an agreement under this part may be paid directly by him to the student; or it may be paid through the employing institution as paying agent for the Director. If the institution is utilized as paying agent, the Director's share may be paid to the institution in advance or by way of reimbursement, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Director, and the Director may authorize the institution to combine the Director's share and the remainder of the student's compensation in a single payment to the student.

(b) Regardless of the method of payment under this section, students employed under a work-study program covered by an agreement under this part shall be deemed not to be Federal employees and shall not be subject to the provisions of laws relating to Federal employment, including those relating to hours of work, rates of compensation, leave, unemployment compensation, and Federal employee benefits.

(c) Nothing in this part shall be construed as restricting the source (other than this part) from which the institution may pay its share of the compensation of a student employed under a work-study program covered by an agreement under this part.

EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE

SEC. 125. The Director shall establish criteria designed to achieve an equitable distribution of assistance under this part among the States and among institutions of higher education within each State. In developing such criteria, he shall consider among other relevant factors the ratios of full-time students in institutions of higher education, unemployment, and family income levels. Not more than 12½ per centum of the sums appropriated or allocated for any fiscal year to carry out the purposes of this part shall be used within any one State.

TITLE II—URBAN AND RURAL COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 201. The purpose of this title is to provide stimulation and incentive for urban and rural communities to mobilize their resources, public and private, to combat poverty through community action programs.

COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS

SEC. 202. (a) The term "community action program" means a program—

(1) which mobilizes and utilizes, in an attack on poverty, public and private resources of any urban or rural, or combined urban and rural, geographical area (referred to in this title as a "community"), including but not limited to a State, metropolitan area, county, city, town, multicity unit, or multicounty unit;

(2) which provides services, assistance, and other activities of sufficient variety, scope, and size to give promise of progress toward elimination of poverty through developing employment opportunities, improving human performance, motivation, and productivity, and bettering the conditions under which people live, learn, and work;

(3) which is developed, conducted, and administered with the maximum feasible participation of residents of the areas and members of the groups referred to in section 204(a); and

(4) which is conducted, administered, or coordinated by a public or private nonprofit agency (referred to in this title as a "community action organization") which is broadly representative of the community.

(b) The Director is authorized to prescribe such additional criteria for community action programs as he shall deem appropriate.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR DEVELOPMENT OF COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS

SEC. 203. The Director is authorized to make grants to, or to contract with, community action organizations, or, if he deems it necessary to effectuate the purposes of this title, other appropriate public agencies or private nonprofit organizations, to pay part or all of the costs of development of community action programs.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR CONDUCT AND ADMINISTRATION OF COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS

SEC. 204. (a) The Director is authorized to make grants to, or to contract with, community action organizations or other appropriate public agencies or private nonprofit organizations to pay part or all of the costs of community action programs which have been approved by him pursuant to this title, including the cost of carrying out programs which are components of a community action program and which are designed to achieve the purposes of this title. Such component programs shall be focused upon the needs of low-income individuals and families and shall provide, in particular areas or to particular groups in a community, expanded and improved services, assistance, and other activities, and facilities necessary in connection therewith, in the fields of education, employment, job training and counseling, health, vocational rehabilitation, housing, home management, welfare, and other fields which fall within the purposes of this title.

(b) Any elementary or secondary school education program assisted under this section shall be administered by the public educational agency or agencies principally responsible for providing public elementary and secondary education in the area involved. No child shall be denied the benefit of such a program because he is not regularly enrolled in the public schools.

(c) Assistance under this section may be extended for a limited period, even though a community has not completed and put into effect its community action program, if the Director determines that there is a representative group engaged in developing such a program in the community, and that extension of such assistance will further the purposes of this title with respect to such community and will not impede the development and carrying out of a community action program. After June 30, 1965, expenditures under this subsection in any fiscal year shall not exceed 20 per centum of the sums appropriated or allocated for such year to carry out the purposes of this title.

(d) In determining whether to extend assistance under this section the Director shall consider among other relevant factors the incidence of poverty within the community and within the areas or groups to be affected by the specific program or programs, and the extent to which the applicant is in a position to utilize efficiently and expeditiously the assistance for which application is made. In determining the incidence of poverty the Director shall consider information available with respect to such factors as: the concentration of low-income families, particularly those with children; the extent of persistent unemployment and underemployment; the number and proportion of persons receiving cash or other assistance on a needs basis from public agencies or private organizations; the number of migrant or transient low-income families; school dropout rates, military service rejection rates, and other evidences of low educational attainment; the incidence of disease, disability, and infant mortality; housing conditions; adequacy of community facilities and services; and the incidence of crime and juvenile delinquency.

(e) In extending assistance under this section the Director shall give special consideration to programs which give promise of effecting a permanent increase in the capacity of individuals, groups, and communities to deal with their problems without further assistance.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 205. The Director is authorized to provide, either directly or through grants or other arrangements, (a) technical assistance to communities in developing, conducting, and administering community action programs, and (b) training for specialized personnel needed to develop, conduct, or administer such programs or to provide services or other assistance thereunder.

RESEARCH, TRAINING, AND DEMONSTRATIONS

SEC. 206. The Director is authorized to conduct, or to make grants to or enter into contracts with institutions of higher education or other appropriate public agencies or private nonprofit organizations for the conduct of, research, training, and demonstrations pertaining to the purposes of this title. Expenditures under this section in any fiscal year shall not exceed 15 per centum of the sums appropriated or allocated for such year to carry out the purposes of this title.

LIMITATIONS ON FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 207. (a) Assistance pursuant to sections 203 and 204 paid for the period ending two years after the date of enactment of this Act, or June 30, 1966, whichever is later, shall not exceed 90 per centum of the costs referred to in those sections, respectively, and thereafter shall not exceed 75 per centum of such costs, unless the Director determines, pursuant to regulations adopted and promulgated by him establishing objective criteria for such determinations, that assistance in excess of such percentages is required in furtherance of the purposes of this title. Non-Federal contributions may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to plant, equipment, and services.

(b) The expenditures or contributions made from non-Federal sources for a community action program or component thereof shall be in addition to the aggregate expenditures and contributions from non-Federal sources which were being made for similar purposes prior to the extension of Federal assistance.

PARTICIPATION OF STATE AGENCIES

SEC. 208. (a) The Director shall establish procedures which will facilitate effective participation of the States in community action programs. Such procedures shall include provision for the referral of applications for assistance under this title to the Governor of each State affected, or his designee, for such comments as he may deem appropriate.

(b) The Director is authorized to make grants to, or to contract with, appropriate State agencies for the payment of the expenses of such agencies in providing technical assistance to communities in developing, conducting, and administering community action programs.

EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE

SEC. 209. The Director shall establish criteria designed to achieve an equitable distribution of assistance under this title among the States and between urban and rural areas. In developing such criteria, he shall consider the relative numbers in the States or areas therein of: (a) low-income families, particularly those with children; (b) unemployed persons; (c) persons receiving cash or other assistance on a needs basis from public agencies or private organizations; (d) school dropouts; (e) adults with less than an eighth grade education; and (f) persons rejected for military service. Not more than 12½ per centum of the sums appropriated or allocated for any fiscal year to carry out the purposes of this title shall be used for grants or contracts pursuant to sections 203 and 204 within any one State.

PREFERENCE FOR COMPONENTS OF APPROVED PROGRAMS

SEC. 210. In determining whether to extend assistance under any other title of this Act, the Director shall, to the extent feasible, give preference to programs and projects which are components of a community action program approved pursuant to this title.

TITLE III—SPECIAL PROGRAMS TO COMBAT POVERTY IN RURAL AREAS

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 301. It is the purpose of this title to meet some of the special problems of rural poverty and thereby to raise and maintain the income and living standards of low-income rural families.

AUTHORITY TO MAKE GRANTS AND LOANS

SEC. 302. (a) The Director is authorized to make—

(1) grants of not to exceed $1,500 to low-income rural families where, in the judgment of the Director, such grants have a reasonable possibility of effecting a permanent increase in the income of such families by assisting or permitting them to—

(A) acquire to improve real estate or reduce encumbrances or erect improvements thereon,

(B) operate or improve the operation of farms not larger than family-sized,

(C) participate in cooperative associations, or

(D) finance nonagricultural enterprises which will enable such families to supplement their income; and

(2) loans to such families, having a maximum maturity of 15 years and in amounts not exceeding $2,500 in the aggregate to any family at any one time, for the purpose set forth in subparagraph (a)(1)(D) of this section.

(b) Grants under this section shall be made only if the family is not qualified to obtain such funds by loan under other Federal programs: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the making of grants where appropriate in combination with or as supplements to loans made under this program or other Federal programs.

FAMILY FARM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS

SEC. 303. (a) The Director is authorized to cooperate with, furnish technical assistance to, and otherwise assist in the organization of public or private nonprofit corporations having as their objective the improvement of the productivity and income of low-income farmers. Such corporations shall be eligible for assistance under this section if they are organized for the purpose of and have the power to acquire real property or any interest therein in rural areas, to develop or reconstitute such real property into units not larger than family farms, including necessary fences, farm buildings, land and water development, and related facilities, and to sell the farms so developed or reconsti-

RESEARCH, TRAINING, AND DEMONSTRATIONS

SEC. 206. The Director is authorized to conduct, or to make grants to or enter into contracts with institutions of higher education or other appropriate public agencies or private nonprofit organizations for the conduct of, research, training, and demonstrations pertaining to the purposes of this title. Expenditures under this section in any fiscal year shall not exceed 15 per centum of the sums appropriated or allocated for such year to carry out the purposes of this title.

LIMITATIONS ON FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 207. (a) Assistance pursuant to sections 203 and 204 paid for the period ending two years after the date of enactment of this Act, or June 30, 1966, whichever is later, shall not exceed 90 per centum of the costs referred to in those sections, respectively, and thereafter shall not exceed 75 per centum of such costs, unless the Director determines, pursuant to regulations adopted and promulgated by him establishing objective criteria for such determinations, that assistance in excess of such percentages is required in furtherance of the purposes of this title. Non-Federal contributions may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to plant, equipment, and services.

(b) The expenditures or contributions made from non-Federal sources for a community action program or component thereof shall be in addition to the aggregate expenditures and contributions from non-Federal sources which were being made for similar purposes prior to the extension of Federal assistance.

PARTICIPATION OF STATE AGENCIES

SEC. 208. (a) The Director shall establish procedures which will facilitate effective participation of the States in community action programs. Such procedures shall include provision for the referral of applications for assistance under this title to the Governor of each State affected, or his designee, for such comments as he may deem appropriate.

(b) The Director is authorized to make grants to, or to contract with, appropriate State agencies for the payment of the expenses of such agencies in providing technical assistance to communities in developing, conducting, and administering community action programs.

EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE

SEC. 209. The Director shall establish criteria designed to achieve an equitable distribution of assistance under this title among the States and between urban and rural areas. In developing such criteria, he shall consider the relative numbers in the States or areas therein of: (a) low-income families, particularly those with children; (b) unemployed persons; (c) persons receiving cash or other assistance on a needs basis from public agencies or private organizations; (d) school dropouts; (e) adults with less than an eighth grade education; and (f) persons rejected for military service. Not more than 12½ per centum of the sums appropriated or allocated for any fiscal year to carry out the purposes of this title shall be used for grants or contracts pursuant to sections 203 and 204 within any one State.

PREFERENCE FOR COMPONENTS OF APPROVED PROGRAMS

SEC. 210. In determining whether to extend assistance under any other title of this Act, the Director shall, to the extent feasible, give preference to programs and projects which are components of a community action program approved pursuant to this title.

TITLE III—SPECIAL PROGRAMS TO COMBAT POVERTY IN RURAL AREAS

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 301. It is the purpose of this title to meet some of the special problems of rural poverty and thereby to raise and maintain the income and living standards of low-income rural families.

AUTHORITY TO MAKE GRANTS AND LOANS

SEC. 302. (a) The Director is authorized to make—

(1) grants of not to exceed $1,500 to low-income rural families where, in the judgment of the Director, such grants have a reasonable possibility of effecting a permanent increase in the income of such families by assisting or permitting them to—

(A) acquire to improve real estate or reduce encumbrances or erect improvements thereon,

(B) operate or improve the operation of farms not larger than family-sized,

(C) participate in cooperative associations, or

(D) finance nonagricultural enterprises which will enable such families to supplement their income; and

(2) loans to such families, having a maximum maturity of 15 years and in amounts not exceeding $2,500 in the aggregate to any family at any one time, for the purpose set forth in subparagraph (a)(1)(D) of this section.

(b) Grants under this section shall be made only if the family is not qualified to obtain such funds by loan under other Federal programs: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the making of grants where appropriate in combination with or as supplements to loans made under this program or other Federal programs.

FAMILY FARM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS

SEC. 303. (a) The Director is authorized to cooperate with, furnish technical assistance to, and otherwise assist in the organization of public or private nonprofit corporations having as their objective the improvement of the productivity and income of low-income farmers. Such corporations shall be eligible for assistance under this section if they are organized for the purpose of and have the power to acquire real property or any interest therein in rural areas, to develop or reconstitute such real property into units not larger than family farms, including necessary fences, farm buildings, land and water development, and related facilities, and to sell the farms so developed or reconstituted to low-income farm families at prices equal to their appraised value when used for agricultural purposes and in a manner that the Director determines will further the purposes of this title.

(b) The Director may prescribe such rules and regulations regarding the organization, financial resources, operations, and activities of such corporations as he deems appropriate.

(c) The Director is authorized to purchase the obligations of, or make loans to, such corporations upon such terms and conditions as he may determine subject to the limitations of sections 305 and 306.

(d) The Director is authorized to make grants to such corporations in amounts sufficient to make up the deficiency between the cost of the farms developed or reconstituted by them and the net proceeds received from the sale of such farms at the prices specified in subsection (a).

COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS

SEC. 304. The Director is authorized to make loans to local cooperative associations furnishing essential production, processing, purchasing, or marketing services, supplies, or facilities predominantly to low-income rural families.

LIMITATIONS ON ASSISTANCE

SEC. 305. No financial or other assistance shall be provided under this title unless the Director determines that—

(a) the providing of such assistance will materially further the purposes of this title, and

(b) in the case of assistance provided pursuant to sections 303 and 304, the applicant is fulfilling or will fulfill a need for services, facilities, or activities which is not otherwise being met.

LOAN TERMS AND CONDITIONS

SEC. 306. Loans made pursuant to sections 302, 303, and 304 (including obligations purchased pursuant to section 303) shall have such terms and conditions as the Director shall determine, subject to the following limitations:

(a) there is reasonable assurance of repayment of the loan;

(b) the credit is not otherwise available on reasonable terms from private sources or other Federal, State, or local programs;

(c) the amount of the loan, together with other funds available, is adequate to assure completion of the project or achievement of the purposes for which loan is made;

(d) the loan bears interest at a rate not less than (1) a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the average market yield on outstanding Treasury obligations of comparable maturity, plus (2) such additional charge, if any, toward covering other costs of the program as the Director may determine to be consistent with its purposes; and

(e) with respect to loans made pursuant to sections 303 and 304, the loan is repayable within not more than 30 years.

TITLE IV—EMPLOYMENT AND INVESTMENT INCENTIVES

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 401. It is the purpose of this title to provide new training and employment opportunities for long-term unemployed persons; to assist in the establishment, preservation, and strengthening of small business concerns and improve the managerial skills employed in such enterprises; and to mobilize for these objectives private as well as public managerial skills and resources.

PART A—INCENTIVES FOR EMPLOYMENT OF LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED PERSONS

LOANS, PARTICIPATIONS, AND GUARANTIES

SEC. 411. (a) The Director is authorized to make, participate (on an immediate basis) in, or guarantee loans to private borrowers, repayable in not more than twenty-five years, when he determines that such financial assistance will result in stable employment for persons not already employed by the borrower, a majority of whom will be recruited from among the long-term unemployed and members of low-income families.

(b) The amount of any loan, participation, or guaranty made hereunder shall not exceed an amount equal to $10,000 multiplied by the number of persons to be employed by the borrower as a result of the financial assistance.

LIMITATIONS ON FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 412. No financial assistance shall be extended pursuant to this part unless—

(a) the Director determines that the assistance will not be used in relocating establishments from one area to another; and

(b) the assistance is extended in accordance with and as part of a community action program approved pursuant to title II of this Act.

PROVISION FOR LOSSES ON GUARANTEES

SEC. 413. The Director shall make a reasonable provision for possible losses with respect to guaranties under this part, but such provision shall be not less than 15 per centum of the guarantees in force at any time. The amounts so provided and set aside within appropriations shall be considered to constitute obligations for purposes of section 1311 of the Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1955 (31 U.S.C. 200).

LOAN TERMS AND CONDITIONS

SEC. 414. Loans made pursuant to section 411 (including immediate participations in and guaranties of such loans) shall have such terms and conditions as the Director shall determine, subject to the following limitations:

(a) there is reasonable assurance of repayment of the loan;

35-831 O—64——4

(b) the financial assistance is not otherwise available on reasonable terms from private sources or other Federal, State, or local programs;

(c) the amount of the loan, together with other funds available, is adequate to assure completion of the project or achievement of the purposes for which the loan is made;

(d) the loan bears interest at a rate not less than (1) a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the average market yield on outstanding Treasury obligations of comparable maturity, plus (2) such additional charge, if any, toward covering other costs of the program as the Director may determine to be consistent with its purposes: Provided, however, That the rate of interest charged on loans made in redevelopment areas designated under the Area Redevelopment Act (42 U.S.C. 2501 et seq.) shall not exceed the rate currently applicable to new loans made under section 6 of that Act (42 U.S.C. 2505); and

(e) fees not in excess of amounts necessary to cover administrative expenses and probable losses may be required on loan guarantees.

Part B—Small Business Loans

LOANS, PARTICIPATIONS, AND GUARANTEES

Sec. 421. The Director is authorized to make, participate (on an immediate basis) in, or guarantee loans, repayable in not more than fifteen years, to any small business concern (as defined in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632) and regulations issued thereunder), or to any qualified person seeking to establish such a concern, when he determines that such loans will assist in carrying out the purposes of this title: Provided, however, That no such loans shall be made, participated in, or quaranteed if the total of such Federal assistance to a single borrower outstanding at any one time would exceed $15,000. The Director may defer payments on the principal of such loans for a grace period and use such other methods as he deems necessary and appropriate to assure the successful establishment and operation of such concern. The Director may, in his discretion, as a condition of such financial assistance, require that the borrower take steps to improve his management skills by participating in a management training program approved by the Director. The Director shall encourage, as far as possible, the participation of the private business community in the program of assistance to such concerns.

COORDINATION WITH COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS

Sec. 422. No financial assistance shall be provided under section 421 in any community for which the Director has approved a community action program pursuant to title II of this Act unless such financial assistance is determined by him to be consistent with such program.

FINANCING UNDER SMALL BUSINESS ACT

Sec. 423. Such lending and guarantee functions under this part as may be delegated to the Small Business Administration may be financed with funds appropriated to the revolving fund established by section 4(c) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 633 (c)) for the purposes of sections 7(a), 7(b), and 8(a) of that Act (15 U.S.C. 636(a), 636(b), 637(a)).

LOAN TERMS AND CONDITIONS

SEC. 424. Loans made pursuant to section 421 (including immediate participations in and guarantees of such loans) shall have such terms and conditions as the Director shall determine, subject to the limitations set forth in paragraphs (a) through (e) of section 414.

TITLE V—FAMILY UNITY THROUGH JOBS

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 501. It is the purpose of this title to expand the opportunities for constructive work experience and other needed training or basic education available to persons who are unable to support or care for their families.

PAYMENTS FOR EXPERIMENTAL, PILOT, AND DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

SEC. 502. In order to stimulate the adoption by States of programs designed to help unemployed fathers and other members of needy families with children to secure and retain employment or to attain or retain capability for self-support or personal independence, the Director is authorized to transfer funds appropriated or allocated to carry out the purposes of this title to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to enable him to make payments for experimental, pilot, or demonstration projects under section 1115 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1315), in addition to the sums otherwise available pursuant thereto. The costs of such projects to the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1965, shall, notwithstanding the provisions of such Act, be met entirely from funds appropriated or allocated to carry out the purposes of this title.

TITLE VI—ADMINISTRATION AND COORDINATION

PART A—ADMINISTRATION

OFFICE OF ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY

SEC. 601. (a) There is hereby established in the Executive Office of the President the Office of Economic Opportunity. The Office shall be headed by a Director who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. There shall also be in the Office four Deputy Directors who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Deputy Directors shall perform such functions as the Director may from time to time prescribe.

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 5(b) of the Reorganization Act of 1949 (5 U.S.C. 133z–3(b)), at any time after one year from the date of enactment hereof the President may, by complying with the procedures established by that Act, provide for the transfer of the Office from the Executive Office of the President and for its establishment elsewhere in the Executive Branch as he deems appropriate.

(c) Section 103(a) of the Federal Executive Pay Act of 1956 (5 U.S.C. 2202(a)) is amended by adding the following clause thereto:

"(6) Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity."

(d) Section 105 of the Federal Executive Pay Act of 1956 (5 U.S.C. 2204) is amended by adding the following clause thereto:

"(32) Deputy Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity."

(e) Section 106(a) of the Federal Executive Pay Act of 1956 (5 U.S.C. 2205(a)) is amended by adding the following clause thereto:

"(52) Deputy Directors of the Office of Economic Opportunity (3)."

AUTHORITY OF DIRECTOR

SEC. 602. In addition to the authority conferred upon him by other sections of this Act, the Director is authorized, in carrying out his functions under this Act, to—

(a) appoint in accordance with the civil service laws such personnel as may be necessary to enable the Office to carry out its functions, and, except as otherwise provided herein, fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1949 (5 U.S.C. 1071 et seq.);

(b) employ experts and consultants or organizations thereof as authorized by section 15 of the Act of August 2, 1946 (5 U.S.C. 55a), compensate individuals so employed at rates not in excess of $100 per diem, including travel time, and allow them, while away from their homes or regular places of business, travel expenses (including per diem in lieu of subsistence) as authorized by law (5 U.S.C. 73b–2) for persons in the Government service employed intermittently, while so employed: Provided, however, That contracts for such employment may be renewed annually;

(c) appoint, without regard to the civil service laws, one or more advisory committees composed of such private citizens and officials of the Federal, State and local governments as he deems desirable to advise him with respect to his functions under this Act; and members of such committees (including the National Advisory Council established in section 605), other than those regularly employed by the Federal Government, while attending meetings of such committees or otherwise serving at the request of the Director, shall be entitled to receive compensation and travel expenses as provided in subsection (b) with respect to experts and consultants;

(d) with the approval of the President, arrange with and reimburse the heads of other Federal agencies for the performance of any of his functions under this Act and, as necessary or appropriate, delegate any of his powers under this Act and authorize the redelegation thereof;

(e) utilize, with their consent, the services and facilities of Federal agencies without reimbursement, and, with the consent of any State or a political subdivision of a State, accept and utilize the services and facilities of the agencies of such State or subdivision without reimbursement;

(f) accept in the name of the Office, and employ or dispose of in furtherance of the purposes of this Act, or of any title thereof, any money or property, real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible, received by gift, devise, bequest, or otherwise;

(g) accept voluntary and uncompensated services, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3679(b) of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 665(b));

(h) allocate and expend, or transfer to other Federal agencies for expenditure, funds made available under this Act as he deems necessary to carry out the provisions hereof, including (without regard to the provisions of section 4774(d) of title 10, United States Code) expenditures for construction, repairs, and capital improvements;

(i) disseminate, without regard to the provisions of section 321n of title 39, United States Code, data and information, in such form as he shall deem appropriate, to public agencies, private organizations, and the general public;

(j) adopt an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed;

(k) notwithstanding any other provision of law relating to the acquisition, handling, or disposal of real or personal property by the United States, deal with, complete, rent, renovate, modernize, or sell for cash or credit at his discretion any properties acquired by him in connection with loans, participations, and guarantees made by him pursuant to titles III and IV of this Act;

(l) collect or compromise all obligations to or held by him and all legal or equitable rights accruing to him in connection with the payment of obligations until such time as such obligations may be referred to the Attorney General for suit or collection; and

(m) establish such policies, standards, criteria, and procedures, prescribe such rules and regulations, enter into such contracts and agreements with public agencies and private organizations and persons, make such payments (in lump sum or installments, and in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in the case of grants, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments), and generally perform such functions and take such steps as he may deem to be necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act.

VOLUNTEERS FOR AMERICA

SEC. 603. (a) The Director is authorized to recruit, select, train, and—

(1) upon request, refer volunteers to perform duties in furtherance of programs of assistance at a State or local level; and

(2) in cooperation with other Federal, State, or local agencies involved, assign volunteers to work (A) in meeting the health and education needs of Indians living on reservations, of migratory workers and their families, or of residents of the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands; (B) in the care and rehabilitation of the mentally ill and mentally retarded under treatment at nonprofit mental health facilities assisted in their construction or operation by Federal funds; and (C) in furtherance of Federally-operated programs or activities authorized by Titles I and II of this Act.

(b) The referral or assignment of volunteers shall be on such terms and conditions as the Director may determine, but volunteers shall not be referred or assigned to duties or work in any State without the consent of the Governor.

(c) The Director is authorized to provide to all volunteers during training and to volunteers assigned pursuant to subsection (a)(2) such stipend, not to exceed $50 per month, such living, travel, and leave allowances, and such housing, transportation (including travel to and from the place of training), supplies, equipment, subsistence, clothing, and health and dental care as the Director may deem necessary or appropriate for their needs.

(d) Volunteers shall be deemed not to be Federal employees and shall not be subject to the provisions of laws relating to Federal employment, including those relating to hours of work, rates of compensation, leave, unemployment compensation, and Federal employee benefits, except that all volunteers during training and such volunteers as are assigned pursuant to subsection (a)(2) shall be deemed Federal employees to the same extent as enrollees of the Corps under section 107 (b), (c), and (d) of this Act.

ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY COUNCIL

SEC. 604. (a) There is hereby established an Economic Opportunity Council, which shall consult with and advise the Director in carrying out his functions, including the coordination of anti-poverty efforts by all segments of the Federal Government.

(b) The Council shall include the Director, who shall be Chairman, the Secretary of Defense, the Attorney General, the Secretaries of the Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, and Health, Education, and Welfare, the Housing and Home Finance Administrator, the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, the Director of Selective Service, and such other agency heads as the President may designate, or delegates thereof.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL

SEC. 605. There is hereby established in the Office a National Advisory Council. The Council shall be composed of the Director, who shall be Chairman, and not more than fourteen additional members appointed by the President, without regard to the civil service laws, who shall be representative of the public in general and appropriate fields of endeavor related to the purposes of this Act. Upon the request of the Director, the Council shall review the operations and activities of the Office, and shall make such recommendations with respect thereto as are appropriate. The Council shall meet at least once each year and at such other times as the Director may request.

REVOLVING FUND

SEC. 606. (a) To carry out the lending and guaranty functions authorized unter titles III and IV of this Act, there is authorized to be established a revolving fund. The capital of the fund shall consist of such amounts as may be advanced to it by the Director from funds appropriated pursuant to section 701 and shall remain available until expended.

(b) The Director shall pay into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury, at the close of each fiscal year, interest on the capital of the fund at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the average market yield on outstanding Treasury obligations of comparable maturity during the last month of the preceding fiscal year. Interest payments may be deferred with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but any interest payments so deferred shall themselves bear interest.

(c) Whenever any capital in the fund is determined by the Director to be in excess of current needs, such capital shall be credited to the appropriation from which advanced, where it shall be held for future advances.

(d) Receipts from any lending and guaranty operations under this Act (except operations under part B of title IV carried on by the Small Business Administration) shall be credited to the fund. The fund shall be available for the payment of all expenditures of the Director for loans, participations, and guaranties authorized under titles III and IV of this Act.

REPORTS

SEC. 607. Not later than one hundred twenty days after the close of each fiscal year, the Director shall prepare and submit to the President for transmittal to the Congress a full and complete report on the activities of the Office during such year.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 608. As used in this Act—

(a) The term "State" means a State, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia, Guam, American Samoa, or the Virgin Islands, and the term "United States," when used in a geographical sense, includes the foregoing and all other places, continental or insular, including the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

(b) The term "agency," unless the context requires otherwise, means department, agency, or other component of a Federal, State, or local governmental entity.

PART B—COORDINATION OF ANTI-POVERTY PROGRAMS

COORDINATION

SEC. 611. In order to insure that all Federal programs related to the purposes of this Act are carried out in a coordinated manner—

(a) the Director is authorized to call upon other Federal agencies to supply such statistical data, program reports, and other materials as he deems necessary to discharge his responsibilities under this Act, and to assist the President in coordinating the anti-poverty efforts of all Federal agencies;

(b) Federal agencies which are engaged in administering programs related to the purposes of this Act, or which otherwise perform functions relating thereto, shall

(1) cooperate with the Director in carrying out his duties and responsibilities under this Act, and

(2) carry out their programs and exercise their functions in such manner as will, to the maximum extent permitted by other applicable law, assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act; and

(c) the President may direct that particular programs and functions, including the expenditure of funds, of the Federal agencies referred to in subsection (b) shall be carried out, to the extent not inconsistent with other applicable law, in conjunction with or in support of programs authorized under this Act.

PREFERENCE TO COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS

SEC. 612. To the extent feasible and consistent with the provisions of law governing any Federal program and with the purposes of this Act, the head of each Federal agency administering any Federal program is directed to give preference to any application for assistance or benefits which is made pursuant to or in connection with a community action program approved pursuant to Title II of this Act.

INFORMATION CENTER

SEC. 613. In order to insure that all Federal programs related to the purposes of this Act are utilized to the maximum extent possible, and to insure that information concerning such programs and other relevant information is readily available in one place to public officials and other interested persons, the Director is authorized as he deems appropriate to collect, prepare, analyze, correlate, and distribute such information, either free of charge or by sale at cost (any funds so received to be deposited to the Director's account as an offset to such cost), and make arrangements and pay for any printing and binding without regard to the provisions of any other law or regulation.

TITLE VII—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 701. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Director for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1965, the sum of $962,500,000, and thereafter such sums as are necessary to carry out this Act, to be available until expended.

[The following section-by-section analysis was prepared by the Office of the Legal Counsel, U. S. Department of Justice]

ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1964

Section-by-Section Analysis

The proposed bill is entitled the "Economic Opportunity Act of 1964."

Section 2 of the bill declares that it is the policy of the United States to eliminate the paradox of poverty in the midst of plenty in this Nation by opening to everyone opportunities for education, training, work, and a life of decency and dignity, and that the purpose of the act is to strengthen, supplement, and coordinate efforts in furtherance of that policy.

TITLE I—YOUTH PROGRAMS

Title I provides three separate programs for youth—a Job Corps, work-training programs, and work-study programs.

PART A—JOB CORPS

Section 101 declares that the purpose of this part is to increase the employability of youths aged 16 to 21 by providing them in residential centers with education, vocational training, useful work experience, and other appropriate activities.

Section 102 establishes a Job Corps within the Office of Economic Opportunity created by title VI.

Section 103 authorizes the Director of the Office to (a) enter into agreements with public or private organizations for the provision of necessary facilities and services; (b) provide education and vocational training to enrollees in the Corps or arrange for their provision by public educational agencies; (c) provide useful work experience; (d) furnish health services; and (e) prescribe rules and regulations to govern the Corps.

Section 104 provides that the Corps shall be composed of males aged 16 through 21 who are permanent residents of the United States. Participation in the Corps shall not relieve an enrollee of his Selective Service obligations. Enrollment shall be for a maximum of 2 years except as the Director may determine in special cases.

Section 105 provides for living allowances and maintenance of enrollees. Upon termination of enrollment, each enrollee shall receive a readjustment allowance amounting to not more than $50 per month for each month of satisfactory participation in the Corps. However, under circumstances determined by the Director, up to $25 per month of the readjustment allowance may be paid directly to a dependent of an enrollee during his period of service in the Corps, and any such payments shall be matched by the Director.

Section 106 contains technical material concerning the application to enrollees of provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, Social Security Act, Federal Employees' Compensation Act, and the Federal Tort Claims Act. Personnel of the uniformed services working for health, vocational rehabilitation, housing, home management, and welfare.

Subsection (b) requires that any assisted elementary or secondary school education program shall be administered by public educational agencies but shall be available to all children regardless of whether they are regularly enrolled in the public schools.

Subsection (c) authorizes assistance for antipoverty activities in a community without a community action program, if a representative group is developing such a program and if such assistance will further the purposes of title II. After June 30, 1965, such assistance in any fiscal year shall not exceed 20 percent of the sums appropriated or allocated to title II for such year.

Subsection (d) lists factors to be considered by the Director in determining whether to extend assistance to a community.

Subsection (e) requires the Director to give special considerations to programs which give promise of effecting a permanent increase in the capacity of those aided to deal with their problems without further assistance.

Section 205 authorizes the Director to provide technical assistance to communities in developing and administering community action programs and training for specialized personnel.

Section 206 authorizes the Director to conduct or contract for research, training, and demonstrations pertaining to the purposes of title II, but expenditures for such activities in any fiscal year shall not exceed 15 percent of the sums appropriated or allocated to title II for such year.

Section 207 sets limits on the amount of Federal assistance that can be extended under sections 203 and 204. Such assistance paid for the period ending 2 years after the enactment of the act, or June 30, 1966, whichever is later, shall not exceed 90 percent of the costs referred to in these sections, and thereafter shall not exceed 75 percent of such costs, unless the Director determines, pursuant to objective criteria, that greater percentages are required. Non-Federal contributions may be in cash or in kind. The non-Federal expenditures or contributions for a community action program or component thereof shall be in addition to the aggregate expenditures or contributions from non-Federal sources being made for similar purposes before Federal assistance was extended.

Section 208 requires the Director to establish procedures for effective State participation in community action programs, including the referral of applications for Federal assistance to the Governor for comment. The Director is authorized to reimburse State agencies for their expenses in providing technical assistance relating to community action programs.

Section 209 requires the Director to establish criteria to achieve an equitable distribution of assistance under title II among the States and between urban and rural areas and sets forth certain factors that are to be considered. Not more than 12½ percent of the sums appropriated or allocated for any fiscal year to title II shall be used for assistance under sections 203 and 204 within any one State.

Section 210 requires the Director, in extending assistance under other titles of the act, to give preference, to the extent feasible, to programs and projects which are components of an approved community action program.

TITLE III—SPECIAL PROGRAMS TO COMBAT POVERTY IN RURAL AREAS

Section 301 declares that the purpose of the title is to meet some of the special problems of rural poverty and thereby to raise and maintain the income and living standards of low-income rural families.

Section 302 authorizes the Director to make grants and loans to such families. Grants up to $1,500 may be made where they have a reasonable possibility of effecting a permanent increase in the income of such families by assisting them to acquire or improve real estate, to improve the operation of family-sized farms, to participate in cooperatives, or to finance nonagricultural enterprises to supplement income. Fifteen-year loans up to $2,500 in the aggregate may also be made for this last purpose.

Section 303 authorizes the Director to make loans to and otherwise assist corporations if they are organized to acquire real property in rural areas, to develop or reconstitute such property in units not larger than family farms, and to sell such farms to low-income farm families at appraised value for agricultural purposes. Section 303 also authorizes the Director to make grants sufficient to make up the deficiency between the cost of such farms to the corporation and the net proceeds from their sale.

Section 304 authorizes loans to cooperative associations furnishing essential services, supplies, or facilities predominantly to low-income rural families.

Section 305 conditions assistance under the title upon a determination by the Director that such assistance will materially further the purposes of the title and, in the case of a corporation or cooperative, that the applicant will fulfill a need not otherwise being met.

Section 306 provides that loans under the title shall have such terms and conditions as the Director determines, subject to (a) reasonable assurance of repayment, (b) credit not otherwise being available on reasonable terms, (c) assurance of completion of the project for which the loan is made, (d) interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, plus a possible additional charge to cover costs, and (e) a term of not more than 30 years (except for the 15-year loans provided for in section 302).

TITLE IV—EMPLOYMENT AND INVESTMENT INCENTIVES

Section 401 declares that the purpose of the title is to provide new training and employment opportunities for long-term unemployed persons; to assist small business concerns and improve the managerial skills used therein; and to mobilize for these objectives private as well as public managerial skills and resources.

PART A—INCENTIVES FOR EMPLOYMENT OF LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED

Section 411 authorizes the Director to make or guarantee 25-year loans which will result in stable employment for persons not already employed by the borrower, a majority of whom will be recruited from among the long-term unemployed and members of low-income families. Any such loan shall not exceed an amount equal to $10,000 multiplied by the number of persons to be employed by the borrower as a result of the loan.

Section 412 limits such assistance to cases where it will not be used to relocate establishments and where it is part of an approved community action program.

Section 413 requires the Director to make provision for losses on loan guarantees.

Section 414 provides that such loans and guarantees shall have terms and conditions determined by the Director, subject to (a) reasonable assurance of repayment, (b) financial assistance not otherwise being available on reasonable terms, (c) assurance of completion of the project for which the loan is made, (d) interest calculated in general at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, plus a possible additional charge to cover costs and (e) the right on loan guarantees to require fees to cover administrative expenses and probable losses.

PART B—SMALL BUSINESS LOANS

Section 421 authorizes the Director to make or guarantee 15-year, $15,000 loans to small business concerns or to persons seeking to establish such concerns, where such loans will assist in carrying out the purposes of title IV. The Director may require a borrower to participate in a management training program as a condition of a loan.

Section 422 provides that no assistance may be provided under section 421 in a community with an approved community action program unless consistent with that program.

Section 423 authorizes any functions under this part which are delegated to the Small Business Administration to be financed through its revolving fund.

Section 424 provides that loans under this part (including participations and guarantees) shall have such terms and conditions as the Director shall determine, subject to the five limitations set forth in section 414.

TITLE V—FAMILY UNITY THROUGH JOBS

Section 501 declares that the purpose of the title is to expand the opportunities for work, training and basic education for those who are unable to support or care for their families.

Section 502 provides that in order to stimulate States to adopt programs to help unemployed fathers and other members of needy families with children to secure employment or otherwise attain capability for self-support, the Director is authorized to transfer to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare funds to make payments for experimental, pilot, or demonstration projects under section 1115 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1315).

TITLE VI—ADMINISTRATION AND COORDINATION

PART A—ADMINISTRATION

Section 601 establishes the Office of Economic Opportunity in the Executive Office of the President. After 1 year, the President may provide for the transfer of the Office elsewhere in the executive branch by complying with the procedures of the Reorganization Act of 1949. The Office shall have a Director and four Deputy Directors, who shall be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Director shall receive a salary of $22,500; one Deputy Director shall receive a salary of $20,500 and the other three a salary of $20,000.

Section 602 authorizes the Director to: (a) appoint personnel in accordance with the civil service laws and fix their compensation; (b) employ experts and consultants; (c) appoint and compensate members of advisory committees; (d) with the approval of the President, arrange for other Federal agencies to carry out functions under the act and, as necessary, delegate his powers; (e) utilize, with their consent, the services and facilities of other Federal, State, and local agencies, without reimbursement; (f) accept, use, and dispose of gifts and bequests; (g) accept voluntary services; (h) allocate and expend, or transfer to other Federal agencies for expenditure, funds made available under the act; (i) disseminate data and information without regard to certain postal restrictions; (j) adopt an official seal; (k) deal with property acquired on loans and guarantees; (l) collect and compromise obligations; and (m) establish policies, prescribe rules and regulations, and generally take such steps as are appropriate to carry out the act.

Section 603 authorizes the Director to recruit, select, and train volunteers for America. Upon request, he may refer volunteers to work on programs of assistance at a local level. He may assign volunteers to work (a) in meeting the health and education needs of Indians, migratory workers, and residents of certain areas under Federal jurisdiction, (b) in nonprofit mental health facilities assisted by Federal funds, and (c) in federally operated programs or activities under titles I and II of the act. No volunteers may work in any State without the consent of the Governor. The Director may provide to all volunteers during training and to assigned volunteers a stipend up to $50 a month, together with living allowances and maintenance. Volunteers shall be deemed not to be Federal employees except that all volunteers during training and assigned volunteers shall be deemed Federal employees to the same extent as enrollees in the Job Corps.

Section 604 establishes an Economic Opportunity Council to consult with and advise the Director on his functions, including that of coordinating all Federal antipoverty efforts. The Council shall include the Director and other appropriate Cabinet officers and agency heads, or delegates thereof.

Section 605 establishes a National Advisory Council, to consist of the Director and not more than 14 additional members, appointed by the President, to represent the general public and fields of endeavor related to the act. At the Director's request, the Council shall review the operations of the Office and make recommendations.

Section 606 establishes a revolving fund for loans and guarantees under titles III and IV and contains provisions for its operation.

Section 607 provides that within 120 days after each fiscal year, the Director shall submit a report for transmittal to the Congress.

Section 608 defines the terms "State," "United States," and "agency" as used in the act.

PART B—COORDINATION OF ANTIPOVERTY PROGRAMS

Section 611 contains provisions to insure that all Federal antipoverty programs are carried out in a coordinated manner. Subsection (a) authorizes the Director to call on other Federal agencies for data, reports, and other materials, and to assist the President in coordinating the antipoverty efforts of all Federal agencies. Subsection (b) requires Federal agencies to cooperate with the Director. Subsection (c) authorizes the President to direct that particular programs and functions, including the expenditure of funds, shall be carried out to support programs under the act.

Section 612 directs each Federal agency head administering any Federal program to give preference to applications for assistance made under an approved community action program.

Section 613 provides that to insure that information about Federal antipoverty programs is readily available in one place to public officials and others, the Director may collect, prepare, analyze, correlate, and distribute (free or at cost) information concerning such programs.

TITLE VII—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Section 701 authorizes an appropriation to the Director for fiscal 1965 of $962,500,000, and thereafter such sums as may be necessary, to be available until expended.

THE WAR ON POVERTY

A Congressional Presentation, March 17, 1964

Introduction

When Americans look at themselves today, they cannot help seeing a reflection of growing affluence and optimism. The image is thrown back from every side.

Their income level is at an all-time high; their purchasing power is vigorous. They drive one or more cars, watch one or more television sets, own one or more telephones. They have added freezers to their refrigerators, automatic dryers to their automatic washers, swimming pools to their backyards, air conditioners to their homes and cars; and they have more time than ever to switch off the appliances and get away from it all. They are coming, in fact, to regard the uses of leisure as a serious problem.

For the average school child, the prospect has never seemed brighter. He knows he can go through high school without having to help support his parents. If he chooses, he can attend a city or community college, or a State university, pursue the course of study he selects, and find his place in the constantly expanding business, scientific, academic, or cultural community in the richest Nation on earth. His children, he feels, will have at least equal opportunities—or better.

This is the image of America that is seen from abroad, and that Americans themselves see—a reflection of the vast progress our economy has made in the past three decades. There is dramatic evidence of this progress in the fact that while the total number of families in the United States increased by 10 million during the last 15 years, the total number of families with income of less than $3,000 dropped by 2.6 million.

But in spite of this, there remains an unseen America, a land of limited opportunity and restricted choice. In it live nearly 10 million families who try to find shelter, feed and clothe their children, stave off disease and malnutrition, and somehow build a better life on less than $60 a week. Almost two-thirds of these families struggle to get along on less than $40 a week.

These are the people behind the American looking glass. There are nearly 35 million of them. Being poor is not a choice for these millions; it is a rigid way of life. It is handed down from generation to generation in a cycle of inadequate education, inadequate homes, inadequate jobs, and stunted ambitions. It is a peculiar axiom of poverty that the poor are poor because they earn little, and they also earn little because they are poor. For the rebel who seeks a way out of this closed circle, there is little help. The communities of the poor generally have the poorest schools, the scarcest opportunities for training. The poor citizen lacks organization, endures sometimes arbitrary impingement on his rights by courts and law enforcement agencies; cannot make his protest heard or has stopped protesting.

A spirit of defeatism often pervades his life and remains the only legacy for his children.

If the American economy can be compared to a 20-story luxury apartment house where even the ground floor tenants share the comforts, then this one-fifth of our population inhabits a subbasement, out of sight, and almost out of mind.

Thirty years ago, it was simple enough to recognize the poor, on street corners, in doorways, and breadlines everywhere. In 1964, one needs an economic road map to find them. For today's poor are a mixed group. They include—

The children of poverty.
Those bypassed by industrial change.
Rural families.
Minority group members.
Fatherless families.
The aged.

This is not an all-inclusive list. There are some who fit none of these descriptions, and certainly many who do fit them are not poor. But it is safe to say that most of the poor share one or more of these characteristics, and together, they constitute what must be recognized, even by the skeptical, as a stubborn core of poverty in the United States.

The children of poverty

Patterns of poverty are established early in life. Thousands of children grow up in homes where education, ambition, and hope are as scarce as money. Many of these children attend school with little incentive or guidance from home to get them through. They drop out as soon as the law permits, or sooner. Others fail to attend school at all.

By the time such children reach 16, they begin a lifelong drift through a series of low-skill or no-skill jobs that grow increasingly harder to find as automation spreads through business and industry. Some who can't find jobs at all turn to drug addiction, petty crime, then major crime.

But most simply find a niche of minimum usefulness to themselves and society, where they may cling for the rest of their lives. They need opportunities for escape, but first, their attitudes have to be rebuilt, in a sense, from the ground up. For poverty can be a state of mind, and many of these young people feel already defeated.

Another group falls in with this youthful army of the poor who form ranks in city slums and rural backwaters across the Nation. These are children of poor families who grow up with the motivation and the ambition, but not the opportunities. If they get through high school they are unable to find part-time work to help them meet college expenses, or to help them contribute to needed support at home.

There are, in all, 11 million children among the 35 million poor of this Nation. The leading edge of the postwar wave of infants has been reaching the critical 16-to-21 age bracket for the past few years. There are 5.5 million in this bracket now. In a single month last fall, 730,000 of them were unemployed and not registered in schools. By 1970 there will be over 7 million in the 16-to-21 group, and unless the trend is reversed the number of youths not working and not attending schools can be expected to total well over a million.

The bypassed

Unparalleled technical advances in America have brought to most of our labor force and their families a standard of living undreamed of 30 years ago. But for a considerable minority it has brought considerably less.

There are thousands who are simply bypassed by modern technological advances. They are unable to secure regular employment in an economy which increasingly creates jobs beyond their meager skills and education.

There is also the semiskilled or unskilled worker, suddenly displaced from his job as the plant relocates, or as the machine takes over, who faces weeks or months of unemployment, or a forced retirement. Following a plant closing in Trenton in October 1961, 1,900 employees—almost two-thirds of the work force—were still unemployed and looking for work 9 months later. In Sioux City, Iowa, 40 percent of the former employees remained unemployed 6 months after the June 1963 closing of their plant. In Iron City, Wis., a mine closed in August of 1962, leaving about 40 percent of the miners still looking for work 9 months later. In Fargo, N. Dak., a third of the former employees were still unemployed a year after their plant closed.

Some of these workers, who have nontransferable skills or are "too old" at 40 or 50 to be reabsorbed, are unable to get regular jobs or, in many cases, any work at all. They find themselves in a downward spiral that pulls their children down with them. Still others, somewhat luckier, are able to find steady work, but in low-pay occupations and industries, at wage rates which are insufficient to keep the family out of the grip of poverty.

Millions of workers inhabit this economic underworld of the bypassed.

The rural poor

Our technological upheaval has cast off another luckless group—the small farmer and the surrounding community which depends on his solvency. Some farmers have ridden the tides of our economic growth to unprecedented farm income levels. But many more, caught between falling agricultural prices and soaring investment costs, have found themselves in a trap that appears to offer no escape except perhaps to an unpromising new life in an urban slum.

One and a half million rural farm families live on less than $250 a month; 2.8 million other rural families in nonfarm occupations struggle along at the same income level. Over a million of these rural families must somehow stretch $80 a month to cover their needs. For the children of these families, without shoes or clothes for school, without money for school supplies or lunches, even primary education becomes a luxury. Nearly half a million of these rural youths between the ages of 14 and 24 have completed no more than sixth grade. Their horizons thus stop at the edge of a few acres of exhausted land.

Nowhere is the irony of the poor being furnished with the poorest services more poignant than in the rural areas. Here are found the one-room schoolhouse held together by a single overburdened teacher, the families too isolated to avail themselves of health services, the homesteads unable to apply the benefits of agricultural research.

Many rural farm families find that even a semibarren piece of land offers them more certitude than the prospect of a new life in a strange environment. With limited education or skills, or failing health, they have no choice but to squeeze some sustenance from the land they know.

Others have already joined the vanguard of an unhappy exodus, a growing legion of unskilled, uneducated workers who come to the city in search of something they may not find: better opportunities. Often they find they have accomplished nothing but a relocation of their poverty.

The minority poor

There is a substantial segment of the poor in this country who need not puzzle over the complicated economics of poverty. They are the minority group poor. For them the equations are simpler. They are hired last, paid less, and fired first. They work mainly in the low-pay occupations, and in those, get lower pay then their white counterparts. The Negro college graduate can expect to earn only as much income as the white worker who never went beyond the eighth grade; in comparable occupations, the white man can expect to earn almost 50 percent more in his lifetime than the Negro and the Puerto Rican, almost one-third more than the Spanish-speaking American.

Eight million Negroes—nearly half the total Negro population in the United States—are poor. A third of the Negro population lives in southern cities, one-fourth on southern farms, and the balance largely in the northern cities. In both the North and the South the Negro faces the same problem: in relation to his white counterpart, he is falling further and further behind. During the fifties the average income of the Negro male improved substantially. For every dollar he earned in 1949, he earned $1.75 in 1959. But the white man running ahead of him ran a little faster. While the Negro was earning $1 in 1949, his white counterpart earned $1.90; in 1959, every time the Negro earned $1.75 the white man earned $3.20.

In 24 of the 26 States with large Negro populations, the Negro's share of per capita income fell; and in some of these States the gap between white and Negro income widened dramatically. In Michigan in 1949, when the equalizing effect of World War II was still being felt, the Negro earned 87 percent as much as the white. Ten years later he earned only 75 percent as much. In North Carolina his comparative earnings fell from 54 percent of his white counterpart's to 43 percent; in Tennessee, from 68 to 56 percent; in Arkansas, from 53 to 39 percent.

Nearly a million Puerto Ricans live in the United States today, primarily in Metropolitan New York City. Fifty-three percent of New York's Puerto Ricans earned less than $4,000 in 1959, only 8 percent earned more than $8,000. Three-quarters of them never entered high school. Moreover, the primary and junior high schools in Puerto Rican neighborhoods tend to be more crowded and less equipped than the average city school.

In the Southwestern United States live 3½ million Spanish-speaking Americans. Not only does the Spanish-American face the burdens of prejudice and inadequate education; like the Puerto Rican, he also faces a language barrier, and moreover a peculiar structure of laws, both Federal and local, which tend to isolate him even more from the opportunities of the community.

Among the poverty-stricken minorities, the American Indian is perhaps the hardest hit. Of the 550,000 American Indians, 380,000 live on or near reservations, most of them in poor circumstances. Their average family income is only a quarter to a third of the national average. Their average educational level is only half as high as the national average. And though they are American-born, go to American schools, and have received special attention from the Federal Government, social and economic barriers continue to pen them up in islands of poverty.

The fatherless families

Death, divorce, and disability often leave the same barren legacy. There are 2.3 million fatherless families in America who have inherited nothing but the father's poverty. Many of them were poor while the father was still present; some are poor because the father is disabled, or deserted or died; and some are fatherless because they are poor. Low income families often live with far more strains—financial, physical, and moral—than comfortable families, and these strains may reach the point where the father unshoulders his burden by deserting.

With a crushing responsibility suddenly thrust upon her, the mother is often too ill equipped to carry it. Frequently the presence of young children forces her to remain at home. Even if adequate day care arrangements can be made, or if the children are older, the mother may lack education, training, or experience needed to get an adequate job.

Only 16 percent of the mothers of families receiving public assistance have completed high school; less than 10 percent have had experience in office or sales work or in related occupations, as against 40 percent of mothers not on welfare. Most of these mothers of fatherless families have had experience chiefly as domestics, service workers, and unskilled laborers.

The likelihood that such mothers will find employment which will furnish the stability and income so sorely needed in the absence of an able, breadwinning father up to now has been remote. Only half the fatherless families in the Nation are above the poverty line.

The aged

Living in the United States are 6.8 million heads of families who are over 65. Half of them have incomes of less than $3,000 a year, and half of these support their families on less than $1,000 a year.

Many of the aged are ending in poverty because they began in poverty. Their income throughout their working lives was never sufficient to provide that margin of savings which affords independence and dignity after retirement.

The majority of all the aged are covered by social security. But nearly two-thirds of the poorest aged—those living alone and earning less than $1,000 a year—are not covered by social security.

The great medical advances which continually discover new ways to prolong life have assured a steady growth in the number of aged persons in our society, and accordingly a growth in the problems of the aged. During the last 15 years the number of aged heads of families increased 37 percent. It is estimated that by 1980 there will be 9 million persons over 75 in this country and if the present pattern is allowed to continue, many millions of them will be living in stark poverty.

The cost of poverty

These are the six groups from whom the community of poverty is largely drawn. Collectively the poor make up only a minority of the American population. But the costs of their poverty are shared by all Americans.

Two-thirds of poor families have an average annual income of $2,000 or less. If this could be raised to just over $3,000—above the poverty line—their total income would be $7 billion higher. Looked at in another way, if we could increase the average production of even 10 million earners among the poor enough to lift their earnings a modest $1,000 a year, the Nation would gain $14 billion of added annual output. This would mean fresh stimulus pouring into the national economy and, at the same time, a reduction of outlay for public assistance and social services which the poor receive.

If the governmental public assistance commitments could be cut by one-fourth, it could reduce the tax burden by $1 billion. And as the community of the poor diminishes, there is accordingly less need for the expansion of police, fire, and public health departments which function so busily among the poor. These services cost the Nation $8 billion annually. A 10 percent reduction in this cost, or almost $1 billion a year, is a plausible estimate of the savings that could be effected by the elimination of poverty communities.

Even apart from the moral obligation to help the poor, there is this clear dollars and cents justification for a revitalized and redirected attack on poverty. Moreover, if we raise the poor above the poverty line, all of us will benefit from their new capacity to integrate themselves into the constructive purposes of the Nation.

Clearly, much is already being done, through the efforts of Federal, State, and local governments, through religious organizations, charitable fund-raising drives, and foundations. But the castoffs, the rural poor, the racial poor, the fatherless families, and the aged have been falling further and further behind. As our wealth has grown, a dwindling portion of it has accrued to the bottom 20 percent of our income-earners during the last decade. The ratio of nonwhite to white income, which grew rapidly from 41 percent to 54 percent under the economic stimulus of World War II, continued to improve slowly and erratically during the fifties, but now has fallen back almost to the 1947 level. And during the last decade, while professional and managerial workers increased their income by over 150 percent, service workers and nonfarm laborers improved their lot by only 74 percent.

Thus the gulf between the affluent and the poor widens; and the poor—presently one-fifth of our Nation—grow less and less visible to the rest of us.

The foundations of the poverty program

The war on poverty is the oldest war in history. It is a war which cannot be won quickly—but it can be won decisively, through a concerted Federal, State, and local effort to eliminate the conditions and causes of impoverishment.

Two factors are absolutely prerequisite to success in this effort:

Our economy must remain strong and continue to develop; thereby providing maximum employment at optimum pay.

The last barriers to this maximum employment, barriers which seal off so many of our citizens from the opportunities available to the majority must be overthrown.

Already we have the broad base of the recently enacted tax cut, education and training programs, housing, welfare, and social security measures, from which to press an all-out war on an age-old enemy. In the period since 1961, such measures as the Area Redevelopment Act, the Manpower Development and Training Act, and the Vocational Education Act, have strengthened our hand.

Already we are able to visualize, on the near horizon, an America without poverty. One-fifth of the Nation—the present domain of the poor—can be reduced to one-tenth, and then to zero.

This is the first nation in history to have total victory over poverty within its power. It has greater wealth, income, technical know-how, and productive capacity than any before it. We have demonstrated our capacity to direct these resources to whatever goals we set ourselves, and to achieve them.

The goal of the program set forth in the pages that follow is the launching of this final battle against poverty.

It is a program which will—

Stimulate our communities to initiate comprehensive action programs attacking the roots of poverty.

Expand the opportunities for our youth to gain the education, skills, and experience they must have to become full participants in our Nation's life.

Help farmers to increase their income through a program of small capital loans and grants.

Provide new employment opportunities for the long-term unemployed by encouraging capital investment, and new opportunities for small entrepreneurs by making credit available.

Encourage more States to orient their programs of public assistance toward rehabilitation rather than support.

Recruit and train volunteers to work with agencies carrying out the various programs.

In short, it is a program which can open for the young, the opportunity to learn; for the able bodied, the opportunity to work; and for all, the opportunity to live in decency and dignity.

Youth—Salvaging a Vital Resource million. Next year it will be 6.6 million. By 1970, it will be 7.2 million. If the current trends continue, in 5 years we will have almost one and a half million unemployed youth—without adequate education or training, without jobs, and without a future.

In October of 1963, there were 730,000 young men and women between the ages of 16 and 21 who were both out of school and out of work. This figure had increased 22 percent in a 1-year period. But this unemployment figure for a specific week in October does not tell the whole story. Many others are employed only in low-paying, dead-end jobs which are beneath their potential abilities. A conservative estimate is that there are almost 1 million young people in this country today who are desperately in need of training and guidance to develop these abilities. Left to itself, the problem will multiply. Last year the total teenage labor force, including half a million young people in the Armed Forces, numbered 5.6

This trend must be reversed. And it can be reversed, by attacking the tight circle of poverty at its weakest point—among its young victims, whose creative energies and dreams may still be salvaged from the growing rubble of their lives.

The proposed legislation includes three different programs aimed at the attitudes and economics of the young. The first of these is a voluntary Job Corps, with camp-based programs of education and vocational training or conservation work for young men who are poorly adjusted to their homes and work. These young men cannot be helped best in programs located within their own communities. Some are in the migrant labor stream—at home nowhere. Others are outside the range of communities where adequate resources and concern exist. Still others come from impoverished rural areas and remote mountain hollows, or from city slums which have taught them only hostility to their environment. These young people must come a long way; the spark of motivation is not likely to be ignited in the same communities which have so long stifled it.

The other proposals are a work-training program, which will offer productive employment and training to those who can benefit from it in their home environments, and a work-study program, designed to enable young men and women to continue their education at the college level.

Sources and selection

One of the obstacles facing any program of assistance for the young is the problem of identifying those who need help. Nobody knows who they are. They drop out of sight as well as out of school. There is no community in this country which can say with certainty which of its young people who have left school are unable to find or keep jobs. Statistics are based on small samples, and the names are not recorded.

It will therefore be necessary to rely on many sources for the recruitment of volunteer participants in the youth programs. These will include U.S. Employment Service office referral of job applicants, school referral of dropouts, and Armed Forces Examining Center referral of registrants who fail the mental achievement test, as well as boys' clubs, churches, other public and private agencies, and public information programs.

The 1,900 local U.S. Employment Service offices of the Department of Labor, supplemented by youth guidance centers, will serve as the primary selection points. Applicants who have not been given the Armed Forces examination will be given physical and mental achievement tests comparable to those given by the selective service, interviews, and counseling. Each applicant will be counseled as to how he can best benefit from the programs available. This will include those whose home and community life is such that they can profit from participation in the work-training program, those for whom camp experience through the Job Corps is a desirable choice, and those for whom an existing program, such as the Manpower Development and Training Act, a regular job, return to school, or further counseling is the best course. Mentally retarded or emotionally unstable youths and narcotics addicts will be referred to appropriate existing rehabilitation facilities.

It is currently estimated that during its first year of operation, the Job Corps may be able to reach as many as 30,000 to 40,000 young men, half of whom will be in conservation camps of 100 to 200. It is anticipated that approximately 6,000 will be enrolled by the end of September 1964, and that the Corps can be built up at a rate of about 3,800 per month to the first-year total of 40,000. The work-training program will be able to enroll approximately 200,000 young men and women, and the work-study program some 140,000 in the first year.

JOB CORPS

The Job Corps will consist of conservation camps and training centers. The most important aspect of the experience for the enrollees will be their development as self-respecting individuals who are ready for a job or for more intensive education and skill development. In conservation camps, young men with problems of attitude and resistance to learning will be given basic skills training, as well as reading, writing, and arithmetic. The training centers will offer more intensive and advanced education and training to young men who are ready for this experience. In the long run, it is anticipated that many youths will be coming to the training centers as conservation camp "graduates." Enrollment in both types of camp will be strictly voluntary. It will normally be limited to a period of less than 2 years. Although the details of operation require further study, the following reflects current thinking on the subject:

A. Conservation camps

It is the task of the conservation camps to do far more than provide basic education, skill training, and work experience; they must change indifference to interest, ignorance to awareness, resignation to ambition, and an attitude of withdrawal to one of participation. In order to achieve this, the camps must provide a series of living, working, training, counseling, and recreational experiences, and a sense of belonging which the homes and neighborhoods rarely supplied.

The work component

Work in conservation camps will be undertaken in small supervised groups with an adult supervisor, and will be designed to give enrollees a sense of participation, self-confidence, and pride of accomplishment, as well as to give them certain basic skills. They will work under experienced members of Federal conservation agencies—such as forest and park rangers, or members of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Land Management, Reclamation, or Sports Fisheries and Wildlife—in projects which can accomplish long-needed conservation work and recreation development on public lands.

The young men who are members of conservation camps will work in carpentry and masonry; with bulldozers, axes, and shovels; and in the kitchens, offices, and maintenance shops of the camps. They will learn to use basic tools, to plan and organize work, to follow instructions, to lead and to follow.

The following list summarizes some of the types of work which may be undertaken by members of conservation camps and the types of basic skills which will be developed as a result:

Type	Work experiences
Soil and water development	Equipment operation. Basic horticulture. Basic surveying. Basic engineering.
Timber stand improvement	Forestry technician skills.
Range resource development	Weed and pest control. Farm skills. Fencing construction.
Recreation facilities	Basic carpentry. Basic masonry. Machine and equipment operation.
Wildlife habitat improvement	Wildlife aid skills. Forestry aid skills.
Insect and disease	Elementary entomology. Basic surveying.
Fire protection	Truck driving. Specialized equipment operation. Fire control aid skills. Fire prevention aid skills.
Road and trail development	Basic surveying. Basic engineering. Equipment operation. Equipment maintenance.
Boundary surveys and marking	Basic surveying.
Miscellaneous	Cooking. Typing. Recordkeeping.

Whenever possible, the young men in the camps will be placed in work groups on the basis of their skills and aptitudes as well as the particular job to be done, in order to provide a variety of work skills and situations and to enable counselors to assess the potential of each youth for future placement.

The education component

The education program in conservation camps will be designed to meet the needs of young men who are so lacking in basic academic skills that they cannot undertake vocational training. (A fifth- to sixth-grade literacy equivalency is considered necessary to profit from vocational training. An analysis of Selective Service System rejectees indicates that over half of those who fail to meet mental achievement requirements will be below this level.) Reading, writing, arithmetic, and speech will be taught, and minimum levels to be obtained are as follows:

Reading.—An ability to read and comprehend at mean seventh-grade level.

Writing.—An ability to complete, clearly and legible, application and other employment forms, to write simple letters of inquiry, and to make out orders.

Arithmetic.—An understanding and mastery of the four basic skills (addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division), common and decimal fractions, reading of scales, units of measurement.

Speaking.—An ability to be understood in employment and other conventional situations, and to understand directions.

To reach these goals, new instructional materials designed especially for the purpose will be developed. But the education component of the program cannot wait. The availability of current materials will be reviewed by the Office of Education, and those determined to be best suited will be used. Continuing evaluation of the camps' programs will provide guidance for the development of new materials.

Group discussions, films, individual counseling, and specially selected readings will be used to instill in the young men an understanding of their role as citizens and workers. The same techniques will be used to teach the fundamentals of personal health and hygiene.

Camp recreation will include hobbies and sports, designed to teach the value of learning to play by the rules and to exercise self-discipline. The emphasis will be placed on participation rather than on observance. In addition, specific all-camp activities will be held on a regular basis; singing, a camp newspaper, and amateur dramatics will be used to promote the overall purpose of the program; and a system of recognition and awards for achievement will be created.

Other aspects of camp life will also be designed to improve the attitudes of the young men involved. A typical camp might have some 5 to 10 cabins of 20 young men each, with 1 adult resident and 2 youth assistants in every cabin. This responsibility will be rotated regularly, so that each may have a chance to lead. In addition, each cabin group will elect one representative to a camp council, designed to instill an appreciation of democratic principles.

The unifying force in the life of the camp will be a counseling program, dealing with every aspect of the experience—living, work, education, and recreation. At the end of each young man's tour, the counselors will have the major responsibility for guiding him to placement opportunities or further vocational training through the U.S. Employment Service.

Staff

Each camp will have a director, who will have overall responsibility for the camp. In addition, for every 100 young men, there will be an educational and counseling staff of 4, responsible to the Deputy Director for the Job Corps through the camp director. Three of these four will be basic education teachers, and one a health and recreation teacher. Since work projects will be undertaken in small groups, each 100 enrollees will require 7 to 10 work supervisors from the staff of the conservation agency concerned. A maintenance and support staff of about five is envisaged.

The 800 education and counseling staff members required the first year will be recruited from many sources, including college placement offices, retired people, and volunteers throughout the country. These teachers will undergo a special intensive training course, currently planned to take about 4 weeks, which will prepare them for their work in the camps.

B. Training centers

Life in the training centers will be similar in many ways to life in the conservation camps, with several important differences. The centers themselves will be considerably larger, ranging in size from 500 to 5,000 enrollees, which will call for different plans for handling groups. The major emphasis of the training centers can be on vocational training and basic educational improvement in preparation for permanent employment. Although high skill levels in particular vocations will not be achieved in most cases, the program will develop work habits and an attitude toward learning which will enable the young men involved to profit from more advanced education or work experience outside the centers.

The training component

Vocational training and basic education will consume most of the day in a training center. The courses to be taught are those for which the occupational outlook is good, for which the entering skills are within the capability of the young men in the program, and which can be taught within the framework of the existing facilities.

The skills to be taught may vary from center to center, and within each occupational group, trades requiring several levels of ability may be taught. For example, in a single center some young men might be trained as calculating machine operators, others as appliance repairmen, still others as clerks.

Along with other types of facilities, unoccupied or underutilized military camps will be used for this program, under an arrangement with the Department of Defense. To the extent possible, each occupational group will be placed at a facility which is particularly suitable. For example, an automotive center might be situated in a former armored division camp which has extensive automotive facilities; a maritime and fishing trades center might be housed in a navy yard, and a machinery center might be established at an unused Army arsenal.

Basic education courses will also be given in the training centers, since the academic achievement level of many of the young men involved will not be adequate for them to get and keep jobs. The goals of the basic education component in the training centers will be the same as those in the conservation camps, but less time—about 2 hours a day—will be allotted for daily instruction.

Other components

Health training, recreation, and counseling will also play an important role in the life of the training center. The young men will be housed in barracks of approximately 200 each, under the direction of an adult leader, with 1 youth assistant for every 25 youths. Physical fitness and recreation programs will be organized by barracks groups.

Staff

It is estimated that a training center enrollment of 20,000 will require some 3,000 staff personnel, including basic education teachers, vocational teachers, health-recreation instructors, and administrative and support personnel.

C. General

Participation in the Job Corps will be on a purely voluntary basis, and members will be free to resign if they choose. It is hoped, however, that the benefits of successful participation and completion of camp training will be clear enough to the members so that resignations will be minimized. The ultimate reward will be the significant broadening of a young man's horizons. The Job Corps "diploma"—identifying specific levels of educational and occupational accomplishment—will open new doors to job and occupational opportunities. Other rewards for successful participation will include assignment of leadership roles involving an increase in pay, special privileges, and opportunities for more favorable class and work assignments.

Disciplinary measures, including expulsion from the Corps, will also be applied when necessary.

Members of the Job Corps will receive a living allowance which will range from about $30 to $50 a month, depending upon the location of the camp and the services which are provided directly. An additional sum will be paid for assigned leadership duties, and upon termination of his enrollment in the Corps, each member will receive a separation payment of $50 for each month of satisfactory participation. He may allot up to $25 of this money to a dependent, and if he does, his contribution will be matched by the Office of Economic Opportunity.

WORK-TRAINING PROGRAM

Until recently, most young men and women—whether or not they had not completed high school—could find early work experience in the unskilled jobs which abounded throughout the economy. Today, however, even as the number of young people entering the job market is increasing rapidly, the number of unskilled beginning jobs is declining. Automation, mechanization, and other scientific and technological advances have eliminated and will continue to eliminate many of the unskilled jobs which formerly served as the young person's entry into the world of work. The jobs of today and tomorrow require higher motivation, more maturity, greater judgment, and broader experience than are possessed by the thousands of actual and potential school dropouts aged 16–21 who need employment.

The work-training program, which will be administered by the Department of Labor, will provide productive full- or part-time work experience and training in State and community public service jobs to these young people. It will thus increase their employability, and, whenever possible, it will encourage them to continue or resume their education. Unlike the Job Corps, it will be open to women as well as to men.

The cornerstone of the work-training program is local initiative and control. Any agency of a State or local government, including

Indian tribal groups, or an approved private nonprofit organization may develop and conduct work projects. Such projects might place young people in work assignments in hospitals, settlement houses, schools, libraries, courts, children's homes, parks, playgrounds, public and private welfare agencies, and so on. Jobs might include, to suggest only a few, such diverse tasks as—

Nurses' aides and hospital orderlies in clinics and health centers.

Filing clerks, typists, and office machine operators in settlement houses and other welfare agencies.

Cooks' assistants, dieticians' assistants, and waitresses in schools and hospitals.

Building maintenance and landscape assistants in parks and recreation facilities.

Mechanics' helpers in police and county garages.

Switchboard operators and receptionists in neighborhood centers and homes for the aged.

Electricians' assistants and painters' helpers in city and county buildings.

The possibilities for projects and jobs are limited only by local resourcefulness and imagination, and by several basic criteria established in the act. These require that—

(1) Projects must increase the employability of the young men and women involved by providing work experience and training in jobs in which there is a reasonable expectation of employment or by enabling students to continue or resume their education.

(2) Projects must contribute to an undertaking in the public interest which will not otherwise be provided or which will contribute to conservation of State or local natural resources or the protection of recreation areas.

(3) The work done by enrollees in the program must not result in the displacement of employed workers or impair existing contracts for services.

(4) The rates of pay and other conditions of employment of the young people involved must be appropriate in view of such factors as the type of work performed, the level of skill involved, and the locality where the project is situated.

(5) Projects must be coordinated, as far as possible, with vocational training and educational services so that the special needs of the enrollees may be met by State or local school authorities.

(6) Projects must include standards and procedures for the selection of applicants which will include assurances that they are encouraged to continue or resume school attendance, if that is appropriate to their needs.

The types of sponsorship and the types of projects will vary widely. The work programs can include any combination of full- or part-time, employment. One project might involve only full-time employment including an element of on-the-job training, while another might have only part-time employment, a work-study combination, or any other work program which addresses the needs of the unemployed youth whom this program is designed to help.

One type of work-training program might be undertaken on a city-wide basis under the auspices of the mayor's office, while another might be run by a public institution such as a hospital, and still a third might be run by a settlement house or another type of private nonprofit organization.

Budget

The annual unit cost per enrollee is estimated to be $2,640 for full-time work, $1,375 for half-time work, and $735 for quarter-time work broken down as follows:

	Full time	Half time	Quarter time
Compensation and benefits	$2,080	$1,040	$520
Physical examination	25	25	25
General administration:
Local employment service, counseling, testing, placement, etc., 10 hours at $3	30	30	30
State employment service administration	10	10	10
Labor Department administration	30	30	30
On-the-job supervision	420	210	105
User agency overhead	20	10	5
Miscellaneous	25	20	10
Total	2,640	1,375	735

It is estimated that the work-training program will provide employment of 200,000 young men and women, of whom 30,000 would be working full time, 60,000 half time, and 110,000 either quarter time throughout the year or full time during the summer months. Ninety percent of the total cost of such a program, or approximately $219 million for a full year, would be paid by the Federal Government during the first year of the program. During the first year, however, phasing in of enrollees is expected to involve an average period of enrollment of about 8 months, which will involve a total Federal cost of $150 million.

WORK-STUDY PROGRAM

Under the standards of financial need most commonly used by this country's colleges, families with incomes of $3,000 or less cannot be expected to make any contribution for the college education of their children. In fact, even at the $4,000 bracket, the contribution expected from a family with two or more children is extremely small. Students coming from such families must be self-supporting while in college. And the need of these students is so great relative to their capacity to pay that institutions of higher learning are usually able to provide only for the extremely bright student, the boy or girl in the top 2 or 3 percent of a high school graduating class. A recent study conducted by the University of Pittsburgh indicates that children from families with less than $3,000 annual income have the poorest chance of entering college, at all ability levels below the very top 2 percent.

The proposed college work-study program, which will be administered by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, will provide a financial base for the able, but extremely needy, student to which can be added a loan or a limited scholarship grant. As a result of this program, the present levels of student employment are expected to be increased by 140,000 to 150,000 a year or over 30 percent. In addition to enabling a wider range of students to attend college through financial assistance, the program will sharply reduce the heavy debt load that often weighs on the student who is least able to bear it.

In order to avoid a program which will be detrimental to a student's academic work, however, the legislation provides that no student may be employed under the work-study program for more than 15 hours a week while classes in which he is enrolled are in session. Comparative studies at the University of Denver, the University of Southern Illinois, and Harvard on the academic achievement of students working part time compared with nonworking students all have concluded that the academic records of students who work part time for a limited period of hours are as good as or better than the records of students who do not work at all.

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will establish criteria for fund distribution among colleges and universities. This will provide for concentration of work-study funds in institutions which serve poverty stricken areas or which enroll student populations drawn from extremely low-income families. These include both rural institutions and large public and private universities serving metropolitan areas.

On-campus work under this program will include both the service-type job which requires no specialized training—such as dormitory and plant maintenance, food service, clerical and stenographic work, and the like—and jobs in somewhat more sophisticated areas which do require some degree of training or skill development—such as work with a university press, computer programing, materials cataloguing, and library work. At the University of Southern Illinois, student employees hold part-time jobs as bus drivers, cafeteria workers, and work in other service categories. In the technical and supervisory groups are printers, surveyors, accountants, junior counselors, radio technicians, and senior stenographers—students of advanced or upper division standing with higher degrees of skills.

Another advantage of the work-study program will be that it will stimulate colleges to specify and define new jobs in addition to the pattern of student employment now offered.

There are a number of off-campus jobs in health, welfare, recreation, and similar social service work which hold immediate promise of job expansion through a college or university work-study arrangement. A case in point are teacher aid and tutorial assistant jobs, in which students work either directly as teacher assistants, or as tutors with small groups of students having difficulty in a specific subject area. In most cases, community agencies involved in this work have had to depend upon voluntary assistance from the colleges. A much more satisfactory approach would be the provision of part-time student employees who are actually assigned to responsibilities appropriate to their interests and capabilities. In this way, the college or university can help meet the financial needs of the student; the student can gain valuable work experience; and the community can gain a talented and highly motivated group of students for a variety of service jobs.

Because of the limited resources traditionally available to colleges for student employment, the expansion of off-campus jobs has been extremely slow. But just as the National Defense Education Act stimulated student borrowing to meet college expenses, so the work-study program will give great impetus to this expansion. Furthermore, students from these college work-study programs will make invaluable part-time instructors, aids and workers in the community action programs, job corps and other activities that develop under the proposed legislation. These students will have come from financially depressed backgrounds and they will therefore have a special understanding of the problems faced by youth enrolled in these programs. Their contributions will be particularly significant also because these same students, as mature upperclassmen will represent positive proof that educational attainment can break the cycle of poverty.

Budget

It is estimated that the average earning of an undergraduate during the first year of the work-study program will be approximately $500, of which the Federal Government will pay 90 percent or $450, and the comparable figure for a graduate student will be $1,000, of which the Federal Government will pay $900. It is estimated that approximately 145,000 students—130,000 of them undergraduates could benefit during the first year, at a total cost of about $71.7 million. An additional $800,000 will be required for the costs to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare of administering the program, leading to a total cost of $72.5 million.

CONCLUSION

As a result of all these programs, the Office of Economic Opportunity is expected to reach almost 400,000 young people in its first year alone. For these young men and women, the experience derived and lessons learned from participation in the Job Corps, the work-training program, or the work-study program may well spell the difference between futility and usefulness, between a continuing circle of poverty and a pyramid of opportunities for themselves and their children.

Community Action Programs

A youth employment center opened in Boston in November 1963. Within 4 months, it had helped 400 young people to find jobs. Three out of four of those placed came from families receiving relief. Most would otherwise have been unemployed high school dropouts.

In the Southwest, 35 Zuni Indians were given 24 weeks of electronics training. Within 12 days after the course, all were employed at wages averaging twice the 97 cents an hour they earned previously.

In a St. Paul high school, a coordinated program of special attention for children from broken homes, and low ability students, changed the dropout rate from highest in the city to second lowest.

In Jackson City, Fla., 49 persons of limited education were trained and are now employed as "cottage parents" for mentally retarded children. Eighty percent of the trainees had been unemployed for the previous 2 years or more.

Successful employees of a Philadelphia company volunteered their services to speak to local high school students, emphasizing the importance of education to a career; the dropout rate decreased one-third.

Across the Nation there are countless additional examples of imaginative community programing to expand opportunity and break the cycle of poverty. Many are created locally. Some received impetus from State agencies, private foundations, industry, or labor unions. Others were initiated with the help of creative Federal programs, such as those undertaken by the President's Committee on Juvenile Delinquency. But nearly all share a common handicap—their scope is sharply limited by shortages of local and State resources. In many cases the shortages derive directly from the problem which these efforts are trying to cure—the low income and earning power of the poor.

Some efforts are therefore only demonstration programs, with little hope of expansion. Others provide full solutions for only a part of the problem, a few blocks of a blighted neighborhood, or several families out of several hundred. Often they provide adult education classes which can handle only a small number of illiterates, or special counseling for only some of the dropouts and potential dropouts.

One crucial lesson has been learned from this community experience. Since the causes of poverty are complex, the solutions must be comprehensive. An illiterate adult must learn to read and write before he can enter the skill training program that will lead to employment. The mother on welfare cannot enter employment or manpower training unless there is a day care or community school program for her children. The 16-year-old youth might not be dropping out of school if he had learned to read in early grades or if a work-study program were available. Poverty is a web of circumstances, not the simple result of a simple condition.

The most successful community action, therefore, usually includes the political, business, labor, and religious leaders, the school board, the employment service, the public welfare department, private social welfare agencies, and neighborhood houses in a coordinated attack on local poverty. Above all it includes the poor people of the community whose first opportunity must be the opportunity to help themselves.

PRESENT FEDERAL PROGRAMS

Already the National Government is involved in programs that relate to the problems of poverty.

These programs make an important contribution, but they have not been enough. Moreover, Federal support of community efforts has generally involved insufficient coordination among the various Federal agencies. The programs are administered by different agencies under different terms and conditions with different objectives in mind. Nowhere in the Federal Government can a community find broad support for a concentrated program to attack poverty. As a result, the combined expenditures of Federal, State, and local government and private foundations and united funds are too often dispersed into many single-purpose projects, each of which may be worthwhile within its own bounds but which fail to achieve the effectiveness a coordinated approach can bring.

A COORDINATED APPROACH

Two steps are needed to change this situation. The first, described earlier, demands a focal point within our Government for marshaling Federal programs to support communities ready to do battle with poverty. The creation of the Office of Economic Opportunity will achieve this.

But community action also encompasses many activities for which existing Federal programs can provide no support. The existence of special funds clearly designated for community action support is critical to spurring communities with existing programs to direct more resources into this area. The community action fund is therefore necessary.

WHO MAY APPLY FOR A GRANT?

The local organization applying for a community action program grant must satisfy only one basic criterion: it must be broadly representative of the interests of the community. It may be a public agency which seeks to build into its programs the advice and expertise of business, labor, and other elements of the private sector. Or it may be a private nonprofit agency which has the support of the relevant elements of community government. It may be an already existing organization, or it may be newly created for the specific purpose of fighting poverty. The community may be a city or a town, a metropolitan area, a county or a multicounty unit, or a combination of rural and urban areas. But above all, it must provide a means whereby the residents of the program areas will have a voice in planning and a role in action. Additionally, in the case of grants for educational purposes, the application must come from the appropriate public body.

HOW WILL PROGRAMS BE INITIATED?

The initiative for community programs must be distilled from the community itself; there can be no substitute. Through 11 regional representatives, the Office of Economic Opportunity will stand ready to assist any community in formulating its plans, in deciding how to marshal its human and financial resources, by providing technical assistance where this is needed, and by describing what Federal resources are available. The expertise of the Federal agencies concerned with specific aspects of the poverty problem will be brought to bear. Where necessary, community officials may be enabled to visit other communities to see how problems have been solved elsewhere. But the momentum, the direction, and the energy must come from within the community itself.

WHAT ARE THE CRITERIA?

The plan itself need not be complex. It must answer only five basic questions:

1. Does it demonstrate a basic knowledge of the facts of poverty in the area?
2. Does it propose to attack the real causes of poverty?
3. Does it promise effective solution of the problems which it identifies?

4. Are there community organizations which will work together to carry out the plan responsibly, speedily, and efficiently?

5. Is the community itself dedicated to the achievement of the goals, contributing its own human and financial resources towards that objective?

Above all, this must be a program in which projects are carried out not for the community, but rather by the community—with external financial assistance—to attack community problems.

WHAT ACTIVITIES WILL BE UNDERTAKEN?

Communities will have wide discretion in determining what program activities should be undertaken, for the needs will vary throughout the Nation. In keeping with the focus upon opportunity and with the emphasis upon improving human performance, motivation, and productivity, and the conditions under which people live and work, it is likely that community action programs will include activities such as the following, all focused on the problems of poor people:

1. Services and activities to develop new employment opportunities;
2. Strengthening the teaching of basic education skills, especially reading, writing, and mathematics;
3. Providing comprehensive academic counseling and guidance services and school social work services;
4. Providing after-school study centers, after-school tutoring, and summer, weekend, and after-school academic classes;
5. Establishing programs for the benefit of preschool children;
6. Reducing adult illiteracy;
7. Developing and carrying out special education or other programs for migrant or transient families;
8. Improving the living conditions of the elderly;
9. Arranging for or providing health examinations and health education for school children;
10. Rehabilitation and retraining of physically or mentally handicapped persons;
11. Providing health, rehabilitation, employment, educational, and related services to young men not qualified for military service;
12. Providing community child-care centers and youth activity centers;
13. Improving housing and living facilities and home management skills;
14. Providing services to enable families from rural areas to meet problems of urban living; or
15. Providing recreation and physical fitness services and facilities.

HOW WILL PLANS BE PROCESSED?

Community action plans will be received in Washington by the Office of Economic Opportunity and reviewed for consistency with the five basic criteria. In reviewing each plan the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity will assure that the views of interested Federal agencies are sought and taken into account in decisions on plan approval. In those cases where the proposal does not contain the views of relevant State governmental organs, these will be sought. The Administrator's approval of a community action plan signifies that this effort warrants the full support of Federal assistance up to the maximum limits based on appropriate matching contributions in order to assure that the goals set forth are achieved.

The success of the program will depend upon the ability of the Office of Economic Opportunity, other Federal agencies, State agencies, and the communities to cooperate in program development, funding and implementation.

The Office will have field staff and consultants who will work with communities as they develop their action programs. The field representatives will also be responsible for involving staff of other Federal agencies—including the Departments of Labor; Agriculture; Commerce; Health, Education, and Welfare; the Housing and Home Finance Agency; and the Small Business Administration. The representative will also suggest involvement of appropriate State officials. This process will make possible a sharing of ideas among the levels of government. It will enable many sources, public and private, to combine to finance community action programs.

Once the community action plan has been approved, the Office of Economic Opportunity will assume two functions. First, it will make available to the community, according to the financial plan, those funds which are derived from its own appropriations. The Director may do this directly, by making allotments, advances, contracts, or other financial arrangements with appropriate action organizations, or he may transfer funds to an appropriate Federal agency or agencies to be administered by that agency in support of the action program. In instances where a number of action organs will be implementing a plan formulated and approved by the community action organization, it will normally be the practice to allot funds to the community action organization which will administer individual action unit allotments. Secondly, the Office of Economic Opportunity will monitor the overall administration of the community action plan and the support provided by Federal agencies in order to assure that the goals planned will in fact be achieved.

PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT GRANTS

For communities which have not yet formulated community action plans, but which exhibit a strong will to attack problems of poverty within the community, program development grants will be made. These grants will allow communities to call in experts to assist in analyzing the problems of poverty and to advise on approaches to solutions of the causes of poverty.

During the time that a community is formulating its action plan, whether with or without assistance of a program development grant, action grants may be made to initiate specific projects within that community which will clearly be a part of the final community action program. But it is not planned to continue to make action grants in the absence of a completed community action plan for a period of longer than 12 months.

FEDERAL-LOCAL COST SHARING

The principle of community cost sharing is vital to the success of community action programs. For cost sharing demonstrates the community's commitment to the objectives of the program, and this commitment in turn leads to involvement of the leaders and organizations of the community in carrying out the actions proposed.

The Federal share of the added costs of expanded community action programs will normally be not more than 75 percent. However, many city and county budgets for the next 18 months or 2 years are already enacted, or are far advanced in the approval process; local leaders will need time to refocus their programs and to reallocate their resources to put higher priority on poverty programs. Recognizing that the capacity of communities to share the costs of community action programs will be limited in the immediate future, but confident that their cost sharing will grow, the Office of Economic Opportunity will increase its share of the costs of community action plans up to 90 percent during the first 2 years of the program, or through June 30, 1966, whichever is later. In calculating the value of the community's contribution, account will be taken of contributions in kind, and of the value of volunteers' services.

In some cases, however, poverty is prevalent through most of a community, not just a few neighborhoods. In those cases, the resources which the community itself can bring to bear are sharply limited.

Where these heavy concentrations of poverty occur, and where it is clear that an adequate attack on poverty cannot be undertaken within the normal cost-sharing standards, the Director will authorize a higher Federal share. This authorization will be based upon objective criteria, including the median income of the community, the adequacy of social services, the number of public assistance recipients, and other relevant factors.

Farm Investment: Strength in the Marketplace

Farm families represent 16 percent of the poor in the United States. About 1.5 million farm families receive so little income from all sources that they remain at or below the poverty level year after year. When these families include large numbers of children, as they often do, their lack of adequate income represents desperate poverty.

The overwhelming majority of low-income farm families cannot make the transfer to some other environment. Walled in by physical or educational handicaps, severely limited in skills and aptitudes, often beyond the age of new employment, the family breadwinner must "make it" where he is or he won't make it at all.

Unless some means can be found to help these families where they are, they face an ever bleaker future in an increasingly technical and advanced rural society. What is of acute importance for the entire Nation, the children of these families represent the seeds of future poverty scattered throughout the rural and urban communities of the future.

Improving the skills and abilities of these children through education, better health care, and specialized training is of absolutely first importance. Community action and other programs can help rural communities upgrade and enrich the potential of their young citizens. In addition, aids to stimulate business and industrial development will benefit some adult members of poverty-stricken farm families who need work off the farm.

But the root cause of farm poverty is a lack of resources on the farm itself, particularly land and capital. Poor farm families produce little. They therefore earn little. They thus have little to invest in farm development. It is the classic vicious cycle.

A keystone of the assault on rural poverty, therefore, is what might be termed a "package" of loan and grant programs and advisory services designed to get these poor farm families off dead center, to get their output up, and to give them some strength in the marketplace.

The rural economic opportunity program will make grants to farm operators with meager earnings who have the character and ability to improve the earning capacity of their farms thereby. The grant would be made individually or in conjunction with a loan. It would be made with the specific purpose of moving the farmer to a position where he could finance continued improvements and developments through loans from public or private sources. At present, many small, poverty-stricken farmers either have no debt-paying ability or they are unable to amortize a large enough loan out of anticipated earnings to give them a new start. To gain a position where they can obtain conventional loan financing, they first have to expand their operations. However, they can't expand their operations without financing, for which they now are not eligible. The program will break this cycle by extending carefully managed grants.

Regardless of the financing available for farming expansion, however, some poor families will not benefit. They may not be able to obtain additional resources for farming because the resources—land on particular—simply aren't available. The rural opportunity program would, therefore, provide loans and grants to finance small items of machinery for nonagricultural enterprises on farms. Examples of such items might be a chain saw for felling trees, woodworking tools, a sewing machine, a small electric feed mixing mill, or similar capital equipment that can be operated easily and will significantly increase the productivity of family labor. Where a family has no opportunity to increase its income from agricultural production, such nonagricultural enterprises would be an alternative—the only alternative in a great many cases. Grants are necessary, as well as loans, because here again there is limited debt-paying ability. These families must first move to a position where they can qualify for credit. They can move to this position only through a capital grant that will increase their earning potential.

A direct assault is also proposed on what is probably the single most serious cause of poverty among low-income farm families: Their inability to pay the high costs of farmland coming on the market and thereby obtain the basic resource of agriculture. The value of farm land has been rising at the rate of 3 percent each year, a rise stimulated in part by speculative forces and the fierce competition among large agricultural operators for land to meet the requirements of modern farm technology. It is extremely difficult—indeed, almost impossible—for the Nation's poorest farm families to buy good land at a price they can pay. Sharecroppers, tenants displaced by machinery, farm laborers, young farmers have no savings. The Department of Agriculture cannot make real estate loans to the majority of these operators because the Department by law may extend a loan only up to the normal value of the land, not its current market value.

The poor farmer has no savings to make up the difference. Frustrated in acquiring more land, he cannot take the additional steps that would increase the earning capacity of his farm. Too often he faces a sad choice: Remain in poverty where he is or migrate to an urban environment where a lack of skills will severely handicap him in earning a living for his family.

The rural opportunity plan thus includes a program of loans and grants to State and local nonprofit corporations which will enable them to purchase at the going price farm land coming on the market and resell this land to individual small family farmers at its appraised value. The Department of Agriculture, through its regular farm lending activities, would help the individual families to buy the land from the corporation. Any loss the corporation might sustain in the transaction would be made up by a grant from the funds appropriated for the antipoverty program. In the initial period of the program, an estimated 2,500 carefully selected families would be assisted in getting the land resources they must have to earn an adequate income.

Finally, the rural effort provides a credit program to finance cooperatives made up wholly or partly of low-income farm and other rural families. Such cooperatives would provide services, supplies, and facilities not now available to low-income families, and would serve as a market place for their products. Poor farm families generally are excluded from the benefits of participating in cooperatives. Most in need of strong marketing, purchasing and service organizations, they are least likely to be in a position to organize and support such organizations. There exists at present no practical source of financing for cooperatives that are in the early, tryout stages, are weak financially, or require financing beyond the legal limitations of the Bank for Cooperatives, private banks, and other existing sources of credit.

The proposals to combat farm poverty must be viewed as a single package. Major items of the package complement and reinforce each other. They have a single, unified objective: To raise the income-producing capacities of families by giving them access to capital, land resources and management aids on the farm and by opening up new opportunities for them to obtain economic strength in the community.

Following is a detailed explanation of how each major program will operate:

GRANTS AND LOANS TO INDIVIDUAL FARM FAMILIES

Grants would not exceed $1,500 and would be concentrated among those families who with such assistance would be able to move up to an income level which permitted financing entirely through credit sources.

To be eligible for a capital grant, the applicant must—

(a) Be the operator of not larger than a family farm;

(b) Demonstrate character, industry, and intent to utilize the grant to raise his level of living permanently;

(c) Be unable to maintain a satisfactory level of income but have reasonable prospects, with the assistance of a grant or loan-grant combination, of raising his income sufficiently to improve his living standard; and (d) Be unable to obtain credit for the desired purposes elsewhere.

Capital grants will be administered through Farmers Home Administration county supervisors, who serve all rural areas in the United States. Priority will be given capital grants in areas which have adopted, or are in the process of formulating, community action plans. This will insure that full advantage will be made of the mutually reinforcing effect of the grants and community-wide human resources development assistance.

A combination of grant and loan financing will be programed only after a formal analysis of the family resources and prospects. The amount of the grant will be determined by the amount of capital input required that the family is unable to finance through a loan while retaining a minimal standard of living. Depending on the family's farm and home development plan and management ability, the capital grant may be provided in one sum or phased in installments. However, in either case, Farmers Home Administration will retain control of all expenditures made with the grant.

Under the proposed program, capital grants would be made to approximately 45,000 farm families. The average grant is expected to be $500. In the majority of cases it would be supplemented by a loan from the Farmers Home Administration. By combining a small capital grant and a loan, plus intensive farm and home management assistance provided by Farmers Home Administration a significant number of these low-income farm families can hope to increase their earnings and their standard of living substantially over a relatively short period of time. Farmers Home Administration experience with loans for purchase of farm real estate and for farm operations shows that on the average family cash income less operating costs increased from 85 to 102 percent during the life of the loan. A program of grants supplementing the existing loan program would open similar opportunities for extreme low-income farm families.

FARM LAND PURCHASE AND RESALE

To make additional land resources available to poor farm families, loans and grants will be made to State and local nonprofit corporations for the purchase and resale of farm land either (a) in small parcels to add to existing units or (b) in the form of individual farm-size units. On large tracts of land purchased, necessary improvements also would be carried out by the corporations to make these tracts viable as sites for family farms. These improvements would be financed by the corporations using loan and grant funds.

Under the program corporations would purchase suitable farmland coming on the market in local rural areas. Necessary improvements would be made on the land. Where large tracts were involved, after the land had been improved and subdivided into adequate family farming units it would be sold to selected potentially successful low-income farming families. These families would use loans from Farmers Home Administration to purchase the farming units or additional farm land to add to their existing units.

In most cases, the cost to the corporation of land purchase and development would be greater than the sale price of the land to an individual small farmer. The corporation would need to pay the going market price to acquire the land, while the individual farmer would be able to pay only the normal (or appraised) value of the land, using an FHA loan. The difference between what the corporation pays for the farm land purchase and development and the price it receives would be made up through a direct grant to the corporation.

Approximately 200,000 acres of land can be purchased and resold initially by the corporations, using loan and grant funds provided by the program. It is estimated that the average farm purchaser will acquire about 80 acres; thus the program initially will benefit approximately 2,500 families.

LOANS TO COOPERATIVES

Another important aspect of the antipoverty campaign in rural America will be a new program of loans, grants, and direct technical assistance for cooperatives that are made up wholly or partly of low-income families. Some examples of enterprises operated by small cooperatives that might be assisted through this program are:

Marketing of fruits and vegetables produced on small farms.

Processing, transporting, and selling timber products produced on farms. (Processing might include manufacturing of crates, furniture, millwork, etc.)

Purchase of farm supplies such as fertilizer, garden seeds, building materials, and machinery.

Cold storage and packing plants both for home use and for sale.

Livestock sales facilities.

Facilities for the manufacture, transport, and sale of handicraft items produced by members of the co-op, such as glassware, ceramics, furniture, toys, decorative items, clothing, etc.

Under this program, loans and grants would be authorized both to help a small cooperative get started and also to supply credit for one already in operation. Initially, however, the major emphasis would be placed on the former, with assistance concentrated where the largest number of low-income farmers and rural residents would benefit per dollar of expenditure.

In order to provide the supervision and technical services required to assure the success of the loan and grant programs proposed, the Farmers Home Administration will need to supplement its field staff in rural poverty areas, particularly those areas going forward with community action programs. It will, therefore, be necessary to supplement existing staffs with an additional 340 field personnel and 10 headquarters unit personnel to provide the supporting technical and farm and home management advisory services. These additional staff members will be concentrated in 469 counties where half the families have incomes of less than $2,500.

EMPLOYMENT AND INVESTMENT INCENTIVES

PART A—INCENTIVES FOR HIRING

High rates of unemployment and underemployment and their invariable result—severe poverty—may be found in broad areas such as Appalachia and the Ozarks or in smaller pockets such as certain depleted mineral and lumber areas of the North and the slum-ridden core areas of many of our larger cities. Obviously, one of the most necessary and effective measures for the alleviation of poverty in these areas is to provide a means of stable employment for those who cannot find work.

The first major national effort in this direction was the Area Redevelopment Act passed by the 87th Congress and signed into law in May, 1961. Under that act, low-interest loans were made available to stimulate the establishment of new or expanding industrial and commercial enterprises in designated areas of substantial unemployment and underemployment. Significant progress has already been made under this program in many localities. As of the end of February, the Area Redevelopment Administration had approved 291 business loans, involving the expenditure of $119.2 million.

The ARA program, although still relatively new, has served to focus attention on the need for positive and constructive programs which can assist the unemployed once again to become self-respecting, self-supporting, productive members of society. Such programs also have the advantage of enabling the Government to realize a return on its original investment, even though their purpose is primarily social and economic. Without these investments, ever-expanding relief and welfare programs would be necessary, and even greater economic waste of manpower would occur only because opportunities for productive labor are lacking. The ARA experience thus far has shown that for every $3,600 of business loans a new job in a private enterprise has been created. As against this, it should be noted that the average worker in the United States produces goods and services having a value of about $8,500. The $8,500, moreover, repeats itself every year in addition to the real wealth of the Nation, while the investment of $3,600 for each job is a one-time loan commitment which will be returned to the Federal Treasury with interest.

Part A of title IV would establish a new program of business loans for poverty areas or pockets beyond the reach of the regular ARA program, either because the poverty pockets are too small for designation as redevelopment areas or because capital resources in the other areas are so lacking that it is impossible to comply with the local participation requirements of an ARA loan. It is expected that most of the loan requests will come from business enterprises based on local natural resources, local markets, and local labor. These industries probably will predominantly include the lighter types of manufacturing enterprises rather than large, national concerns requiring highly skilled labor. Also included will be businesses catering to tourist income such as handicraft and gift industries, and other service and commercial establishments which will help to install a viable economic base in the poverty areas.

The Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity would be authorized to establish a program of direct loans, participations with banks, and loan guarantees, to provide funds for the establishment, preservation, and expansion of promising business ventures which will hire the long-term or hard-core unemployed. The program would be administered through the existing resources and facilities of the Area Redevelopment Administration. It is expected that ARA in processing such applications would normally make the loan under its own program, wherever possible. The funds available to the Director under this expanded program to increase economic opportunities would be used only where the ARA program could not be applied.

Most of these funds would be used for direct loans, since banks in the poverty areas often lack the resources to make large or long-term loans. However, a portion would be set aside for loan guarantees in force at any one time, to provide for possible losses.

Loans to private borrowers would be authorized for a period of not more than 25 years. At least half of the employment openings created by the investment must be recruited from among the long-term unemployed, or from members of low-income families. No financial assistance will be extended to relocate businesses from one area to another, and assistance will be limited to areas undertaking an approved community action program. In order to assure that assistance extended under this program creates a significant number of new employment opportunities, loans will be made primarily in labor-intensive industries, or in industries in which the investment cost per employee is relatively low. In no case will any loan be made for which loan-cost-per-job exceeds $10,000; the average cost-per-job created will be substantially lower.

The Director would also be authorized to participate with other lending agencies and institutions whenever immediate participations could be obtained. Deferred participations, which depend on the ready availability of ample investment funds, are not deemed practical and would not be authorized.

Whatever the form of the financial assistance provided, the Director would first be required to determine that there were sufficient funds available to complete the project and that it gave reasonable assurance of repayment. Loans would bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury on the basis of the average market yield of outstanding Treasury obligations of comparable maturity, plus an additional charge at the discretion of the Director to cover the other costs of the program. However, the legislation would require that no interest rate be charged on any project in a poverty area in excess of the rate then being charged under the area redevelopment program.

The Director would also be authorized to charge reasonable fees for administrative expenses and to cover probable losses in connection with the loan guarantee program.

PART B—SMALL BUSINESS LOANS

The small businessmen of our Nation constitute one of the foundations of community life. When poverty strikes the community, it strikes them as well. Indeed, the ledgers and annals of the poor would be incomplete if they failed to show that—

> One-half of the Nation's 5,600,000 sole proprietorships engaged in nonagricultural enterprises report annual profits of $3,000 or less.

Sixteen percent of these proprietorships report net losses.

Three hundred and eighty-seven thousand small businesses go out of business annually.

When small businesses fail, we lose the creative talents of individuals whose enterprise and initiative have long been the backbone of American life. Each such failure is America's loss and poverty's gain.

In addition, since almost one-half of the jobs in our country are created by small business employers, the demise of the small businessman proliferates poverty and further paralyzes the community.

The Small Business Administration has made more than 40,000 loans to small business concerns totaling more than $2 billion over the past 10 years. However, there remain many small businessmen who have been unable to meet normal credit eligibility requirements under existing law. More often than not, these are the very small retailer or serviceman, the business with one, two, or perhaps five employees, which is nevertheless an important part of the business community, and makes an important contribution to the economy. Such a small entrepreneur needs little capital, but he does need it on reasonable terms and for a somewhat longer period than is presently available.

Part 3 of title IV would establish a broader lending program designed to meet the needs of the small proprietor. Such a program—

Will help put a new or incipient business on its feet.

Will enable an existing business to grow where there is a need for growth and provide small loans for longer terms than existing SBA programs permit.

Will enable small firms to ready themselves for the higher levels of economic activity which the tax reductions in 1964 and 1965 will produce; and for firms in areas where the ARA or other development programs have spurred economic growth, to share in the improved conditions which such development yields.

Will hold out the promise of increased employment by every firm which can with the help of a modest loan from the SBA expand its labor force.

Will provide for these small businessmen an opportunity to learn by making available a program of management training in connection with which both the business community and the educational institutions will be encouraged to share their knowledge and their experience.

The SBA has within the limits of its existing legislation experimented with such an approach in Philadelphia, Pa., in cooperation with local business groups and foundations. This program was started as a pilot project on January 28, 1964, but the response has been instantaneous and extraordinary. To date, the SBA has conducted in connection with the pilot program more than 1,100 interviews. Three hundred applications for financial assistance have been received; 74 loans have already been approved, averaging $5,000 each.

The borrowers include an insect exterminator now making $40 a week. With a $6,000 loan, he will purchase a new truck, buy new equipment, and expand his business to employ two or three helpers. He is taking a local Small Business Administration "How to Run a Business" course. Another borrower wholesales artificial flowers from his basement, but will expand into new quarters and hire several new employees with a $6,000 loan just granted. An appliance repairman, through a loan, is expanding his small business by establishing several branch stores. A locksmith who has just invented a new electronic automatic timeclock has received a loan of $4,500 with which he will be able to expand his presently very limited production.

In conjunction with these loans, members of the business community of Philadelphia who are recognized experts in fields such as bookkeeping, merchandising, and taxation, have volunteered their services as advisers to borrowers. The chief beneficiaries of both the lending and the management training aspects of the Philadelphia pilot project are expected to be the disadvantaged small business concerns—frequently members of minority groups—who are unable to obtain private financing, or to underwrite any form of management training for themselves or their employees.

The experience has been encouraging and dramatic. It should now be attempted in similar situations. This act would authorize the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity to make or guarantee loans to small business concerns or to those seeking to establish such concerns if the financing is not otherwise reasonably available and if there is reasonable assurance of repayment. The definition of "small business" would be governed by the Small Business Act and the authority to make such loans will be delegated to the SBA.

The maturity of the loans (15 years) would exceed that presently within the power of the SBA. In addition, the act provides for more relaxed credit standards. The loan may be made under conditions which permit the borrower to defer repayment of principal for a period of time necessary to establish the business, or permit the payment of other existing indebtedness so as to insure the viability of the concern. The purpose of this more liberal approach is not only to enable small business concerns not otherwise able to meet the credit criteria of private lenders or the SBA to obtain financial assistance under this act, but also to attract participation by private lenders. Because it is expected that the chief applicants will be the very smallest firms—typically, service and retail enterprises—the maximum loan limit will be $15,000.

but - So. Cons Coop $25,000

Particular emphasis is given to management training, both to train those entering business and to upgrade the skills of those already in business. The Administrator would be given specific authority to condition the granting of a loan upon the borrower's participation in an approved management training program, either privately conducted or Government sponsored. Such provision will also give the Government additional assurance that its investment will be repaid.

Under the program it is estimated that more than 1,000 loans to small businessmen in Philadelphia alone can be made, based on the enthusiasm with which the announcement of the pilot was received. In addition, the Philadelphia approach will be extended to 10 more cities with core area problems which a thriving community of small businessmen can help to solve. In all, more than 5,000 loans to these sole proprietors and small enterprises can be made during the next year. These loans will average about $5,000 each, and will be concentrated in neighborhoods which are undertaking community action plans. The Small Business Administration, through its 15 regional offices, will be the prime mover of the program, and will absorb the estimated cost of $25 million during the first year within its existing funding authorizations. No additional funds to finance this program are being requested as part of the 1965 Office of Economic Opportunity budget.

Family Unity Through Jobs

For the unskilled and the semiskilled, loss of a job may mean far more than the loss of income. It is likely to mean eventual exhaustion of unemployment benefits, loss of dignity, loss of hope. And the long period of enforced idleness, with nothing to do and nothing to contribute, may result in the disintegration of the family.

What is needed is a program that will give even the least qualified of those low-skilled workers a chance to avoid this descent into hopelessness. The way for such a program has already been cleared.

In 1961, the Social Security Act was amended to authorize Federal financial participation in assistance to families with an unemployed, but employable, parent living at home. The following year the act was again amended to permit this assistance to be paid in the form of wages for work or training in special programs.

Thirteen of the eighteen States which have expanded their aid to families of dependent children (AFDC) program to include unemployed parents (AFDC–UP) have undertaken or are completing plans for such work and training programs. These programs have been highly successful. They have proved that welfare recipients welcome the opportunity to return to productive work or training and that such programs both increase the employability of the recipient and benefit the community in which he lives.

In West Virginia, a statewide work-training program has provided work for over 10,000 unemployed individuals each month. In the last 18 months, 6,700 welfare cases have been closed as the result of regular employment for the relief recipients. And institutions across the State continue to request more work-training participants than are available.

In Cook County, Ill., 700 fathers from AFDC–UP families were given a special course in cabdriving; 85 percent of them are now employed as cabdrivers. Throughout the county, nearly 6,000 unemployed parents have been enrolled in a basic education program, and almost 2,000 in a high school program, both of which have been received enthusiastically by students and administrators alike.

In Fulton County, Ga., 232 AFDC mothers participated in a training course in commercial food preparation and housekeeping, and 103 of these found permanent employment. In less than 1 month, the costs of training these women were offset by savings in public assistance payments to them.

In Oregon, 610 unemployed parents are being provided work and training in clerical services, cafeteria operations, mechanical trades, and construction skills. In Indiana, 200 are being trained in nursing, barbering, and hair dressing. In downstate Illinois, over 2,000 are working at building maintenance, clerical and library services in public schools, and road maintenance.

These cases, and many more like them, demonstrate that public assistance with work and training can be used as a positive instrument to keep families together, to increase employability, and to brighten our communities.

RELATIONSHIP TO MANPOWER DEVELOPMENT AND TRAINING ACT

This program directly complements programs carried out under the Manpower Development and Training Act. Both programs are directed primarily at the same person—the unemployed head of a family. However they differ in their methods of recruitment and accordingly in the persons they reach. The Manpower Development and Training Act program, because it recruits through the State employment services and because it calls for a relatively high aptitude, tends to attract an "elite" element among the unemployed—those who are better educated, who are aware of the services available to them, and who have the confidence to seek admission.

But the lower ranks of the unemployed generally do not share this aptitude, awareness, or confidence. They must be reached by other means, the most effective of which is the mechanism of public assistance. When combined with a program of constructive work or training, public assistance serves as an effective device not only for reaching the unskilled unemployed, but also for preserving their basic work skills and initiatives. Some of those selected through this mechanism will enter Manpower Development and Training Act programs immediately; others will be given experience and confidence to qualify them for such training; and still others will enter the labor force directly once again. But all will be given an opportunity to improve themselves and their communities through work and training.

The way in which the Office of Economic Opportunity will spur initiative of these programs has been dramatically demonstrated in the State of Kentucky.

In November 1963, Kentucky sought a grant from HEW to enable it to initiate a small, pilot program under which AFDC would be extended to families with unemployed fathers and a community work and training program would be initiated. In December, a grant was approved in principle under which HEW would underwrite, until the end of the State's current fiscal year, the total cost of an AFDC–UP pilot program in seven eastern counties. The grant was made in January. Rapid progress and full public acceptance led the legislature in February to authorize the expansion of the program to 39 hard-hit east Kentucky counties at the beginning of its next fiscal year and to the entire State 1 year hence. Thus a small grant to finance a pilot program can rapidly lead to a statewide program.

In order to stimulate the adoption by other States of constructive work or training programs which will enable employable individuals and their families to transfer from welfare rolls to payrolls, a three-part program is proposed:

1. Extension of AFDC–UP and work and training programs to more families

In addition to the 18 States whose programs of aid to families with dependent children include families with an unemployed parent, 10 States are actively considering the establishment of such programs. But many of the 18 States which now have AFDC-UP programs limit their effectiveness and scope by using restrictive definitions of unemployment, need, or residence and there are 22 States in which nothing has been done. In all of the States there are substantial members of families—a total of almost 300,000 involving nearly 1.6 million persons—in which the father is unemployed and which are not receiving adequate assistance and training.

This situation permits the disintegration of many families, the withdrawal of many children from school, and the reinforcement of a pattern of poverty for many of this Nation's citizens. Accordingly, the family-unity-through-jobs program has been designed to encourage the expansion of existing programs, the establishment of new AFDC–UP programs, and the inclusion of work and training programs on a pilot basis where they do not now exist.

It is estimated that approximately 80,000 unemployed fathers who are not now receiving public assistance can be reached during the first year of an expanded program. Since the average family receiving AFDC–UP contains 5.7 people, this part of the program alone will directly affect some 456,000 people.

2. Extension of work and training programs to more families now receiving AFDC–UP

An estimated 35,000 able-bodied fathers are now receiving public assistance while what skills they have wither from disuse, while technological change renders even those skills obsolete, and while pride and self-respect become luxuries which can no longer be afforded.

In order to avoid the perpetuation of this waste, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare would also underwrite pilot efforts to stimulate the adoption of work and training programs in connection with public assistance. It is estimated that approximately 20,000 families or a total of 114,000 people at an average family size of 5.7, could be reached during the first year in an expanded program.

3. Provision of basic education and training of AFDC mothers

A majority of the families in the AFDC program are headed by women. The father is absent, dead, or incapacitated. Of the over 700,000 women heading families receiving AFDC, about 14 percent are now employed and another 13 percent, or approximately 100,000 could work if employment were available. Many more would seek employment if adequate day-care facilities were available. Moreover, less than one-third of the AFDC mothers have more than an elementary school education, and their children will almost inevitably suffer from such a home environment. These mothers (primarily those with older children for whom day care arrangements can be made) would benefit both themselves and their children if they were to receive basic education and training. In addition to enhancing their prospects for employment, such training has proved its value in strengthening the family situation and making possible progress for the children.

It is estimated that during the first year of this program, about 30,000 of the 100,000 mothers seeking employment could be given basic literacy education and vocational training. Since the average size of an AFDC family headed by a female is 3.9 people, this would affect some 117,000 people.

VOLUNTEERS FOR AMERICA—THE OPPORTUNITY TO HELP

The response throughout America to the Peace Corps has demonstrated with dramatic clarity the intensity of the spirit of service in this country. It is proposed to tap this vital source for domestic service through a volunteers for America program within the Office of Economic Opportunity.

For those thousands of Americans who are not eligible for Peace Corps service (for the most part because they have families) who are unable to volunteer for a full 2 years, or who would prefer to make their contribution at home rather than abroad, the volunteers for America program will offer an opportunity for service. Peace Corps experience has indicated the great extent to which this program can benefit the volunteers themselves, the people and the communities served by them, and the Nation as a whole.

Volunteers will participate not only in the programs proposed in the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. They will also work in existing Federal programs related to poverty problems, and in State and local activities. A volunteer may teach in a Job Corps training center, or he may work on an Indian reservation on projects administered by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. He may work in a community undertaking a community action program, or he may, on request of a State or municipality, be assigned to projects which are supported wholly by local resources. In each case, the aim of the Office of Economic Opportunity will be simply to bring together a Volunteer willing to serve and an opportunity for service.

The term of service in the volunteers for America program will normally be 1 year, including training. To be eligible, applicants must be at least 18 years of age. Specific standards of selection—including physical condition and level of education and experience required—will vary depending on the job to be done, but a high degree of motivation and stability will be required in every case. As in the Peace Corps, initial selection will be made on the basis of detailed applications, references, and an aptitude examination; final selection will be based upon evaluation of a candidate during training.

Training for approximately a 1-month period will be given to every volunteer. The training will be conducted through contracts with colleges and universities throughout the country. Although the content of training will vary with the nature and location of the job at hand, it will normally include studies in the volunteers of America program, the nature and causes of poverty in this country, the skills required for the specific project, and physical fitness and health care.

Membership will be of two basic types. Approximately 2,500 of the 5,000 volunteers anticipated by the end of the first year of operations will be responsible directly to the State or local organization under whose auspices they are serving or to a central State office. In this case, the assignment of volunteers will be subject to the approval of the Governor, and the State or local community will be responsible for payment of all allowances and support costs following the period of training.

Of the balance of the volunteers, part will be assigned on request of Federal agencies to various poverty-related programs where opportunities for service exist. They will work in programs on Indian reservations, programs dealing with migratory workers, and programs located outside the 50 States—such as those which might be undertaken in the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and Guam or other American territories. And part will serve in conservation camps in Job Corps training centers, and in federally assisted mental health and mental retardation institutions. The Office of Economic Opportunity will bear the costs of volunteer services for Federal programs.

The Deputy Director for Volunteers will both assign volunteers to Federal programs and make available to interested States and communities lists of qualified applicants for programs under their auspices. All training will be conducted by the Office of Economic Opportunity, although a State or locality will, of course, be free to supplement such training to the degree it deems desirable.

Volunteers will receive an allowance of $50 for each month of satisfactory service, including the training period, to be held for them until the completion of their service. In addition, they will receive a living allowance which will vary depending upon the location of the project and the types of support provided in kind. In any case, volunteers will receive—either in kind or through their living allowances—housing, subsistence, transportation, medical care, and the supplies, equipment, and special clothing necessary during their period of service.

For volunteers assigned to State and local programs, the entire cost to the Federal Government will be the intital costs of selection, processing and training. This will normally be obligated at the time the volunteer enters training. Two million dollars will therefore be required to enroll in service in fiscal year 1965 an estimated 2,500 volunteers in this category at an estimated average per capita cost of $800.

For volunteers assigned to Federal programs and federally assisted institutions, it will also be necessary to finance all of the initial processing training costs. These initial costs are expected to average approximately $900, including the provision of certain items of work clothing and supplies. Since volunteers will be phasing in during the year, average posttraining costs and allowances during fiscal year 1965 are estimated to be about $300. Three million dollars will therefore be necessary to enroll in service in 1965 an estimated 2,500 volunteers in this category at an average per capita cost of $1,200.

Information Center

The antipoverty programs of the Federal Government involve more than a score of agencies and offices, dozens of laws, and hundreds of pages implementing regulations and procedures. To a local mayor, city councilman, county supervisor, or welfare official the prospect of contacting and dealing with half a dozen or more Federal agencies can present a prohibitive obstacle to progress. The local official or community leader who attempts to mobilize the Federal help now available to him must thread his way alone through this labyrinth.

A one-stop antipoverty data center will end that confusion and break through much of the existing redtape that has bewildered local officials. Above all, it will get into their hands a single response that will furnish them information about ongoing Federal antipoverty programs.

It is planned to establish such a center in Washington, D.C., to provide prompt and complete service to State, county, and city officials, and others who will organize and carry out community action programs.

The operations of the center will be geared to meet the needs of specific communities. Conditions, problems, and avenues of attack on poverty will differ from community to community and from State to State. The center will furnish each community the kind of information it needs.

We expect the workload of the center to be large, as more and more communities seek ways by which they can tackle the problems of poverty. The first contact which a community makes with the center will be all important in keeping alive the spark of initiative that has been kindled in the community. No community anywhere should fail to act because the Government was either too slow in responding to a request for help or because the information and data furnished was inadequate to meet its needs. To assure that this goal is met, the center will serve as a coordinator for response to local officials. Where several agencies of the Federal Government are involved in a specific program, the center will do the necessary legwork to see to it that the local community gets a single set of replies to its questions.

This center would not duplicate or overlap present services performed by an existing agency. Specific requests for information about the Department of Labor, for example, will continue to be handled by that agency. The same would hold true for all other agencies.

This new dimension of the antipoverty effort will, however, require a new approach to the handling of requests for help from all across the Nation, especially as the combined resources of the Federal Government are brought to bear in the attack on poverty.

The work of the center will be closely coordinated with the teams of experts who will work directly with local community action organization in their planning and programs. In addition, the center will make available, on request, to communities and officials samples, case studies, and models of how other areas have solved or attacked similar problems.

Office of Economic Opportunity

ORGANIZATION AND ADMINISTRATION

The Office of Economic Opportunity, headed by a Director, will be located in the Executive Office of the President. The proposed Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 would give the Director the function of coordinating existing Federal agency programs related to poverty, and also empower him to initiate new programs as specifically authorized by the act. Except for the Job Corps, the analysis and review of community action plans, and administration of the volunteers for America program, nearly all operating functions of the antipoverty program will be perfomed by other departments and agencies, with the Director formulating guidelines to govern their overall shape and content.

Organizational details are still tentative, but the basic outlines are as follows:

Office of the Director

Director	Statutory.
Deputy Director	Do.
2 Special Assistants	GS–18.
Executive Secretary	GS–16.
Staff to the Office of the Director	6.
Executive secretariat	6.

The Director and his staff will have overall reponsiblity for the work of the Office. Paramount among the responsibilities involved will be (1) the coordination of the activities of other departments and agencies related to the combating of poverty, and (2) encouraging the cooperation and participation of business, labor, and other private organizations and associations in this effort, and (3) administering the program authorized by the proposed Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. In order to achive these ends more effectively, the Director and Deputy Director will also have the status of Special Assistant and Deputy Special Assistant to the President.

The two Special Assistants to the Director will assume special responsibilities in advising the Director on problems of Federal interagency coordination, and ways to enlist the cooperation of business, labor, and private organizations.

Job Corps

Deputy Director for the Job Corps	Statutory.
Assistant Deputy Director	GS–18.
2 Associate Directors	GS–17.
Program Staff	48.
Recruitment Staff	10.

The Deputy Director for the Job Corps will have overall responsibility for the composition and activities of both the conservation camps and the vocational training centers located throughout the country. The Washington staff will have two basic functions, as indicated by the divisions within the office: (1) program responsibilities concerning the basic nature of the camps, including the selection of enrollees and the administration, content, and evaluation of the camps, and (2) the recruitment, including any necessary training, of the teaching staff. The implementation of program plans will be carried out in the field by USES offices, the camp staffs, and other appropriate organizations or individuals.

Community Action Programs

Deputy Director for Community Action	Statutory.
Assistant Deputy Director	GS–18.
Chief—Program and Financial Analysis	GS–17.
Chief—Information Center	GS–17.
11 regional directors	GS–17.
Program analysis staff	15.
Financial analysis staff	8.
Information staff	30.
Regional office staff	39.

The Deputy Director for Community Action and his staff will be responsible for overseeing the efforts of "target" communities to combat poverty. To this end, they will conduct practical analyses of the causes of poverty and its incidence throughout the country, and they will formulate specific guidelines to other departments and agencies on the shape and content of their role in a coordinated Federal effort to eliminate poverty. In particular, they will be responsible for the analysis of community action and related program submissions and for recommending appropriate action by various agenies.

There will be 11 regional offices, each headed by a regional representative, who will be responsible for the horizontal integration of all Federal services to meet the needs of approved community action plans. In addition, they will stimulate and process individual plans, recommend appropriate Washington action, and seek highest level State cooperation.

The financial analysis staff will be responsible for the allocation to other departments and agencies of funds appropriated to the Director for the implementation of programs recommended by the program staff.

The information center staff will serve as a one-stop source of information about the full range of Federal antipoverty programs for State and local government officials and other interested individuals in order to enable them more effectively to take advantage of Federal resources available to assist in eliminating poverty.

Volunteers for America Program

Deputy Director for Volunteers	Statutory.
Assistant Deputy Director for Volunteers	GS–17.
Chief—Selection	GS–17.
Chief—Training	GS–17.
Selection staff	30.
Support staff	40.

The Deputy Director for Volunteers and his staff will be responsible for the nationwide program involving an estimated 5,000 volunteers at the local, State, or Federal level in programs designed to combat poverty.

The selection staff will evaluate all applications and will allocate suitable applicants to appropriate programs including referral to State and local programs. It will also serve as a clearinghouse for the allocation of suitable applicants to local communities.

The support staff will develop training programs for all volunteers and will develop and apply payment, transportation, and related policies for volunteers in Federal programs. In doing so, they will work closely with State and local authorities in order to assure that volunteer programs are coordinated throughout the country.

General Counsel

General Counsel	GS-18.
Deputy General Counsel	GS-16.
Staff	3.

The General Counsel and his staff will provide legal counsel and other legal services related to the attack on poverty and to the proposed legislation.

Public Information

Associate Director for Public Information	GS-17.
Staff:
Press relations	8.
Public affairs	15.

The Associate Director for Public Information and his staff will be responsible for all information functions directed at the general public. The press relations staff will deal with communications media and with interested individuals to explain and interpret the Government-wide program to combat poverty to the public.

The public affairs staff will have primary responsibility for a nationwide information campaign aimed at (1) volunteer enrollees in the Job Corps, (2) volunteers to work as staff at the Federal, State, or local level in the various programs involved in the antipoverty effort, and (3) paid staff members for the Job Corps camps.

Management

Associate Director for Management	GS-17.
Staff:
Accounting and audit	8.
Personnel	6.
Management services	8.

The Associate Director for Management and his staff will be responsible for the internal administration of the Office of Economic Opportunity. This will involve accounting for the funds appropriated to the Director, audit of the financial records of communities with approved community action and related programs, personnel services for the Office, and management services such as building maintenance, reproduction, stocks and records, and the like.

SUMMARY

The organization of the Office of Economic Opportunity as described above would involve a Washington staff of 247, of whom 5 will be statutory and 16 will be supergrades, and a field staff of 65 direct hire personnel, of whom 11 would be supergrades.

The bill contains six titles:

TITLE I—YOUTH PROGRAMS

Part A.—Establishes a Job Corps within the Office of Economic Opportunity, with responsibility for administering a program of education, work experience, and vocational training for youths aged 16 through 21. Two kinds of programs are envisaged—conservation camps providing useful work and basic education and residential training centers providing basic education and job training programs to increase employability.

Part B.—Authorizes the Director to enter into agreements with State and local governments or nonprofit agencies to pay part of the costs of part- or full-time employment for young men and women aged 16 through 21 to enable them to resume or continue their education or to increase their employability. This part of the program will be administered by the Department of Labor.

Part C.—Authorizes the Director to enter into agreements with institutions of higher learning to pay part of the costs of part-time employment for undergraduate, graduate, or professional students from low-income families in order to enable them to pursue courses of study at such institutions. This part of the program will be administered by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

TITLE II—URBAN AND RURAL COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS

Authorizes the Director to encourage and support community action programs which mobilize community resources to combat poverty and which are conducted by a local government unit or an organization which is broadly representative of the community. Elementary or secondary school education programs which receive Federal assistance will be administered by the public school system, and such programs must be open to all children regardless of whether they are regularly enrolled in the public schools. Assistance may be provided to communities in advance of the completion of the plan. Technical assistance in preparing and administering community programs may be furnished. Financial assistance from the Federal Government under this title will be 90 percent of the costs of the programs for the first 2 years and 75 percent thereafter. The Director will establish criteria for equitable distribution of Federal funds; not more than 12½ percent of total funds may be used within one State in any one year. Programs will be administered by the communities and will incorporate assistance from various Federal departments and agencies.

TITLE III—SPECIAL PROGRAMS TO COMBAT POVERTY IN RURAL AREAS

Authorizes grants up to $1,500 to low-income rural families where such grants are likely to effect a permanent increase in the income of such families, and loans up to $2,500 to finance nonagricultural income-producing enterprises for the same purpose. The Director may also provide assistance to nonprofit corporations to acquire land to be reconstituted into family farms, and make loans to cooperatives. Program will be administered by the Department of Agriculture.

TITLE IV—EMPLOYMENT AND INVESTMENT INCENTIVES

Part A.—Authorizes the Director to make, participate in, or guarantee loans for investments which will employ hard-core unemployed or members of low-income families. These investments may be outside designated surplus labor areas, if they are part of a community action plan. Program will be administered by the Area Redevelopment Administration.

Part B.—Authorizes the Director to make, participate in, or guarantee loans to small businesses not in excess of $15,000 on more liberal terms than the regular loan provisions of the Small Business Administration. Program will be administered by SBA.

TITLE V—FAMILY UNITY THROUGH JOBS

Authorizes the Director to transfer funds to HEW to pay costs of experimental, pilot or demonstration projects designed to stimulate the adoption in States of programs providing constructive work experience or training for unemployed fathers and other members of needy families with children.

TITLE VI—ADMINISTRATION AND COORDINATION

Establishes the Office of Economic Opportunity. Authorizes the Director to recruit, select, and train volunteers, and to refer them to programs at the State or local level, or to utilize them, with appropriate allowances and benefits, in specified mental health, migrant, Indian, and other Federal programs, including the Job Corps. Establishes an Economic Opportunity Council made up of Federal officers, and a National Advisory Council of citizens appointed by the President to consult with and advise the Director. Also authorizes the Director to assist the President in coordinating the antipoverty efforts of all Federal agencies and requires other agencies, to the maximum extent feasible, to carry out poverty-related programs in a manner which will assist in carrying out the purposes of this bill. Provides that the President may direct that programs of Federal agencies be carried out, to the extent consistent with other applicable law, in conjunction with or in support of programs authorized by the bill. Requires heads of agencies, where possible, to give preference in their programing to community action programs. Authorizes the Director to take steps to insure that adequate information concerning all relevant Federal programs is readily available to public officials and other interested persons.

One Dan Goggin (~~Goff~~), formerly a city councilman of North Atlanta, together with a Gerald Niles, is attempting to set up a Coop in his area. This involves, apparently, negroes and "interested, good, whites" in the Area. Purpose of coop is to get work, direct, on contract basis, for the membership. Thru cooperative advertising. Also, later, want to set up a store. There are just a couple of stores in the area serving these people, and "they are robbing them blind."

Is getting run-around from Dan Sweatt, in Emmerich's office, he says. Isn't this because he's in DeKalb and Emmerich is FULTON-ATLANTA only?

SUMMARY OF ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1964
(Signed by President August 20, 1964)

Highlights

Administration: Act establishes in the Executive Office of the President an Office of Economic Opportunity, headed by a director reporting directly to the President, to administer, delegate authority to administer, and to coordinate the various programs authorized by Economic Opportunity Act.

Authorization: Programs authorized by act are to be carried out in fiscal year ending June 30, 1965 and two succeeding fiscal years. First year's authorization for appropriations totals $947.5 million. New authorizations for appropriations necessary for succeeding fiscal years.

Programs: Major programs authorized are Youth Programs --Job Corps, Work-Training Program, Work-Study Program; Community Action Programs; Special Programs to Combat Poverty in Rural Areas, including loans to low-income rural families and assistance to migrant and other seasonally-employed agricultural employees and their families; Employment and Investment Incentives; Work-Experience Programs; and Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA).

TITLE I -- YOUTH PROGRAMS

Part A - Job Corps: Purpose is to prepare for citizenship and to increase employability of youth ages 16 through 21 by providing them education, vocational training, useful work experiences, including work on conservation of natural resources, and other activities through rural and urban residential centers.

Director of OEO is authorized to enter into agreement with Federal, State, or local agency or private organization for establishment and operation, in rural and urban areas, of conservation camps and training centers. Includes agreements with agencies charged with conserving, developing, and managing public natural resources and recreational areas for utilizing Job Corps enrollees in carrying out responsibilities of the agencies.

Corps to arrange for education and vocational training of enrollees. Where practicable, such education and training to be provided by local public educational agencies or private vocational education or technical institutes where they can provide substantially equivalent education and training at less cost.

Corps to be composed of young men and women who are permanent residents of the U. S.: Corps enrollment does not relieve obligation for military service.

Enrollment in Corps not to exceed two years except as Director may determine.

Enrollees provided such living, travel, and leave allowances; and such quarters, subsistence, transportation, equipment, clothing, recreational and health services, and other expenses as Director may deem appropriate. As deemed appropriate, travel may be provided to and from places of enrollment and, upon termination of service, to place of residence.

Upon termination of service, each enrollee entitled to readjustment allowance not to exceed $50 per month for each month of satisfactory service. As determined by Director, portion of readjustment allowance not exceeding $25 per month may be paid during period of enrollment directly to member of enrollee's family. Any such sum to be supplemented by payment of equal amount by the Director.

State-Operated Youth Camps

Director is authorized to enter into agreement with States to assist in operation and administration of State-operated programs which carry out purposes of Job Corps.

No camps, training centers, or other facilities designed to carry out purposes of act, shall be established within State unless plan has been submitted to the Governor of said State and not disapproved by him within 30 days of submission.

No less than 40 percent of enrollees in Job Corps shall be assigned to camps where their work is directed primarily toward conservation, developing, and managing public natural resource and recreational areas. Such work to be performed under direction of agencies charged with above responsibilities.

Part B - Work-Training Programs: Purpose is to provide useful work experiences for unemployed young men and women, ages 16 through 21 who are permanent residents of the U. S., through participation in State and community work-training programs so their employability may be increased or their education resumed. Such work experiences designed to provide needed services in public interest by public or non-profit private agencies or organizations that would not otherwise be provided, or to contribute to the conservation and development of natural resources and recreational areas.

Director shall assist State and local agencies and private non-profit organizations in developing programs for employment of youth in authorized activities. Wherever appropriate, such work shall be coordinated with training and education provided by local public educational agencies.

Rates of pay and other conditions of employment will be appropriate in light of type of work, geographical region of employment, and proficiency of employees.

Director shall give priority to projects with high training potential which provide reasonable expectation of employment, or which enable enrollees to resume or maintain school attendance.

Part C - Work-Study Programs: Purpose is to stimulate and promote part-time employment of students in institutions of higher education who are from low-income families and who are in need of employment in order to continue their education at such institutions.

Director is authorized to enter into agreement with institutions of higher education to make grants for operation of work-study programs. Work may be performed for institution or for public or non-profit private organization when position is obtained through an arrangement between institution and organization and when (a) such work is related to student's educational objectives or (b) is in public interest and would not otherwise be provided, and (c) will not displace employed workers or impair existing contracts for services. No work shall involve construction, operation, or maintenance of "so much of any facility used or to be used for sectarian instruction or as a place for religious worship."

Work will be governed by such conditions of employment as are appropriate in light of type of work performed, geographical region of employment, and proficiency of the employee. Employment to be furnished only to students who (a) are from low-income families, (b) are in need of employment in order to continue study at such institution, (c) are capable of maintaining good standing in institution while employed, and (d) have been accepted for enrollment as full-time students at institution or who are already enrolled as full-time students.

No student shall be employed under work-study program more than 15 hours in any week in which classes in which he is enrolled are in session.

Federal share of compensation of students will not exceed 90 percent of compensation for work performed during period ending two years after enactment of this act, and 75 percent thereafter.

Part D - Authorization for Appropriations: $412.5 million authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year ending June 30, 1965, for Title I.

TITLE II
URBAN AND RURAL COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS

Part A - General Community Action Programs: Purpose is to provide stimulation and incentive for urban and rural communities to mobilize their resources to combat poverty through community action programs. CAP means a program:

> Which mobilizes public or private resource of any urban or rural, or combined urban and rural, geographical area (referred to in this part as a community) including but not limited to a State, metropolitan area, county, city, town, multi-city area, or multi-county unit in an attack on poverty;
> Which provides services, assistance, and other activities of sufficient scope and size to give promise of progress toward elimination of poverty or causes of poverty by developing employment opportunities, improving human performance, motivation, and productivity, or bettering the conditions under which people live, learn, and work;

Which is developed, conducted, and administered with maximum feasible participation of residents of the areas and members of groups served, and;

Which is conducted, administered, or coordinated by a public or private non-profit agency or combination thereof.

Financial Assistance
(Sections 204-205)

Director is authorized to make grants to, or to contract with, appropriate public or private non-profit agencies, or combination thereof, to pay part or all of the cost of development of community action programs which have been approved by him and which have not been disapproved by Governor of State within 30 days after submission of plan for program to the Governor.

Community action programs can be conducted in fields encompassed in this part of act including employment, job training and counseling, health, vocational rehabilitation, housing, home management, welfare, and special remedial and other non-curricular educational assistance for the benefit of low-income individuals and families.

No grant or contract authorized under this part of act may provide for general aid to elementary or secondary education in any school or school system.

In determining whether to extend assistance under this part of act, the Director shall consider, among other factors, the incidence of poverty in community and within areas and groups to be affected by proposed programs, and the extent to which applicants are able to utilize the assistance requested.

In determining the incidence of poverty, the Director shall consider information on:

The concentration of low-income families, particularly those with children;

The extent of persistent unemployment and under-employment;

The number of migrant or transient low-income families;

The number and proportion of persons receiving cash or other assistance on a needs basis from public agencies or private organizations;

School drop-out rates, military service rejection rates, and other evidence of low educational attainment;

The incidence of disease, disability, and infant mortality; housing conditions; adequacy of community facilities and services; and the incidence of crime and juvenile delinquency.

Special consideration shall be given to programs which show promise of improving capacity of individuals, groups, and communities to deal with their problems without further assistance.

Financial assistance for community action programs shall not exceed 90 percent of the costs for the period ending two years after enactment of the act. Thereafter, financial assistance shall not exceed 50 percent of such costs. Expenditures or contributions from non-Federal sources for a community action program or component thereof shall be in addition to the aggregate expenditures or contributions from non-Federal sources which were being made for similar purposes prior to the extension of Federal assistance.

Technical Assistance
(Section 206)

Director is authorized to provide, either directly or through grants or other arrangements, (a) technical assistance to communities in developing, conducting, and administering community action programs, and (b) training specialized personnel needed to develop, conduct, or administer such programs or to provide services or other assistance thereunder.

Research, Training, and Demonstrations
(Section 207)

Director is authorized to conduct, or to make grants or to enter into contracts with institutions of higher education or other appropriate public agencies or private organizations for the conduct of research, training, and demonstrations pertaining to the purposes of this part of the act. Expenditures for this purpose in any fiscal year shall not exceed 15 percent of the total sums appropriated or allocated for such year to carry out the purposes of Part A.

Participation of State Agencies
(Sections 209-210)

Director is authorized to make grants to, or contract with, appropriate State agencies for the payment of the expenses of such agencies in providing technical assistance to communities in developing, conducting, and administering community action programs.

No contract, agreement, grant, loan, or other assistance shall be made with, or provided to, any State or local public agency or private institution or organization for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of Title I and II of this act within a State unless a plan setting forth such proposed contract, agreement, grant, loan, or other assistance has been submitted to the Governor of the State, and such plan has not been disapproved by him within 30 days of submission;

Provided, however, that this provision shall not apply to contracts, agreements, grants, loans, or other assistance to any institution of higher education in existence on the date of the approval of this act.

No private institution or organization shall be eligible for participation in community action programs unless it (a) has had a concern with problems of poverty prior to its consideration for participation, or (b) is sponsored by one or more such institutions or organizations or by a public agency, or (c) is an institution of higher education.

The Director shall establish criteria designed to achieve equitable distribution of assistance between urban and rural areas within the state for community action programs.

Part B - Adult Basic Education Programs: Purpose is to initiate programs of instruction for persons who have attained age 18 and whose inability to read and write the English language constitutes a barrier to getting or retaining employment in line with their ability.

Grants for basic adult education programs may be made to States which have State plans approved by the Director. Grants may be used to:

Assist in the development of pilot projects by local educational agencies, relating to instruction of persons in public schools, or other facilities used for this purpose by such schools, to (a) demonstrate, test, or develop modifications or adaptations in the light of local needs of special materials or methods of instructions, (b) stimulate the development of local educational agency programs for instruction of such persons, and (c) acquire additional information about materials or methods needed for an effective program of raising adult basic education skills;

Assist in meeting the costs of local educational agency programs for instruction of such individuals, and;

Assist in the development or improvement of technical or supervisory services by the State educational agency relating to adult basic education programs.

The Director shall approve for purposes of Part B the plan of a State which provides for administration by the State educational agency.

Part C - Voluntary Assistance Program for Needy Children: Purpose is to allow individual Americans to assist in the support of one or more needy children through a program coordinated with city or county social welfare agencies.

Director is authorized to establish a section within Office of Economic Opportunity to act as an information and coordination center to encourage voluntary assistance for needy children. This section has no authority over State and local welfare agencies with respect to programs for needy children.

Part D - Authorization for Appropriations: $340 million authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year ending June 30, 1965.

TITLE III
SPECIAL PROGRAMS TO COMBAT POVERTY IN RURAL AREAS

Purpose is to meet some of the special problems of rural poverty and thereby raise and maintain income and living standards of low-income rural families and migrant agricultural employees and their families.

Part A - Authority to Make Loans: Director is authorized to make loans of up to $2500 for 15 years to low-income rural families to:

Acquire or improve real estate; participate in cooperative associations; and to finance small non-agricultural enterprises on farms to supplement the family's income from farming;

To pay for equipment, livestock, seed, feed, fertilizer, and other inputs needed by low-income farmers to raise their income.

Loans are to be made only to families not qualified to obtain such funds by loan under other Federal programs.

Loans are also available to finance cooperatives providing low-income rural families essential marketing, purchasing, and other services to help them earn a better living.

Part B - Assistance for Migrant and Other Seasonally Employed Agricultural Employees and Their Families: Director shall develop and implement as soon as practicable a program to assist State organizations, agencies, and individuals in establishing and operating programs of assistance for migrants and other seasonally employed agricultural employees and their families. Programs to be limited to housing, sanitation, education, and day-care of children. Institutions, organizations, or individuals shall be limited to direct loans.

Part C - Authorization for Appropriation: $35 million authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year ending June 30, 1965.

Part D - Indemnity Payments to Dairy Farmers: Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make indemnity payments, at fair market value, to dairy farmers who have been directed since January 1, 1964, to remove milk from commercial market because of residues of chemicals registered and approved for use by the Federal government at the time of use. Such payments to continue until dairy farmer has been reinstated and is allowed to dispose of his milk in commercial markets. Authorization is granted for appropriations of funds necessary to carry out this portion of act. Authority expires on January 31, 1965.

TITLE IV
EMPLOYMENT AND INVESTMENT INCENTIVES

Purpose is to assist in the establishment, preservation, and strengthening of small business concerns; improve managerial abilities employed in such enterprises; and to mobilize for these objectives private and public managerial skills and resources.

Director is authorized to make, participate in, or guarantee loans for 15 years to any small business concern or to any qualified person seeking to establish such a concern. Special emphasis to be placed on employment of long-term unemployed. No loan(s) to a single borrower to exceed $25,000 outstanding at any one time.

No loan shall be made in any community having an approved community action program unless such financial assistance is determined by the Director to be consistent with such program.

Lending and guaranty functions under this title as may be delegated to the Small Business Administration may be financed with funds appropriated to the revolving fund established by section 4(c) of the Small Business Act.

TITLE V
WORK-EXPERIENCE PROGRAMS

Purpose is to expand opportunities for constructive work experiences and other needed training to persons unable to support or care for themselves or their families. In carrying out this purpose, the Director shall make maximum use of programs available under the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962, as amended, and the Vocational Education Act of 1963.

Director is authorized to transfer funds appropriated or allocated to carry out purposes of this title to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to enable it to make payments for experimental, pilot, or demonstration projects designed to help unemployed fathers and other needy persons secure and retain employment or personal independence.

Authorization for Appropriation: $150 million authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year ending June 30, 1965.

TITLE VI
ADMINISTRATION AND COORDINATION

Part A - Administration: Act establishes in the Executive Office of the President an Office of Economic Opportunity, headed by a director appointed by the President and directly responsible to him.

Director's authority includes, with approval of the President, arranging with and reimbursing other Federal agencies for the performance of any of his functions under this act and, as appropriate, to delegate any of his powers under this act and authorize the re-delegation thereof. Authority also includes utilizing, with their consent, the services and facilities of Federal agencies without reimbursement and, with the consent of any State or political subdivision of a State, accept and utilize their services and facilities without reimbursement.

Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA): The Director is authorized to recruit, select, and train volunteers and; --

Upon request of State or local agency or private non-profit organization, refer volunteers to work in furtherance of programs to combat poverty;

In cooperation with other Federal, State, or local agencies involved, assign volunteers to work in (a) meeting the health, education, welfare, or related needs of Indians living on reservations, of migratory workers and their families, or of residents of the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, (b) in the care and rehabilitation of mentally ill or mentally retarded under treatment at non-profit mental health or mental retardation facilities assisted in their construction or operation by Federal funds, and (c) in furtherance of programs or activities supported by Titles I and II of this act.

Director is authorized to provide to all volunteers during training and to volunteers assigned to above duties stipend not to exceed $50 per month; living, travel, and leave allowance; housing; equipment, clothing, and health care as Director may deem appropriate.

Volunteers shall not be referred or assigned to duties or work in any State without the consent of the Governor.

Part B - Coordination of Antipoverty Program: Director is authorized to coordinate Federal programs carried out under act and to call upon other Federal agencies to supply information and other materials he deems necessary to discharge his responsibilities under the act.

To the extent feasible, heads of Federal agencies are directed to give preference to applications for assistance or benefits which are made pursuant to or in connection with a community action program approved under Title II.

TITLE VII

Sets forth provisions for computing income taxes of persons receiving payments under Title I or II and programs assisted under such titles; for determining income in relation to eligibility of persons receiving grants under Title III; and for determining eligibility of States for Social Security funds in relation to State plans submitted under Economic Opportunity Act.

MECHANIZED FARMS CAST OFF LABORERS; RACISTS BLOCK

Jobless Negroes pour

By Dale Gronemeier
and Jerry Tecklin

WILLIEBELL SMITH, 35, a Mississippi Negro, lived and worked on a plantation between Drew and Ruleville. After going to a voter registration rally, he wore two SNCC pins to the field—the clasped black and white hands and the "One Man, One Vote" buttons. "The Man" of course fired him and ordered him off the plantation. Williebell Smith is a simple man with a simple desire to be free. He is illiterate and has no skills. "The Man" could easily fire him because mechanization is eliminating the need for agricultural labor.

For days, Williebell Smith hung around the SNCC Community Center in Ruleville. There was nothing the movment could do for him; it has few jobs and none for the illiterate. There were no jobs in the community. The summer volunteers avoided his eyes, feeling guilty that they could not help him.

Mississippi—that abstraction for a billion cold and minute injustices—has created in Williebill Smith a human being useless to its purposes. Yet he is one of the luckiest of its victims, for in some sense he chose his fate. Far sadder are the thousands simply pushed off the land with no place to go, no skills to sell, and no proud act to salve being "useless." They have filled the towns of the South and then moved on to the slums of the North. Their tragedy makes the plight of those in the Okie exodus of the 1930s seem pale.

THE BLACK MIGRATION out of Mississippi has been going on at a rapid rate since 1940. The percentage of Negroes in the state has been reduced from a high of 58.5% in 1900 to the current 42%. Between 1950-1960, the Negro population decreased by 7.2% while the white increased by 5.8%. The migration has been starkest in the black-belt Delta counties: Tunica, 24.8%; Tallahatchie, 20.1%; Sunflower, 18.7%; Quitman, 15.3%; Bolivar, 14.4%; Leflore 13.8%. Hardest hit are the young Negroes; while there was a total decrease of 72,213 Negroes in the state between 1950-60, the 19-44 age bracket decreased by 93,599—i.e., there are more very young and old Negroes and many less working-age Negroes.

The increasing mechanization of cotton-farming has been the primary cause of migration. Beginning in the 1940s, tractors replaced the mule drivers. The replacement of cotton-pickers by cotton-picking machines has been going on since the end of World War II and is near completion. Effective methods with flamethrowers and pre-emergent herbicides to eliminate hand-chopping of weeds appear to be only a few years away.

THE THRUST of agricultural automation has been intensified by the conscious hope of whites that the Negro migration will effect a "final solution to the race question." The White Citizen's Council, born in the Delta, in 1955, has encouraged the Negro exodus.

State Senator W. B. Alexander Jr. of Bolivar County told New York Times reporter David Halberstam July 19: "We could get along with 15,000 coloreds in this county." (The 1960 census showed 36,701 Negroes in the county.) The Bolivar County Overall Economic Development Program (an economic study that counties seeking federal funds must produce) said: "Due to the critical labor situation that exists in this area at this time, complete mechanization, along with the full utilization of chemicals, is considered a 'must' in the very near future." The "critical labor situation" is the dream of the whites rather than the reality.

COTTON FIELD WORKERS GA
Farm mechanization is rapi

What is developing is an all-white economy; the Negroes have moved and will move because their agricultural jobs are eliminated and industrial jobs are reserved for whites. The change has been both rapid and enormous; in 1940, 58% (420,000) of the labor force was in agriculture; in 1960 only 21% (142,000). In Sunflower County, for instance, primarily Negro agricultural jobs decreased by 5,588 in 1950-1960; primarily white non-agricultural jobs increased by 1,251. There are few young Negro adults in Sunflower.

EVEN IF INDUSTRIAL JOBS were opened up, Negroes are not being prepared for the transition. On billboards along Mississippi's highways, a dark figure pushing a wheelbarrow is seen receding into the background; over the picture are the words: "You can't get tomorrow's job with yesterday's skills." The enlightened admonition of the Advertising Council is not carried over into public policy. The educational system makes no effort to educate Negroes for a place in a technological society. The Ruleville Negro high school, for instance, has no technical training (it does, however, have a course in farm management—not exactly the thing for landless Negroes!).

There has been little or no use of the federal retraining programs. According to Cecil Black, U.S. Department of Agriculture Sunflower County agent, the plantation-owning whites vetoed a tractor-driver retraining program because the federal government would pay the trainees $1.25 an hour—more than Delta farmers are willing to pay tractor drivers. At the same time, Black said paradoxically, the county is overloaded with industry because there is a shortage of skilled personnel for more industry. It seemed clear that federal retraining programs are opposed because they will keep Negroes in the Delta and because they are integrated.

THE WHITE COMMUNITY has eliminated Negro jobs, provided a third-rate segregated education, and given "useless" Negroes no alternative but to move out. The vaunted Southern "benevolence" to the Negro disappears as soon as the Negro's hands are no longer profitable. But there are even more sinister aspects to the "final solution to the Negro question": Some of the

idly reducing the number of jobs for the uneducated and the unskilled of white Mississippi seem consciously genocidal.

Last winter, a number of counties refused free federal surplus foods—food that would have gone to starving Negroes. Mississippi HB 180, a bill providing for either prison terms or sterilization for parents of more than one illegitimate child, was passed by the Mississippi lower house but was toned down after SNCC published a pamphlet, "Genocide in Mississippi." Rep. Stone Barefield of Hattiesburg said during floor debate on the bill. "When the cutting starts, they'll [Negroes] head for Chicago."

Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer, Ruleville civil rights leader, charges that Mississippi doctors haven't needed any sterilization bill to start cutting; she says she knows of a number of instances when Negro women have gone into a hospital for an operation and have come out involuntarily sterilized.

WORKERS IN THE MOVEMENT for civil rights are deeply concerned about the economic squeeze. They fear that all the work in building a grass-roots organization will have been wasted unless the attempt to drive the Negro North is thwarted. SNCC speakers constantly urge young people not to leave Mississippi. The movement has given many of them an outlet for their frustrations and a reason for staying. But short of providing some economic incentive, the Negro removal plan cannot be balked.

A federal depressed areas program, pouring in hundreds of millions of dollars, would seem to be one solution. But such programs have traditionally required the participation of local power-structure leadership. Even if the whites were willing to participate in such a program, the old Negro subservience would only be perpetuated in a new form. A program to develop a Negro economy which used Negro leadership does not seem possible, given the national legislative strength of the Dixiecrats. Rep. Jamie Whitten, of the Mississippi Delta's 2nd Congressional District, for example, ranks fifth on the Appropriations Committee of the House and is chairman or a member of subcommittees which pass on 80% of the entire federal budget.

There is germinal talk of a cooperative movment. On a very limited scale, there have been ventures in this direction—the Fayette County, Tennessee, tote bag industry, the quilting cooperative in Ruleville. Just as the movement has graduated from the idealistic headlong assault on public accommodations in its early stages to the more calculated stage of organizing the people into local movements, it seems inevitable that it will shortly begin work to provide some economic solution for black Mississippi.

Circumstances necessitate radical solutions. For, unless an economy can be developed for the Negroes, Mississippi will continue to feed the slums of Harlem, Chicago and Los Angeles, and the tragedy of uprooted humans will go on and on.

FACTS ABOUT VISTA VOLUNTEERS

VISTA - As the Peace Corps offers an opportunity for voluntary service abroad, VISTA offers a similar opportunity for dedicated Americans to serve their country at home. VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America) is part of the Office of Economic Opportunity which was created by President Johnson to wage the War Against Poverty. VISTA will recruit, select, train, place, and support qualified Volunteers whose services have been requested to assist in eliminating poverty in the United States.

WHO MAY APPLY - Any person 18 years of age or older may apply. Married couples are eligible, if both the husband and wife qualify for service. In certain cases, married couples with children will also be considered. Volunteers will not be exempted from military obligations.

LENGTH OF SERVICE - The period of service is one year, including a four to six weeks training program.

TRAINING - The training program will be directed towards the needs of the job and location to which the Volunteer will be assigned. It will stress supervised field experience, the application of particular skills to the environment in which the Volunteer will work, discussion of the nature and causes of poverty in the United States, area and language study, health education, and the development of recreational skills. Training will be conducted by local private and public organizations, including selected colleges and universities.

ASSIGNMENTS - Volunteer assignments will call for a great variety of skills, trades and professions. Volunteers will work in rural and urban community action programs, Job Corps camps, migrant worker communities, Indian reservations, hospitals, schools, and institutions for the mentally ill or mentally retarded. Volunteers may be sent to any of the fifty states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territories. An applicant may express an area preference.

ALLOWANCES - Volunteers will receive a monthly living allowance. Since the Volunteer will be expected to live where he or she works, the amount will vary depending on local conditions. In addition, Volunteers will receive a $50 stipend for each month of satisfactory service. Upon completion of service, the entire amount of the stipend will be paid to the Volunteer. During service, Volunteers will be reimbursed for medical and dental expenses.

HOW TO APPLY - Each applicant should obtain a preliminary application from VISTA or the local post office. Upon receipt of the preliminary application, VISTA will send each legally qualified applicant a detailed questionnaire. Selected applicants will be invited to participate in a training program. GUIDE TO COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM GRANTS

Authorized under Sections 204 and 205 of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964

A. GRANTS FOR COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS

1. Contents of this guide. This guide sets forth policies and application procedures of the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) in providing financial assistance to communities for the development, conduct, and administration of community action programs (CAP's) under Sections 204 and 205 of Title II-A of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

   Additional guides, available on request from OEO, Washington, D. C., provide information policies and application procedures for other grant programs authorized under Title II-A, including:

   a. Technical Assistance Grants to States, under Section 209(b), to enable State agencies to assist communities in preparing CAP's.

   b. Research Grants and Contracts under Section 207 for studies, surveys, and investigations into the causes and nature of poverty and the means by which poverty might be eliminated or reduced.

   c. Demonstration Grants, under Section 207, to finance and evaluate novel and experimental approaches that give promise of increasing the effectiveness of local anti-poverty actions.

   d. Training Grants, under Section 207, to help orient and train professional and non-professional personnel for work in community action programs.

2. The purpose of the community action program. The purpose of Federal assistance to community action programs is to help urban and rural communities to mobilize their resources to combat poverty. Because community needs and resources differ widely, considerable latitude is allowed in the development and conduct of a community action program.

   Poverty is a network of social ills like illiteracy, unemployment, poor health, and dilapidated housing. To alleviate them requires a varied and coordinated attack. Remedial reading, literacy courses, job training, employment counseling, homemaker services, job development and training, vocational rehabilitation, and health services are some of the many program areas that can be support d and coordinated within a community action program.

A vital feature of every community action program is the involvement of the poor themselves--the residents of the areas and members of the groups to be served-- in planning and carrying out the program.

The long-range objective of every community action program is to effect a permanent increase in the capacity of individuals, groups, and communities afflicted by poverty to deal effectively with their own problems so that they need no further assistance.

3. Federal assistance available. The cost of developing, conducting, and administering a community action program may be paid in whole or in part by Federal funds. However, Federal assistance shall not exceed 90% of such costs for the period ending August 20, 1966, and thereafter shall not exceed 50% of such costs, unless the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity determines that assistance in excess of such percentages is required in furtherance of the purposes of Title II-A.

Federal assistance in excess of the statutory limitations shall be approved only for those communities which can demonstrate that all of the following conditions exist:

a. The community is severely afflicted by poverty, measured in terms of the factors set forth in Section 205 (c) of the Economic Opportunity Act;

b. The possibilities of providing the local share of program costs from existing public and private sources, either in cash or in kind, have been thoroughly explored without success; and

c. Constitutional, charter, or other provisions of law limit the authority of the general local government of the community and of other public agencies so as to preclude the possibility of the community's financing the local share of the cost of the community action program.

Federal assistance shall not in any event exceed the amount of actual cash outlay for the community action program.

4. Non-Federal share. The non-Federal share of community action program cost may be contributed in cash or in kind. The non-Federal share may be provided by any public or private agency, but may not include assistance provided directly or indirectly through other Federal programs, nor may any portion of the non-Federal share under any other Federal program be used to meet matching requirements for community action programs.

In kind contributions may include the cost of staff assigned to the community action program, supporting services which can be identified and priced, and the use of office space, automobiles, office equipment, and other facilities and equipment necessary to the effective operation of the program. In kind contributions shall be valued for this purpose in terms of actual or depreciated cost or fair value. No monetary value may be attributed to volunteer services as a contribution to the local share of program cost.

No credit will be given toward the non-Federal share for costs incurred prior to the date of approval of a grant by OEO.

5. Maintenance of non-Federal contribution. The expenditures or contributions made from non-Federal sources for a community action program or component thereof shall be in addition to the aggregate expenditures or contributions from non-Federal sources which were being made for similar purposes prior to the extension of Federal assistance. The activities proposed in the community action program must be incremental to the activities conducted in the 12 month period prior to applying for Federal assistance; related or similar programs conducted during the previous 12 months must not be curtailed, limited, or in any other way lessened in order to finance the non-Federal share.

6. Allotment of Federal aid. The distribution of Federal aid among communities for the development, conduct, and administration of community action programs is subject to the limits and procedures established by the Economic Opportunity Act. The requirements of the Act are essentially as follows:

Of the total amount reserved by the Director for community action programs, no more than 2 percent may be allotted to programs in Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands; 20 percent may be distributed among the States as the Director shall determine; the remainder is to be allotted among the States according to a statutory formula reflecting in equal proportions the number of public assistance recipients, the average annual number of persons unemployed, and the number of related children under 18 years of age living in families with incomes of less than $1,000. (See Exhibit I).

Any portion of any State's formula allotment which the Director determines will not be required for a given fiscal year can be made available for re-allotment from time to time on dates to be fixed by the Director.

In carrying out these provisions of the Act, the Director will redistribute the portion of any State's allotment which he determines will not be required for the remainder of the fiscal year in February and again in May.

In the allotment of the 20 percent of the funds which may be distributed among the States at the discretion of the Director, priority will be given:

First, to communities with the greatest need, as measured by the incidence of poverty.

Second, to communities which have, in the judgment of the Director, an unusual capacity for taking prompt and effective measures to carry out a community action program.

Third, to communities in States whose total allotment has been exhausted by prior grants or for which pending applications exceed the uncommitted balance of the allotment, and Fourth, to communities in rural areas for which the minimum feasible community action program requires large grants relative to the incidence of poverty.

7. Distribution among communities within a State. The Director is required under Section 210 of the Act to establish criteria to achieve an equitable distribution of grant funds within each State, between urban and rural areas, taking into consideration the relative numbers of:

   a. Low-income families, particularly those with children;

   b. Unemployed persons;

   c. Persons receiving cash or other assistance on a needs basis from public agencies or private organizations;

d. School dropouts;

e. Adults with less than an eighth grade education;

f. Persons rejected for military service; and

g. Persons living in urban places compared to the number living in rural places as determined by the Bureau of the Census for the 1960 census.

The Director is further required, under Section 205 (c), to take into account in the making of grants certain additional factors including: the number of migrant or transient low-income families, the incidence of disease, disability, and infant mortality, housing conditions, adequacy of community facilities and services, and the incidence of crime and juvenile delinquency.

The amount of grant funds available to an applicant will be based upon:

First, the incidence of poverty within the community in relation to the incidence of poverty in the State as a whole. The incidence of poverty is to be measured by each of the factors specified in Section 205 (c) and cited above.

Second, an overallocation factor, to be determined from time to time by the Director, reflecting his estimate of the aggregate proportion of poverty occuring in communities which are unlikely to require funds for community action programs during the current fiscal year.

Third, the amount allotted under Section 203 to the State in which the community is located.

Fourth, special requirements resulting from an unusual incidence in the community of any one or more of the factors specified in Section 205 (c) of the Act and cited above.

Fifth, the capacity of the applicant to conduct his program in an efficient and expeditious manner.

Sixth, the extent to which the proposed program deals directly with the areas or groups in the community which are most severely afflicted by poverty.

Seventh, the extent to which the proposed program gives promise of effecting a permanent increase in the capacity of individuals, groups, and the community as a whole to deal with their problems without further assistance, and

Eighth, the extent to which the community meets any of the criteria established above for allotments from the funds to be distributed among the States at the discretion of the Director.

(Exhibit I shows the effect of the statutory formula in Section 203(a) on the distribution among the States of $_____ for fiscal year 1965.)

8. Non-discrimination. No person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, or be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance under Title II-A of the Economic Opportunity Act.

B. ELIGIBILITY OF APPLICANT

1. Definition of community. The "community" to be served by a community action program may be any urban or rural, or urban and rural, geographical area, including but not limited to a State, metropolitan area, county, city, town, multi-city unit, or multi-county unit. Generally, a community should be identical with a major political jurisdiction such as a city or county or with a group of political jurisdictions exercising responsibility for related public programs.

   A community should cover a geographical area of sufficient size and population to allow for the effective utilization of human, physical, and financial resources in an attack on poverty. Communities containing very small populations are encouraged to combine their efforts with adjacent communities to ensure the creation of an adequate resource base.

   An acceptable alternative to combining the efforts of several small communities in a single community action program is the creation of a multi-community agency that can serve as a central administrative unit and resource base for a number of smaller community action agencies.

   The delineation of the community to be served should be related to the character and incidence of poverty it contains and to the type of programs or activities to be undertaken. For example, an entire State or even a number of States can constitute a community as a basis for action with respect to the problems of special groups of the poor, such as migratory workers and seasonal agricultural laborers, whose needs cannot be adequately met on a more restricted geographical basis.

2. Eligible agencies. Grants for the development, conduct, and administration of community action programs may be made to a public agency, a private non-profit agency (other than a political party) or a combination thereof.

   Every applicant agency must have:

   a. Adequate authority to enter into contracts with and to receive grants from the Federal Government and to carry out the program for which it is requesting assistance, either directly or by contract or working agreement.

   b. The capacity to utilize efficiently and expeditiously the assistance for which the application is made.

c. The ability to mobilize and utilize the community's public or private resources, or both, in an attack on poverty.

d. The capacity to enlist the participation of residents of the areas and members of the groups to be served in the development, conduct, and administration of the proposed program.

An applicant which is a private non-profit agency must, in addition, qualify in one of the following respects:

e. It must be an institution or organization which has had a a concern with problems of poverty prior to application for Federal assistance under Title II-A; or

f. It must be sponsored by a public agency, or by a private institution or organization which has had a prior concern with problems of poverty; or

g. It must be an institution of higher education, as defined in Section 401(f) of the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963.

3. Resident participation. The Economic Opportunity Act requires that a community action program be developed, conducted, and administered with the maximum feasible participation of the residents of the areas or neighborhoods in which the program will be carried out and of the members of the groups that it will serve. Among the means to ensure participation of residents of the areas and members of the groups served are:

a. Representation on the board of directors, executive committee, policy committees, and appropriate advisory boards of the community action agency.

b. Use of existing neighborhood organizations and the creation of new neighborhood organizations for advice on program policy and, where appropriate, for actual conduct and administration of elements of neighborhood-based programs.

c. Employment, to the maximum extent feasible, of the residents of areas being served in jobs created as part of the community action program itself. Such jobs should include positions which allow residents to influence the ways in which policy decisions are made and carried out, as well as jobs in which special advantage can be taken of the residents' knowledge of and familiarity with the area. Such employment opportunities should be maximized insofar as possible through the identification of tasks not requiring professional training.

The requirement of resident participation applies to all stages of a community action program, from its inception on. Achievement of meaningful participation shall be a continuing objective of every community action program. It is through their own effective participation in a community action program that the residents and groups to be served can most readily achieve the objective of a permanent increase in their capacity to deal with their own problems without further assistance.

4. Mobilization of Resources. The Act provides that an applicant must have the ability to mobilize and utilize the community's resources, public or private, in an attack on poverty.

Every community in America has agencies which provide services to the poor. Many of these agencies already receive financial assistance from State and Federal governments. Mobilization of these existing resources is an essential part of a community action program.

Most agencies tend to concentrate on one basic service function, such as education, employment, health, housing, or family welfare. Where several agencies are working in the same functional area, they relate to each other in a service system. The mobilization of resources for a community action program should bring these various service systems together in a concerted attack on poverty.

The effort should embrace most of the following:

a. The educational system, including the public schools and the related State educational agencies, libraries, private schools, and other private agencies providing educational services.

b. The employment system, including the State employment service, the apprenticeship agency, employers, labor unions, the educational agencies that train and retrain people for specific occupations, the vocational rehabilitation agency, and agencies that conduct special employment programs, such as for youth or the handicapped.

c. The family welfare system, including the public welfare department, school social workers and the private agencies that try to strengthen family life by providing such services as counseling, casework, and income maintenance through public assistance.

d. The health service system, including the public welfare department, the community nursing agency, and the clinics and emergency room of the community hospital.

e. The housing system, including public agencies concerned with the enforcement of housing and building codes, fire prevention, low-rent public housing, urban renewal, and mortgage insurance, and certain private agencies.

Each of these service systems deals with only one part of the complex and interrelated causes of poverty. The separate service systems need to be linked in a total network in order to mount an effective attack on poverty. Each applicant agency must demonstrate its ability and intention to mobilize community resources against poverty through the establishment of linkages among and within service systems and through other means.

5. Desirability of broadly-based agencies and programs. Broadly coordinated programs organized on a community-wide basis are the most effective in achieving community action. A broadly-based coordinated program should eventually embrace components in all of the major service systems and extend to all of the major concentrations of poverty within the community. Initially, few communities will be able to undertake fully comprehensive programs but preference will be extended to agencies organized for that purpose and providing for the wide participation of existing organizations and agencies necessary to achieve it.

A broadly-based agency capable of eventual operation on a community-wide basis should involve the participation of the mayor, county commissioners or other chief elected officials, the School Superintendent or members of the board of education, other municipal and county officials and agencies concerned with problems of poverty including welfare, health, housing and urban renewal, State officials such as the director of the local employment service office and representatives of private social welfare and health agencies, private schools, and neighborhood councils. Participation by many other groups is also desirable. These might include labor unions, business groups, and civic betterment, minority group, and ethnic associations.

The objective of including these officials and agencies as active participants in the program is to provide the basis for a broad program and to increase prospects for coordinating the many service systems of the community. Among the appropriate methods of achieving such participation are:

a. Representation on the Board of directors, executive committee, or policy committees of the community action agency.

b. Creation of an advisory committee or committees with responsibility to discuss, criticize, and, if appropriate approve plans submitted by the community action agency.

c. Delegation or subcontracting of appropriate responsibilities in developing, conducting or administering a part or parts of the community action program.

The existence of a broadly-based community action agency is not a prerequisite to the granting of Federal assistance. However, potential applicants from communities where such an agency has been or is being created shall provide adequate evidence why they are unable to combine their efforts with those of the broadly-based agency, and how, in the event that unification is not possible, their proposed activities will be coordinated with the efforts of the more broadly-based agency. Applicants from communities where there is no broadly-based agency shall provide evidence as to why it is not possible to develop such an agency.

6. Ineligible applicants. The following are ineligible as applicants for Federal assistance in developing, conducting, or administering community action programs:

   a. Individuals.

   b. Organizations, partnerships, corporations or other entities operated for a profit.

   c. Political parties.

   d. Organizations or institutions on the Attorney General's list of subversive organizations.

7. Means of carrying out a community action program. Among the means that may be used to develop, conduct, and administer a community action program are:

   a. Direct performance of activities by staff of the community action agency.

   b. Delegation of portions or all of a component project to another public or private non-profit agency by means of a subcontract or agreement.

   c. Retaining the services of qualified consultants or other organizations, whether non-profit or profit-making, to conduct specialized activities or to provide advice under contract. In general, consultants or other organizations should only be used when it is not feasible to operate a program by using the staff of the community action agency or other local public or non-profit agencies.

   No third party contract or agreement shall be entered into until after a copy of the proposed third party contract or agreement has been submitted to OEO for information purposes. Prior approval by OEO of third party contracts or agreements is not necessary--unless specifically required by OEO at the time of grant approval--if the contract includes all provisions governing the grant of funds to the applicant.

   The use of residents of the areas and members of the groups to be served to perform a variety of tasks in the community action program should be maximized. Special attention should be paid to the design of work opportunities so that they can be filled by non-professionals selected from the population to be served by the program.

C. ELIGIBILITY OF ACTIVITIES

1. Local Initiative. The applicant agency has considerable flexibility in determining what activities it will undertake, the manner in which these activities will be undertaken, and the families and individuals to be assisted, subject to the policies and procedures set forth in this guide and to such further policies and procedures as may be issued by the Office of Economic Opportunity.

2. Characteristics of eligible activities. A wide variety of activities can be included in a community action program. Each community action program, however, shall display all of the characteristics listed below.

   a. Benefit to the poor. A community action program must focus on the needs of low-income families and individuals. Those services and assistance which can be made available to selected individuals and families shall be limited to families and individuals living in poverty. Where the nature of the activity requires administration by areas or groups, services and assistance shall be made available only in areas and for groups which have a high incidence of poverty.

   The determination of what constitutes poverty is a decision to be made by each community but, in any event, it shall reflect the number and proportion of low-income families, particularly those with children. Among other factors that shall be considered are the following:

   (1) The extent of persistent unemployment and underemployment.

   (2) The number and proportion of persons receiving cash or other assistance on a needs basis from public agencies or private organizations.

   (3) The number of migrant or transient low-income families.

   (4) School dropout rates.

   (5) Military service rejection rates.

   (6) Other evidence of low educational attainment.

   (7) The incidence of disease, disability, and infant mortality.

   (8) Housing conditions.

   (9) Adequacy of community facilities and services.

   (10) The incidence of crime and juvenile delinquency.

   The community may identify additional factors which indicate evidence of poverty, particularly as they relate to specific needs to be served by proposed programs.

b. Progress toward eliminating poverty. The program must give promise of progress toward eliminating poverty in the community, or toward eliminating one or more of the underlying causes of poverty. A Community Action Program may do this through developing employment opportunities, inproving human performance, motivation, and productivity, or bettering the conditions under which people live, learn, and work. The aim of community action is not merely improvement in the standard of life of the poor but provision of opportunities and assistance needed to enable poor people to move into the mainstream of American life.

c. Utilization of other programs. A community action program must provide for the re-direction, extension, expansion, or improved utilization of existing programs and activities. It should also make maximum use of untapped resources available under other Federal programs, including other titles of the Economic Opportunity Act, as well as of previously unused community resources, public or private.

Generally, assistance under Title II-A will not be made available except where it is not feasible to utilize another Federal aid program. Nor will aid be made available under Title II-A where there is evidence that existing, available community resources are not being fully utilized to meet the need in question.

d. Sufficient scope and size. A community action program must provide for an adequate range of activities, and for the necessary linkages among such activities, to ensure a reasonable prospect of success. Where the full scope of services and activities cannot be provided immediately, plans should be made for their inclusion at the earliest practicable opportunity (see "Building-block" approach, below).

Programs should be of sufficient size to deal efficiently and expeditiously with the problems toward which they are directed. This need not prevent concentration on a particular "target" neighborhood or area where problems are expecially severe; it does mean that programs that are too small and too limited in scope will not be assisted.

3. "Building-block" approach. Many communities, at the outset, may be unable to initiate coordinated community action programs which link different programs and service systems in an effective and efficient attack on poverty. With establishment of such a coordinated program as its goal, a community may decide to use a "building-block" approach in the development of its community action program, beginning with one or two essential projects and subsequently adding others.

   Communities may combine the "building-block" approach with a program development stage, which can precede, or can accompany, the undertaking of the first action projects. Encouragement is given to requests for concurrent assistance for program development and for the conduct and administration of limited programs embracing those components on which early action is most feasible.

   The "building-block" approach enables an applicant to get a community action program under way in the most expeditious manner. It must be recognized, however, that the individual initial projects eventually should become component parts of a broader coordinated effort. Approval of subsequent assistance for the community will be conditioned upon evidence of progress toward this objective.

4. Types of eligible components. A community action program may include component projects in employment, job training and counseling, health, vocational rehabilitation, housing, home management, welfare, special remedial and other non-curricular educational assistance, and other fields which fall within the purposes of the Act.

   Components may be of four types:

   a. Program development components enable an applicant to prepare sound and effective plans and programs for community action. Grants are made under Section 204 for this purpose.

   b. Conduct and administration components enable the undertaking of a variety of projects attacking poverty. Grants are made under Section 205 for this purpose.

   c. Research, training, and demonstration components can include research into how a more effective attack on poverty can be mounted, training of personnel to work in community action programs, or experimental projects designed to test new approaches to community action. Grants are made under Section 207 for these purposes.

   d. Preference components are projects to be financed under other sections of the Economic Opportunity Act or under other Federal acts, but which are included in the Community Action Program application so that preference can be obtained for them. (see Part D. PREFERENCE FOR COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM COMPONENTS.)

Component projects may provide wholly new services, extend existing services, alter current services so that they offer new opportunities, or educate and motivate individuals to use existing services of which they are not aware or do not know how to use.

5. Eligible program development activities. Federal assistance is provided under Section 204 for the development of community action programs in order to assist communities to prepare sound and effective plans for an attack on poverty. Program development assistance can be provided prior to, concurrent with, or at any stage in the conduct and administration of a Community Action Program.

For communities interested in starting their efforts with a program development stage, a suggested work program has been developed by Office of Economic Opportunity (See Part F of this GUIDE). Applicants may use this model or may modify or change it.

Program development assistance is available either for the development of a coordinated community action program which includes a broad spectrum of components, or for intensive analysis and planning of a single component. Generally, assistance for detailed work in planning a single component will not be approved until the community has undertaken and completed the development of an initial, broader analysis.

The work that may be done under a program development grant is not limited to the planning of actions to be financed under Title II-A. Program development activities may include consideration of other programs under the Economic Opportunity Act, other Federal programs, and the use of State, local, and private resources as well.

Generally, the following activities are eligible:

a. Investigation of the incidence of poverty, and of its characteristics.

b. Analysis of existing agencies and services in terms of the extent to which they meet the needs of the poor and how they might be used more effectively.

c. Preparation of proposals for the organization, financing, scope, and content of community action programs.

d. Study of means by which residents of the areas and members of the groups to be served may participate most effectively in the development, conduct, and administration of community action programs.

Work financed by program development grants must be designed to result in the completion of a plan of action for one or more specific components of a community action program.

6. Examples of eligible conduct and administration activities. The following activities are examples of projects which might be eligible for assistance under Section 205. The list of examples is intended to be suggestive, rather than all-inclusive. Many additional activities can be included in a community action program under one or another of the following headings. Office of Economic Opportunity is preparing, and will publish from time to time, descriptions of possible activities which can be included in a community action program.

a. Remedial and non-curricular education. Federal assistance to education under Title II-A is limited to remedial and other non-curricular educational activities. Curricular is considered, for this purpose, to refer to the present course of study for which credit is granted toward propotion or graduation from school. Eligible non-curricular educational activities include:

(1) Remedial programs that emphasize the correction of deficiencies in reading, language arts, spelling, and mathematics.

(2) Programs that enrich the school experience beyond the normal curriculum.

(3) Supportive services to increase the classroom teacher's chance for success with children from low-income areas. Such services might include specialists in psychology, school social work, speech and hearing, and health.

(4) Pre-school day care and nursery centers for three-and four-year olds.

(5) Tutoring programs, in which high school or college students and adults are used to tutor pupils in need of extra educational assistance.

(6) Specialized pre-service and in-service training for school personnel, to make their efforts more effective in working with the child from low-income areas.

(7) Development of special remedial material for children from low-income areas.

b. Employment, job training, and counseling.

(1) Developing job opportunities in fields directly related to community action, where there are needs for a wide variety of nonprofessional and technical aides to extend and assist the efforts of professionals in welfare, health, education, and related fields.

(2) Establishment of neighborhood-oriented employment information, counseling, and placement facilities for unemployed youth. (This activity can be combined with, or related to, Youth Opportunity Centers established by State employment services in cooperation with the Department of Labor.)

(3) The provision of supporting services, such as guidance and counseling, and of training to young men and women in work-training programs under Title I-B of the Act to the extent these needs cannot be met from other programs.

(4) Job training and education programs aimed at the development of either specific skills required for jobs currently available or of the work habits and communication skills required in any employment situation, to the extent aid is not available under other programs.

c. Health and vocational rehabilitation.

(1) Health examinations and referral services for low-income adults and children.

(2) Rehabilitation and training of the physically or mentally handicapped.

(3) Providing health, rehabilitation, employment, educational and related services to young men rejected for military service.

(4) Environmental health programs, such as rat extermination and other actions to improve sanitation and living conditions.

(5) Health education programs directed at the entire family.

(6) Expanding the range of medical and social services available at out-patient clinics to serve low-income families more effectively.

d. Housing and home management.

(1) Improving the living conditions of the elderly through homemaker service and a variety of supportive services.

(2) Improving home management skills through classes and through the use of home management aides.

(3) Providing housing information services to spread knowledge of how to obtain rehabilitation financing and how to go about home rehabilitation.

(4) Assistance to homeowners, tenants, and landlords in obtaining enforcement of municipal housing and construction codes.

(5) Organizing sponsors to plan for rehabilitation and construction of low and moderate income housing.

(6) Services and facilities to improve the quality of life for residents of low-rent public housing developments and to expand contacts between them and the rest of the community.

(7) Aiding families displaced from their homes by public or private action to relocate, including assistance in making the move, finding new housing, and becoming assimilated into a new neighborhood.

e. Welfare.

(1) Improving the level of social services and developing new services for low income families, including recipients of public welfare.

(2) Providing day care and home-maker services.

(3) Consumer information, education, and savings programs designed to improve the purchasing, saving, and borrowing habits of low income families.

(4) Aid for low-income persons in obtaining legal services.

(5) Assistance to in-migrant families from rural areas in meeting the problems of urban living.

f. Neighborhood multi-service centers. Close coordination of the different service programs at the neighborhood level is essential to effectiveness of a community action program. A neighborhood multi-service center can provide a physical focus for such a coordinated effort. From such a center, services can be extended to families in the neighborhood. A center can house as well as integrate such activities as a day care program, a health service, an employment information and testing unit, adult literacy classes, home-makers and a housing rehabilitation clinic. Centers may be located in or adjacent to schools or in vacant stores, office buildings, or municipal buildings.

g. VISTA and Job Corps Activities.

(1) The use and payment of necessary expenses of volunteer workers, especially volunteers from the VISTA program.established by Title VI of the Act and operated by Office of Economic Opportunity.

(2) Operation of recruitment and testing facilities for the Job Corps program established by Title I-A of the Act and operated by Office of Economic Opportunity.

h. Administration of Community Action Programs. The administration of a Community Action Program is an eligible activity. Where administrative or overhead costs cannot be specifically attributed to one or more components of the community action program, they may be united in an administrative component. Administrative costs shall be minimized, insofar as feasible.

i. Evaluation of accomplishments. Prompt and careful evaluation of accomplishment is essential to provide a feedback of information to help improve program development, conduct, and administration. Every community action program must include provision for evaluating its effects and estimating progress made in achieving its objectives.

7. Research, training, and demonstration activities. The activities which can be assisted under Section 207 of the Act are described in separate guide publications prepared by Office of Economic Opportunity. Among the eligible activities are:

a. Training of personnel for work in community action programs. Brief training programs can orient trained professionals and provide job-training for certain kinds of sub-professionals.

b. Research and demonstration activities of many different types can be financed by Office of Economic Opportunity under Section 207. Interested applicants should request additional information on these programs.

8. Preference components. Many Federal programs can be coordinated with the conduct of a community action program. Some of the many possible activities of this kind are:

a. Education.

(1) Projects designed to use college students from low-income families enrolled in the work-study program established in Title I-C of the Economic Opportunity Act and operated through institutions of higher education by the Office of Education in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

(2) Adult basic education classes financed through grants to State agencies from the Office of Education under Title II-B of the Act.

(3) Vocational education programs, financed under the Vocational Education Act.

b. Employment, job-training, and counseling.

(1) Work-training projects for youths between 16 and 22, financed under Title I-B of the Act (the Neighborhood Youth Corps), which is administered by the Department of Labor. Work-training programs may be undertaken by community action agencies either directly or by subcontract to other organizations. Community action agencies can also play a coordinating role for work-training projects undertaken by other public or private non-profit organizations by assisting in youth selection, counseling, and training, and in placement of trainees after the completion of the program.

(2) Developing work opportunities for unemployed parents, with their pay financed or supplemented through the work-experience program established in Title V of the Act which is administered by the Welfare Administration in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

(3) Developing new employment opportunities through aid to small businessmen under the loan program established in Title IV of the Act, administered by the Small Business Administration.

(4) On-the-job and in-school training programs for unemployed and underemployed workers, conducted by State employment services and vocational training agencies under the Manpower Development and Training Act.

c. Health

(1) Community Mental health centers financed under grants from the National Institute of Mental Health.

(2) Environmental health and related assistance available through the many programs operated by the Public Health Service.

d. Housing and Home Management. The examples of eligible activities in meeting the housing and home-management problems of low-income families given above can all be more effective when used as complements to one of the existing Federal housing programs. These include the public housing, urban renewal, home insurance, and other programs administered by the Housing and Home Finance Agency and its constituent agencies and the programs of aid to rural families of the Farmers Home Administration.

9. Ineligible expenditures. The following activities may not be financed as part of a Community Action Program:

a. Any program which involves sectarian instruction or religious worship or practice.

b. Any program of general aid to elementary or secondary education in any school or school system.

c. Any activity for which expenditure was made or obligation incurred prior to the date of approval of a grant or contract by Office of Economic Opportunity.

d. Expenditures for the construction of buildings and for the purchase of real property or motor vehicles except where they can be demonstrated to be essential to the carrying out of the proposed program.

D. PREFERENCE FOR COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM COMPONENTS

1. Basis for preference. The Economic Opportunity Act provides that preference in the extension of Federal assistance shall be given, to the extent feasible, to projects which are components of an approved community action program. Two related, but different, forms of preference are involved:

   a. Section 211 provides that preference shall be given by the Director of Office of Economic Opportunity in determining whether to extend assistance under the Economic Opportunity Act. This applies to all titles and programs under the Act, including both those directly administered by Office of Economic Opportunity and those whose administration is delegated by the Director to other Federal agencies.

   b. Section 612 provides that, insofar as consistent with the provisions of law governing any Federal program and with the purposes of the Economic Opportunity Act, preference shall be given by the head of the appropriate Federal agency.

   The purpose of giving preference to projects which are components of a community action program is to make more effective the mobilization of community resources for eliminating poverty.

2. Obtaining preference for a component. In order to obtain preference for a project as a component of a community action program, both of the following steps must be accomplished:

   a. There must be an approved community action program covering the community with which the project is concerned. Approval of a community action program shall be deemed to have occurred when a grant providing assistance under Sections 204 and 205 of the Act has been approved by Office of Economic Opportunity. Approval will be voided if the project is subsequently disapproved by the Governor of the State under the provisions of Section 209 (c).

   b. The project for which preference is desired must be a component of the approved community action program and must have been included as such in the approval of the application for a community action program grant. The essential condition of such inclusion is a clear demonstration of the linkage between the project and other components of the community action program.

   Once these steps have been completed, Office of Economic Opportunity will issue a statement requesting preference under Section 211 or 612 to the Federal agency from which preference is desired.

3. Requesting preference prior to Community Action Program approval. All preference components should be included in any application to Office of Economic Opportunity for grants for the development, conduct, and administration of a community action program. Office of Economic Opportunity will notify the appropriate Federal administering agency with respect to any preference component included in a pending Community Action Program application. The Federal administering agency will be advised that the notification is preliminary to a determination of eligibility for preference and that appropriate interim steps should, to the extent feasible, be taken in order to assure such preference.

The applicant for preference should indicate the relationship of its proposed project to an actual or prospective community action program in its application to the Federal administering agency, whether or not an application for a community action program has as yet been submitted to Office of Economic Opportunity. Such indication will serve to notify the Federal administering agency to take appropriate interim steps to assure preference for the component.

4. Meaning of the preference system. Once a community action program has been approved and a statement of preference has been issued, projects included as components in the community action program will be given first priority for consideration and funding by any Federal agency, except as Federal law provides to the contrary or as found to be inconsistent with the purposes of the Economic Opportunity Act. This applies with respect to competing applications from the same community and from other communities.

Where an applicant has obtained a statement of preference covering an application for Federal assistance under another Federal program or part of the Act, but has not yet filed an application for such assistance with the appropriate Federal agency, submission of the statement of preference to the other Federal agency shall be interpreted as an intention to apply. During a reasonable period after the submission, the Federal agency concerned will be requested by Office of Economic Opportunity to defer action, wherever possible, on competitive applications for similar aid from the same community, to allow the community action agency an opportunity to file its application and to obtain the preference provided in the Act.

E. SUBMISSION OF PLAN TO THE GOVERNOR

1. Requirement of submission. Section 209 (c) of the Economic Opportunity Act requires that no financial assistance may be provided under Titles I and II, except to an institution of higher education in existence on August 20, 1964, unless a plan setting forth the proposed assistance has been submitted to the Governor of the appropriate State, and is not disapproved by him within 30 days after the submission.

2. Method of submission. The required submission will be made by the Office of Economic Opportunity to the Governor. It will be made after an application for assistance has been reviewed and approved by Office of Economic Opportunity so that the plan submitted to the Governor will be identical in all essential features to the proposed grant to be made to the applicant by Office of Economic Opportunity.

   Applicants should submit their applications directly to Office of Economic Opportunity; they are not required to transmit applications to Office of Economic Opportunity through the Governor or any State agency. Applicants are, however, strongly encouraged to keep appropriate State officials informed of their efforts in preparing and submitting an application for Federal assistance under the Act and to transmit an information copy of the application to the Governor when it is submitted to Office of Economic Opportunity. Office of Economic Opportunity will notify the Governor of the receipt of any application from any agency or organization within the State. (Exhibit II contains a listing of State officials who have been appointed by Governors to direct State programs of technical assistance to communities in preparing Community Action Programs.)

   The thirty day period during which the Governor may disapprove of a plan setting forth the proposed assistance will begin on the date of receipt of such plan, sent by registered mail, in the Office of the Governor. If the Governor chooses, he may, without waiting for the thirty days to elapse, signify to Office of Economic Opportunity his approval of the plan and his intention not to disapprove it.

3. Institutions of higher education exempt. It is not required that a plan setting forth financial assistance to any institution of higher education in existence on August 20, 1964, be submitted to the Governor of the State within which such institution is located. (It is suggested, however, that such institutions send an information copy of their application to the State technical assistance directors listed in Exhibit II.)

   For purposes of the Act, an institution of higher education is as defined in Section 401 (f) of the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963. Generally, this includes all public and private universities, colleges, junior and community colleges, technological institutes, and other institutions offering courses beyond high school and leading to a degree or certificate.

4. Other roles of the State. The Act provides for other important roles for State government, in addition to that set forth in Section 209 (c). Specifically, it instructs the Director of Office of Economic Opportunity to establish procedures which will facilitate effective participation of the States in Community Action Programs. One such procedure is the program of grants to states to enable them to provide technical assistance to communities in developing, conducting, and administering Community Action Programs. Federal assistance will be made available to an agency designated by the Governor to finance the operation of such a technical assistance program, with emphasis on providing aid to smaller communities.

Appropriate State agencies should be involved in the development and conduct of a Community Action Program. Participation by State agencies may be achieved by such methods as:

a. Regular consultation and discussion with local representatives of State agencies and programs. This may be through their formal participation on advisory boards, as well as through informal day-to-day contacts between such representatives and the community action agency.

b. Agreements with officials responsible for State agencies and programs to coordinate all existing and proposed programs combatting poverty within the community.

c. Participation of local representatives of State agencies and programs on boards of directors or policy-making executive committees of local community action agencies.

In addition to their participation in Title II-A activities, States will have important administrative and procedural roles to play under the Economic Opportunity Act in the Job Corps Program (Title I-A), the Adult Basic Education and Literacy Training Program (Title II-B), the Work-Experience Program (Title V), and the Volunteers In Service To America Program (Title VI).

F. PREPARATION OF APPLICATION FOR CAP

1. Application procedure. An application for approval of a community action program shall be submitted by the applicant agency to Community Action Program, Office of Economic Opportunity, Washington, D. C. An application consists of the Forms CAP-1 through CAP-10, as appropriate, accompanied by the necessary attachments.

   Eight copies of each application, including all attachments, shall be submitted.

   Each set of forms and attachments should be enclosed in a hard-cover folder, bound along the top edge with a clamp or other device that will make it possible to insert or extract pages. The various forms should be identified by tabs, labeled "CAP-1, CAP-2," etc. along the right-hand edge. The cover of each binder should be clearly marked with the name of the applicant agency, its address, and the title: "APPLICATION FOR COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM."

2. Contents of an application. An application for a CAP may contain as many as ten different forms. A brief description of each form is presented below:

   CAP-1: Summary of Program. Overall information on the applicant agency, the community to be served, and the various component projects for which aid is requested.

   CAP-2: Timetable and Program Characteristics. Summary of the time schedule for undertaking each component project and a description of key characteristics of the CAP.

   CAP-3: Applicant Agency. Description of the organizational structure of the applicant and the composition of its governing body.

   CAP-4: Eligibility of Applicant. Statement of finding by legal counsel that the applicant is eligible to receive grant funds under Title II-A.

   CAP-5: Community Information: Description of the community to be served and information on the incidence of poverty in the entire community and selected sub-areas.

   CAP-6: Program Development Component. Description of any program development project to be assisted under Section 204.

   CAP-7: Conduct and Administration Component. Description of any component project to be assisted under Section 205. A separate form CAP-7 should be submitted to describe each separate conduct and administration component.

CAP-8: Research, Demonstration, or Training Component. Description of any component project to be financed under Section 207. A separate Form CAP-8 should be submitted for each separate research, demonstration, or training component.

CAP-9: Preference Component. Description of any component project to be financed under other Titles of the Economic Opportunity Act, under other related Federal programs, or from any other source. A separate CAP-9 should be submitted to describe each separate component project for which preference is sought under Sections 211 and 612 of the Economic Opportunity Act. (See Part D. PREFERENCE FOR CAP COMPONENTS.)

CAP-10: Budget. A copy of this form, which describes the various items of expenditure estimated for a component project, should accompany each Form CAP-6, 7, or 8.

Only the appropriate forms need be submitted with each application. For example, a Form CAP-8 need only be submitted when the CAP application includes a component project requesting a research, training, or demonstration grant. A request for an initial program development project may omit a number of the forms (see the "simplified procedure," below).

Information once submitted as part of an application need not be resubmitted with an amendment to the program or a subsequent application. For example, data on the applicant agency (CAP-3) and its eligibility (CAP-4) or on the community (CAP-5) need not be resubmitted unless there has been a significant change in the information shown on the form.

3. How to prepare an application. The application forms contain instructions on what information is required, either to fill in blank spaces on the form or to be attached as a supplement to it. In addition, the following sections present additional instructions for preparing an application.

The GUIDE TO COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM GRANTS, of which these application instructions are a part, contains policy guidance material to aid in preparing an application. In addition, applicants may obtain help either by asking for it from OEO or from a technical assistance agency established by their State. OEO plans to establish six regional offices, located in major cities across the nation, from which field personnel will assist communities in applying for and conducting community action programs. Until these regional offices are in operation, requests for assistance should be addressed to Community Action Program, Office of Economic Opportunity, Washington, D. C.

Many states are establishing agencies to provide technical assistance to communities on community action programs. The functions of these agencies will complement those of OEO, and the work they perform is eligible for financial assistance from OEO under Section 209(b) of the Act.

4. Simplified procedure when applying for a program development grant only. Because the requirements of the Economic Opportunity Act are slightly different for Sections 204 and 205, it is possible for applicants who are requesting aid only for program development to follow a simplified procedure in applying. In this case, the applicant needs to submit only the following forms:

   CAP-1. Summary of Program

   CAP-3. Applicant Agency Information

   CAP-4. Eligibility of Applicant

   CAP-6. Program Development Component

   CAP-10. Budget

   To simplify even further the application process for communities who wish to start their anti-poverty programs by undertaking program development work (either alone or in combination with one or two initial conduct and administration components), a standard work program has been prepared. Communities may accept this standard work program (see item 6.2, below) in lieu of preparing their own work program.

5. Additional instructions for preparing an application. The following additional instructions are intended to supplement and clarify instructions contained on Forms CAP-1 through CAP-10. Each instruction has the same item number as the appropriate section of the form; for example, item 6.2 refers to the second item on Form CAP-6. However, it should be noted that in the case of many items, and even some complete forms, no additional instruction is presented below, since it is all contained on the form itself.

Form and Item Number	Additional Instruction
1.1	Type of application. An amendment is any application submitted by an applicant agency that has already had its initial CAP grant approved. An amendment may be a request for additional time or grant funds to complete a component project or a request for grant funds for additional component projects.
1.4	Payee. Insert the name of the agency, official, or bank account to which payment of grant funds should be made.

1.5 Area to be served. This is the city, county, or other jurisdiction, not the specific neighborhoods in which action is to be undertaken.

1.5.1 Population of area. Insert the 1960 population, as given in the U. S. Census of population. "Rural" includes the Census categories of "rural farm" and "rural non-farm" population; "urban" is all other population.

1.6 Number of Component Project. Number each component consecutively (1, 2, 3...) and list by title. The brief title of the component should describe the activity to be undertaken, such as "program development", "work-training", or "pre-school program."

1.7 Acceptance of conditions. The governing body of the applicant agency shall authorize a single individual to sign the application and to be the principal point of contact between OEO and the applicant.

2.1 Timetable. Assistance under Title II-A is limited by statute to grants extending for no more than 24 months. However, grants will ordinarily be limited administratively to projects with planned time periods of not more than 12 months, except when there are special circumstances--such as a need to include an entire school year.

2.2.1 Resident Participation. Attach a statement describing the ways in which the maximum feasible opportunity to participate in program development, conduct, and administration will be provided to residents of the areas and members of the groups to be served. The statement shall describe:

a. The ways in which such residents and members have participated in the preparation of this application.

b. The roles that will be played by such residents and members in program direction, policy-making, and advisory capacities in carrying out the program proposed by this application.

c. The ways in which opportunities will be provided for participation by such residents and members as program employees, either paid or unpaid.

2.2.2 Mobilization of resources. Attach a statement describing efforts to mobilize public and/or private resources through coordination or existing and proposed activities. The statement should describe:

a. The ways in which existing public programs concerned with the problem of poverty will be coordinated with the CAP.

b. The ways in which existing private activities concerned with poverty will be coordinated with the CAP.

c. The ways in which the different component projects of CAP will be linked to one another and to existing public and/or private programs.

2.2.3 Checkpoint procedure. The applicant is responsible for ascertaining the potential relationships of the proposed community action program to approved and prospective programs financed under other parts of the Economic Opportunity Act and under related programs, whether locally or Federally financed. All applications for assistance under this part must, accordingly, be reviewed and discussed and comments solicited prior to submission to the Office of Economic Opportunity with:

a. The chief elected official of the community to determine the relationship to other programs and to prospective Community Action Programs.

b. The director of any public agency or non-profit corporation developing or conducting a Community Action Program within the same community.

c. The director of the local office of the State Employment Service to determine the relationship of the proposed program to projects financed under the Manpower Development and Training Act, to Youth Opportunity Centers, and to other activities of the Employment Service.

d. The local superintendent of schools to determine the relationship to the adult basic education program established under Title II-B of the Economic Opportunity Act, and other education programs.

e. The City or County Welfare Commissioner, to determine the relationship to work-experience projects under Title V of the Economic Opportunity Act.

f. The appropriate official of any local institution of higher education to determine the relationship to work-study programs under Title I-C of the Economic Opportunity Act.

g. The local representative of the Department of Labor to determine the relationship to work-training projects under title I-B of the Economic Opportunity Act.

h. Such other officials as may be appropriate, including:

(1) The director of the local urban renewal agency to determine the relationship to any urban renewal programs.

(2) The director of the local public housing agency to determine the relationship to any public housing programs.

(3) The local commissioner of health to determine the relationship to any public health or community mental health programs.

(4) The local representatives of the Farmers Home Administration and the Agricultural Extension Service to determine the relationship to loans to rural families made pursuant to Title III-A of the Economic Opportunity Act, and to other agricultural and rural programs.

The application shall report on the results of these discussions, identifying any problems of program inter-relationship as well as the character of support by these officials for the community action program.

5.4 Incidence of poverty. Attach a description of the sources used to obtain the data presented in item 5.4. Indicate the source of data for the community as a whole and also for sub-areas, where the sources are different (for example, when sub-area data is estimated).

The "%" columns should be used to indicate what percentage the sub-area figure is of the community total for the same characteristic. For example, if there are 3,000 persons living in rural areas in the community as a whole, a rural population of 300 in Area "A", the figure under the "%" symbol would be "10".

Suggested sources for data on the incidence of poverty are:

a. The 1960 U. S. Census of Population for total and rural population, family incomes, employment and unemployment data, education data, and data on minority groups. In many cases, census data are available for census tracts and enumeration districts, which can be used as sub-areas.

b. The 1960 U. S. Census of Housing for data on total housing and housing condition.

c. State employment security agencies for more up-to-date information on employment and unemployment.

d. State and local health departments for vital statistics on births and deaths of babies.

e. Local selective service boards and State agencies for data on military service rejection rates.

f. Local school boards and State education agencies for more up-to-date information on education levels and drop-out rates.

In addition to these sources, useful information can often be obtained from city and county planning commissions, economic development agencies, health and welfare councils, housing and renewal agencies, chambers of commerce, central labor union councils, and minority group organizations.

Where data for the items listed on the form are not readily available, the applicant may substitute other, appropriate measures of the incidence of poverty.

6.2 Work program. The work program for a program development grant, whether it considers the problems of poverty in the entire community or is concentrated on a particular problem, should include:

a. Survey of how the problem affects people.

b. Analysis of the extent to which existing programs do, or could, attack the problem.

c. Planning of action to be taken to aid afflicted families and individuals to deal with their problems.

The work program should spell out all necessary detail on how these tasks will be accomplished. It is a plan for the program development project.

To assist applicants who are initiating community action programs, a standard work program has been developed for a community-wide program development project (see Exhibit III). While it is relatively generalized, it provides a framework for the applicant to follow in his efforts. Applicants who wish to do so may adopt this work program.

7.2 Work program. The work program for a conduct and administration component project should answer the questions suggested below. The general objective is for the applicant to provide a design that is sufficiently clear and detailed so that (a) there is an adequate basis for OEO review, (b) there is sufficient justification for the proposed budget, and (c) the work program can provide a guide to the subsequent work of the applicant in carrying out the component project.

a. Purpose and beneficiaries: What is the component project intended to achieve and who will benefit from it, in relation to the overall incidence of poverty in the community?

b. Scope and content: What action will be undertaken during the course of the component project? Where feasible, describe scope and content in terms of major stages of the project and what will be done in each.

c. Evaluation: How will it be possible to measure the benefits of the component project?

d. Administration and organization: How and by whom will the component project be administered? How will it be coordinated with other components of the CAP and existing programs of the community? What staff will be needed?

e. Resident participation: How will the residents of the areas and members of the groups to be served be given maximum feasible opportunity to participate in the development, conduct, and administration of the project?

8.1 Purpose of Project. It should be noted that training assistance can be provided through other means than through a grant request using Form CAP-8. OEO will itself conduct a number of training programs for personnel who are employed in community action programs, either directly or through contracts with universities and other appropriate institutions. Applicants interested in taking advantage of one of these training programs should communicate directly with OEO, Washington, D. C.

10.1 Personnel employed by applicant. For the initial application, attach a statement justifying the salaries to be paid to personnel employed by the applicant agency in terms of salaries for comparable positions in local public and/or private agencies.

PRESIDENT PUSHES AID TO APPALACHIA AND MEDICAL CARE

Asks House Chiefs to Give Bills Priority — Seeks to Expedite His Program

By MARJORIE HUNTER

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17 — President Johnson asked House leaders today to seek quick action on two bills — medical care for the aged and economic aid to Appalachia — when the new Congress convenes Jan. 4.

The decision to place these measures at the top of his "must" list was disclosed by the President as he met for nearly two hours at the White House with Speaker John W. McCormack of Massachusetts and the House majority leader, Carl Albert of Oklahoma.

Mr. Albert said later that the President had asked them to confer with committee chairmen handling the two measures "to see if we couldn't put them together for quick action" in the new Congress.

Mr. Johnson also asked the two House leaders to survey all committee chairmen to determine what other leftover legislation would be ready for action early in the new Congress. The two are to report back by early in January.

Bills Must Be Reintroduced

No legislation carries over from one Congress to another. Thus, bills pending when the 88th Congress adjourned last month would have to be introduced again.

However, some measures on which extensive hearings were conducted would be in a better position to move more rapidly than new proposals still subject to extensive Congressional study.

The conference today was the first of what will be a number of moves by the President to expedite his legislative program.

Among Administration bills pending in the House when Congress adjourned were the program of nearly $1 billion in economic aid to Appalachia and a measure to give additional funds to the Area Redevelopment Administration.

Panel Voted Appalachia Aid

The Appalachia bill had cleared the House Public Works Committee. The panel will be headed next year by

PRESIDENT SEEKS ACTION ON 2 BILLS

Mills, Democrat of Arkansas, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said last week that he would call up the health-care measure in committee right after the new Congress convened if the President asked him to.

This would place the bill ahead of a new proposal by Mr. Johnson to cut certain excise taxes. Both bills would originate in the Ways and Means Committee.

While agreeing to call up the health-care bill early, Mr. Mills has not abandoned his opposition to financing such a program under Social Security. He has hinted he might favor a compromise for a separate payroll tax to finance medicare.

President Johnson is expected to push also for an increase in Social Security cash benefits.

A bill to do this passed the House last summer. It was amended by the Senate to embrace health insurance and even higher cash benefits. The measure died when Senate and House conferees failed to agree.

Other matters discussed today by the President and the House leaders were described by a White House spokesman as "off the record."

However, he said the President and the leaders did not discuss setting a new formula for allocation of committee seats to reflect the larger Democratic majority in the new Congress.

No similar meeting has been scheduled with Senate leaders.

Most of the Administration programs not acted upon by the House this year had passed the Senate and are expected to win quick approval next year. Among the programs approved by the Senate were health care, aid to Appalachia and area redevelopment.

The Administration's medicare bill would provide hospital care, nursing-home care, nursing visits to homes, some financial assistance in diagnostic studies and payments for drugs of persons hospitalized or in nursing homes.

Tax Would Go Up

It would apply to persons 65 or over and would be financed by an increase in Social Security taxes.

The Appalachia program is designed to relieve the distressed Appalachian Mountain areas of 11 states. Its chief feature would be an $840 million highway construction program.

Earlier today, President Johnson conferred with Gov. W. W. Barron of West Virginia and that state's Governor-elect, Hulett Smith, about plans to win Congressional approval of the Appalachia bill.

The President also saw John A. McCone, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, and Carl T. Rowan, director of the United States Information Agency. A White House spokesman declined to comment on what had been discussed at these conferences.

In early afternoon, the President walked out into the sunny Rose Garden just outside his office to accept the traditional Thanksgiving turkey from officials of the Poultry and Egg National Board.

The 40 - pound gobbler squirmed as the President commented:

"I didn't know for a while what we'd be eating for Thanksgiving dinner. I'm glad I can eat turkey instead of crow."

Around the turkey's neck was a beribboned sign: "Good eating, Mr. President."

A White House spokesman said the Johnson family would "cook and eat the turkey," probably for Thanksgiving. It is expected that the Johnsons will spend Thanksgiving Day at the LBJ Ranch in Texas.

Area Is Bitter as New Plant Closes Despite U.S. Help

For Prog

By BEN ~~A. FRANKLIN~~

Special to The New York Times

WILLIAMSON, W. VA., Nov. 24—The collapse of the first big effort to revive the stagnant economy of Appalachia by using Federal aid to help create new, diversified industry has left a bitter legacy here for both the rescuers and the rescued.

Until last Friday, when the board of the National Seating and Dimension Company, Inc., voted to close its doors in the face of mounting debts, the company's venture into the manufacture of parts for the wood furniture industry was symbolic of the promised new deal for Appalachia that began four years ago with John F. Kennedy's Presidential primary campaign in West Virginia.

Mr. Kennedy promised then, and his Administration and the Johnson Administration are seeking to provide, large sums of Federal aid to get the 11-state Appalachian region on its feet.

With $1.8 million in financing, most of it 4 per cent Federal loans from the Area Redevelopment Administration and the Small Business Administration, the new woodworking plant here created more than 100 jobs. At the same time, however, it produced practically no profits.

Now the jobs are gone, and, according to officials of the West Virginia Office of Employment Security, many of the men who held them are gone, too—to seek factory work in Ohio and Illinois.

There is considerable evidence, however, that the company's failure came, in large part, as a result of management mistakes. Company officials conceded today that "we made some bad errors." They also said they had been "misquoted" in reports published locally in which they had blamed "labor" for the collapse.

"It's not that you can't train a coal miner to be a woodworker," one company official said. "We proved that you can train them—but it takes a hell of a lot more money than anyone thought it would."

"These men are not used to working for $1.25 an hour," he said, "and wages in the furniture industry are not high."

Accordingly, efforts to overcome the National Seating Company's failure and to revive the plant here by finding a buyer interested in a ready-made $675,000 tax write-off are under way in Washington and in Charleston, the state capital.

State and Federal officials are determined to make the experiment a success. But they face formidable odds.

A Typical Target Area

This city is a typical Appalachian target area—a dirty, peeling, railroad town tucked away on the Kentucky border in a narrow Tug Fork flatland between the silhouettes of cone-shaped mountains.

The Tug Fork got its name in 1756, when winter overtook a body of troops on an expedition against the Indians. In their extremity, the soldiers boiled the "tugs" or thongs of their boots, and from this unhappy episode the river got its name.

At the Tug Valley Chamber of Commerce, a building whose walls are made of block-size chunks of coal. Williamson is still billed as "The Heart of the Billion Dollar Coalfield." The smog of soft coal smoke in the surrounding hollows and draws gives the city's motto a certain gritty authenticity.

At dusk thousands of columns of yellow-white coal smoke rise from the chimneys of houses. In the steep valleys, the sun comes up late and sets early, and there is a chill in the afternoons.

But coal long ago ceased to make a significant contribution to the local economy. The mines, mostly big operations of absentee-owned corporations, have employed fewer and fewer men and more and better machines, and the machines have produced more and more coal. Employed miners earn $27 a day.

3,000 Men in the Mines

Mingo County, of which Williamson is the seat, has 3,000 men in the mines. That is roughly one-quarter of the ployed miners earn $21 a day.

3,000 Men in the Mines

Mingo County, of which Williamson is the seat, has 3,000 men in the mines. That is roughly one-quarter of the number employed here at the end of World War II.

The unemployment rate now is 13.9 per cent, "a whole lot better than it was when it was 30 per cent in 1959 and 1960," an unemployment security official said.

The National Seating venture was started in 1962 at Varney, 17 miles or "three mountains" east of here on U.S. Route 119. The plant is the newest and most modern in the furniture parts industry, according to Government spokesmen.

The failure of the experiment, many qualified observers here believe, underlines the stubborn isolation of this region from what one spokesman familiar with the Seating Company project described as "the facts of Appalachian existence."

In addition to the management failures acknowledged by the company, there was a smoldering labor situation. Some company officials attach equal blame for the failure to the workers.

Everett Shrader, the local representative of District 50 of the United Mine Workers Union, which organized the National Seating Company's 78 production workers two years ago, said:

"We felt the company was trying to provoke us and cause a work stoppage, and we felt the company wanted to close down under a strike situation and blame us for the whole thing."

There was no strike. But there apparently were temporary slowdowns, absenteeism and refusals to work overtime, for which J. Brooks Lawson Jr., the secretary and counsel of the corporation, blames "a few union troublemakers."

Mr. Lawson was candid, however, in assessing management mistakes.

At one point, administrative control became so chaotic, he recalled, that the plant shipped out "a whole load" of damaged or imperfect products that were "plainly marked as scrap." The shipment had to be made good on an overtime basis at a $13,000 loss, he said.

There were other costly mistakes involving the goodwill of customers. Products came unglued when they were received at their destination. And among the major mistakes, officials said, the company failed to obtain sufficient working capital to carry it over the difficult retraining period.

In addition, several highly skilled production overseers resigned. The supervisor of maintenance for the complex of milling machines, the production manager, and finally, the general manager, left and were not immediately replaced.

Desire for Jobs Doubted

In an interview, Mr. Lawson mentioned a thought that haunts the state and Federal officials who are trying to inject new life into the region—that Appalachia's people do not want to work.

At $1.25 an hour, Mr. Lawson said, the woodworkers were earning after taxes little more than the maximum of $165 a month they could get "for standing on the street corner under the Federal Aid to Dependent Children program."

Men whose families qualify them for this program, he added also get food stamps that can be redeemed for groceries at local stores.

Among other state officials, the West Virginia director of commerce, Koder M. Collison, bitterly denounced as "propaganda" this "recurring theme of writers who come here and say all our people want is a dole."

"The fact that some of the National Seating men have left the state to look for work elsewhere shows that this is a lie," Mr. Collison said in an interview in Charleston.

"The fear is that these legends about Appalachia will scare off the industries we need," he said.

But Mr. Collison and other officials said they recognized that such failures as the National Seating Company's would "do us no good in West Virginia."

Investments Noted

In addition to $220,000 in local stock ownership in the company that is "wiped out," according to Mr. Lawson, three West Virginia banks have $75,000 invested in the defunct operation.

The Area Redevelopment Administration's share is $679,000 and the Small Business Administration's $350,000. The West Virginia Industrial Development Authority has lent $134,000 to the company.

As of today, with its assets under audit, the company owes the Appalachian Power Company $12,000 for electricity.

A visitor found the woodworking plant locked, vacant and under guard today. Half a mile up the sharply winding road, a group of men in clean khakis stood by the edge of the road in front of a peeling shanty.

"We never thought the Government would let them close it," one said. "But I'm glad they got that company out of there. Maybe they'll send a new boss down from Washington to run it right."

"They didn't pay enough for a man to live on," said a companion. "It's not as good as in the mines."

U.S. Lawmakers Debate on Appalachia

By REMER TYSON

A series of speeches by powerful U.S. lawmakers directly concerned with road building turned into a debate on President Lyndon B. Johnson's Appalachian program here Tuesday.

Sen. Jennings Randolph, D-W. Va., chairman of the Senate Public Works subcommittee on roads, predicted passage of the Appalachian measure by more than 3-1 in the upcoming Congress. Randolph said the program would give a "hand-up instead of a handout" to some 17 million Americans handicapped by "long-standing deficiencies in that region's highway network."

OPENING SESSION

Randolph addressed the opening session of the American Association of State Highways Officials.

The Virginian's home state is in the heart of the economically depressed Appalachian region that covers parts of 11 states, including a portion of north Georgia. Plans call for Georgia to qualify for nearly 100 miles of highways under the program.

Republican Rep. William C. Cramer of Florida, ranking minority member of the House public works subcommittee on roads, termed the proposed Appalachian highway-development program "discriminatory" against other regions and a

Sen. J. Randolph

Sen. Caleb Boggs

may or may not be unique in "dangerous precedent."

Cramer said, "Appalachia some respects, but it is most certainly not unique in its lack of adequate highways. . . . It seems obvious that the best interests of the nation demand that such funds be apportioned to all the states, not a selected few, in accordance with equitable formulas or criteria. . . ."

MOST IMPORTANT

In a prepared speech, Democratic Rep. George H. Fallon of Maryland, chairman of the House public works subcommittee on roads, described proposed highway construction as the "most important part of the Appalachian package." He also pointed out the program has been given top priority by President Johnson.

Fallon's speech was read by Edward McNeal, chief clerk of the House Public Works Committee. Fallon is recovering from surgery and could not attend.

Sen. Caleb Boggs, R-Del., did not mention the Appalachian program in his speech to the highway officials, but said in an interview that he is "in sympathy with the Appalachian area, but I was not satisfied that this was set up for a specific area. I think it should be set up for most of the country. There are other areas that need this type of assistance."

SUBS AS SPEAKER

Sen. Boggs substituted for Sen. John Sherman Cooper, R-Ky., as a convention speaker.

In an interview, Sen. Randolph said he thinks the Appalachian road program will "complement the rest of the country" rather

Job Corps Centers Aim At Youths' Ignorance, Motivation

By CHRISTIAN E. BURCKEL

The Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 in the antipoverty program provides for a Job Corps designed to remove a cause of unemployment by teaching youngsters marketable skills in rural and urban centers.

A rural center will comprise about 100 16-to-21-year-old enrolees, an "urban center" about 1,000.

According to Dr. Lewis Eigen, director of program development and analysis, approximately 45 centers are in the formative stage: 48 rural and 5 urban.

It is planned to have the anticipated 40,000 enrollees divided equally between the two types of centers.

When the initial implementation is completed there will be 20 urban and 200 rural centers.

Rural centers are planned to be conducted on federal lands located nationwide from Cape Cod to California, while urban centers will be nearer to or within cities and metropolitan areas.

The objectives are very similar for both types of centers: Basic education (reading, writing and arithmetic) tailored to the needs of the individuals comprising the corps; training in a marketable skill such as might be offered in a trade school or technical institute; development of attitudes considered good by educators; indoctrination of good health habits and personal grooming as well as the development of physical fitness; instruction in job application, etc.

Rural centers will be staffed by employes assigned by the U.S. Departments of Agriculture and Interior, while urban centers are planned to be operated under agreement with prime contractors.

Applications to operate an urban center have been filed by IBM, Chicago, and by the Federal Electric Co. of New Jersey.

Another application has been filed by a university which plans to use a local manufacturer as its vocational training facility.

In another instance a manufacturer lists a nearby college as its subcontractor to teach the basic subjects of the program.

Enrollees in the rural centers will receive free board and room, transportation expenses and $1 a day spending money besides $50 per month which is held in trust for them until their enrollment has been completed — estimated at from six months to two years.

The act provides a matching plan for those who wish to send half of their monthly pay home. The government would send $50 per month to the youth's dependents and credit $25 per month to his completion stake.

This money does not reduce the amounts which families on relief receive from other sources. At the end of two years, an enrollee would receive $1,200 in cash, or if he has sent half of his monthly allowance home, he would start out with $600.

Urban centers are to be operated on essentially the same financial subsidies and opportunities.

This Job Corps is one of a four-part program designed to help young men and women achieve self-reliance.

Also in the planning stages to help unemployed youth are a work-training program, a work-study program and a community action program. They will be described in subsequent columns.

Youngsters will be recommended for the Job Corps by high school counselors, local welfare and youth agencies, or, the young man or woman can apply without recommendation. Graduates of the program will be assisted by local organizations to become responsible members of the community.

The program is in the formulating stage and its first implementation is planned for next January.

No one quarrels with the humanitarian purpose of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, but many are deeply concerned with the ill - defined method of organization and function of this new federal agency.

Opponents of the bill point out that there is no requirement for enlisting the cooperation and participation of existing local agencies, who presumably are not without knowledge in the administration of welfare programs.

Officials in Washington explain that the Economic Opportunity Act is not a welfare program but a program of rehabilitation through training and education.

In my opinion, based on first-hand experience with the National Recovery Program of the 30's, no national program or policy can possibly be developed that will meet a local situation without adaptation to local conditions, philosophy, problems, status, and objectives, coordinated within the framework and experience of the hundreds of agencies dedicated to improving the lot of our less fortunate citizens.

Under the law, the director has the authority to develop his program so as to make it function in cooperation with all organizations concerned for years with the war on poverty.

Only by marshalling all of the efforts now being expended by nearly half a hundred Federal agencies in the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Health, Education and Welfare, Housing and Finance, Interior and Labor, and can there be any hope of progress toward the stated objectives.

It is sincerely hoped that Sargent Shriver, the director, will clear all proposed activities in his part of the war on poverty with local, state and federal groups and officials instead of imposing a bureaucratic agency on any local area.

RE Pov Prog

Batt Defends West Virginia Plant Project as One of Many

NYT 12/11/64

TO THE EDITOR:

The news article on the front page of your issue of Nov. 25 bears the headline "First Plan to Aid Appalachia Fails," and the accompanying story implies that the project itself is both typical and symbolic of the status of Federal aid for the economic development of the Appalachian region.

Any such inference drawn by your readers would be both incorrect and unfortunate. The National Seating and Dimension Company represents only a small fraction of the Federal aid to Appalachia, and even this project cannot yet be classed as a "failure."

The project is only one out of 430 Area Redevelopment Administration projects of all kinds which had been approved as of Oct. 31, 1964, for the Appalachian region, as defined by the President's Appalachian Regional Commission. It is expected that these projects will ultimately be responsible for the creation of over 19,000 direct jobs when they are in full operation for a year.

Eighty of these projects, representing an A.R.A. investment of $28 million, were commercial loans to business and industry of the type made for the project referred to in your article. Most of these projects are successful. Those which are experiencing difficulties represent only a small proportion of the total.

Percentage of Investment

The Area Redevelopment Administration investment in the West Virginia project now in difficulty represents only about 2 per cent of the total investment in commercial and industrial loans in Appalachia, and less than 1 per cent of the total investment of all kinds in the region.

While no one denies the difficulties involved in establishing new businesses in the very heart of the most depressed section of Appalachia, the evidence so far does not support a conclusion that it is either unwise or impossible to do so. The National Seating and Dimension plant is modern, efficient, and in existence. We are working with the State of West Virginia and the Small Business Administration to see if it cannot be put back into operation as soon as possible under new management.

If all concerned recognize that the fundamental difficulties of Appalachia cannot be overcome quickly, and exercise patience and intelligence, there is good reason to believe that this plant should again operate on a scale which will bring profit to its owners and, most important, jobs to its community.

PRESIDENT SPURS POVERTY FIGHTERS

RE Pov Prog

He Defines Tasks for VISTA and Opportunity Groups

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 — President Johnson greeted the first group of volunteer antipoverty workers today and then met for the first time with his new Economic Opportunity Council, which he asked to help him attain "total victory" in the war on poverty.

In a ceremony in the White House theater, Mr. Johnson was introduced to the first 20 men and women accepted for training in the Volunteers for Service in America (VISTA) program, sometimes described as a domestic Peace Corps.

He told them it would be their job "to guide the young, to comfort the sick, to encourage the downtrodden, to teach the skills which may lead to a more satisfying and more rewarding life."

"No aspect of the war against poverty will be more important than the work that you do," he said to the pioneers in a volunteer group of antipoverty workers expected to total 5,000 by 1966.

The President then went to the Cabinet Room for a meeting with the Economic Opportunity Council, which he called "a domestic National Security Council for the war on poverty."

The 23-member body, containing Cabinet members and other officials, was established by the Economic Opportunity Act to advise on "the coordination of antipoverty efforts of all segments of the Federal Government."

The President said he hoped that Vice President-elect Hubert H. Humphrey, who was present, would assume a role similar to the one Mr. Johnson filed as chairman of the Peace Corps National Advisory Council when he was a Vice President.

Mr. Johnson said he would announce the membership of such an advisory council soon. This was the second task assigned to Mr. Humphrey this week. Earlier he was designated to coordinate the work of agencies dealing in civil rights.

Noting that he was asking Mr. Humphrey to "take a leading role" in the poverty fight, Mr. Johnson said that Sargent Shriver, head of the Economic Opportunity Office, would work closely with the Vice President-elect.

Mr. Johnson asked the council to "review major policy issues that arise in conducting the war against poverty."

He also asked it to "weigh national priorities for program needs" and to assess the ability of existing programs to meet them. He called for an information system to supply local leaders with facts on the program and help to develop local community action.

The VISTA volunteers included an 81-year-old psychologist, a 20-year-old college student and a 71-year-old retired Army colonel.

The 20 who came to the White House are the first accepted among more than 100 who will begin six weeks of training, similar in nature to Peace Corps training, the first of the year.

They will begin work in the field in poverty pockets in the United States and possibly in American territories overseas on Feb. 1, Mr. Shriver said.

The poverty officials have not selected the projects, but have requests from Indian reservations, city slums and a mental institution in Appalachia, a spokesman said.

The volunteers will receive a subsistance allowance and $50 a month, to be held until their enlistment is up. They join for one year, with an option to re-enlist for another year.

The psychologist is Miss Elizabeth M. Brown of Kinston, N. C., who was the first president of the North Carolina Association for Retarded Children. In her letter of application she wrote that "for me to point the way to a better life is only neighborly."

The retired colonel among the VISTA volunteers is Marc J. Logie, who fought in France in World War I and in the Pacific in World War II.

He learned of the program last March by reading of it in a Spanish newspaper while on a religious retreat in a Trappist monastery in Spain. He volunteered immediately.

Nine other members of the group are 50 years old or older and there are three married couples.

Before shaking hands with members of the group, Mr. Johnson said:

"Your pay will be low; the conditions of your labor will often be difficult. But you will have the satisfaction of leading a great national effort. . . . I hope that all those with skills and dedication to offer will come and join with you in this most extraordinary force for good in our country."

The President informed the council that he would rely heavily on it for recommendations and added:

"Our objective is total victory —and we are going to attain it."

Mr. Shriver serves as the chairman of the Economic Opportunity Council as well as chief of the antipoverty program.

COMMUNITY COUNCIL OF THE ATLANTA AREA, INC.

ANNUAL REPORT

MAY 1964

Community Planning

No form of social action is more uniquely American than Community Planning for Health, Education, and Welfare. Community Planning is stimulated by optimism, tempered with realism, and can be successfully implemented only by the concerted efforts of volunteer lay citizens who are willing to assume responsibility for their own destiny.

Optimists believe that man's condition and status in life is controllable—to a degree at least. American tradition, with its scorn for a stratified society, gives impetus to the optimistic view that social condition and individual status can be improved. Community planning offers the challenge and the opportunity "to do something about" one's immediate environment. It refuses to accept poverty, ignorance, dependency, and disease as social statics.

Common sense—a realistic evaluation of the demands and resources available in a particular community needs no spokesman to point out that every society is relatively restricted and that, therefore, each individual is limited in attaining the full measure of his potential if his environment is cluttered with non-functional and ineffectual people, and if its best assets are wasted in disordered profligacy. Stated simply—taxes or contributions taken from the effective, producing members of a society cannot forever be poured into the bottomless pit of subsidizing the least productive. Community planning aims to discover, assess, and satisfy the greatest number of human needs by the most efficient use of all community resources.

Voluntarism is the word used to describe the American characteristic evidenced by lay citizens voluntarily forming themselves into clubs, committees, and associations to achieve goals of interest to the group—goals which in most countries, if sought at all, are sought by governmental action. If "consent of the governed" is the basic tenent of American poltical philosophy, surely voluntary lay participation is its counterpart in our social philosophy. Successful community planning must be by and for the citizens of the community—it cannot be legislated, and it must and rightfully should depend for its success solely upon its ability to sell its purposes and procedures to the people it serves.

The great paradox is that such an essentially optimistic, realistic, and American way to enlist the human resources in a common effort for the common good as is offered by community planning continually fails to stimulate the kind of united community support that it should. Atlanta is no exception. Our community deserves a better fate. I am confident that with our splendid Executive Director, and our new Chairman, and reactivated Board, the Community Council of the Atlanta Area, Inc., will surely meet the challenge and create a more socially effective community.

Facts About

PURPOSE (from the Bylaws)

The purpose of the Council shall be to cooperate with existing public and private agencies and institutions in the fields of health, education, recreation, and welfare, in order to ascertain facts, develop methods and foster the means whereby the social problems of the Atlanta area may be ameliorated and become less and less a public burden.

FUNCTIONS

A. Coordination of services at the administrative, service, and financing body levels.

The proliferation of agencies and the increasing tendency toward fragmentation of services emphasizes coordination as a function. Most of the Council's attempts at coordination have been at the administrative level and have met with little success. A greater emphasis must be placed on bringing financing bodies together and on working with service organizations at the point of delivery of service. The latter method suggests a non-service, neighborhood—based organization within the Council concentrating on solving problems of people.

B. Research

1. Uniform collection and continuous analysis of social data are necessary to provide a current picture of a city, its people, and their problems.
2. Research consultation with study committees and agency personnel.
3. Formulation of a comprehensive guide for services related to social problems to guide financing bodies in budgeting funds.
4. More knowledge is needed on the environmental influence in social problems.
5. Accountability must be developed. Too many claims are made by too many services based on numbers served or on professional quality of service. The public is entitled to know what a program can and cannot do.
6. Two of the major programs changing the face of the city are highway construction and urban renewal. The programs conceived by the physical planners affect the lives of people. Social research and planning must be meshed with the physical planners' ideas for changing the landscape of the city.

C. Experimental and Demonstration

The Council should have the freedom and the opportunity to experiment with new service programs. Two of the greatest problems in our city are limited job opportunity and educational deficiencies. The Council should take the initiative in bringing together community leadership, interested organizations and the facts of the problems for creative thinking and planning. New concepts of services and program realignment will emerge which should be tested.

the Council

D. Agency and Field of Service Studies

After comprehensive guides for services are developed, there will still be conflicts and differences of opinion about agency programs and services. Work with individual agencies or groups of agencies engaged in similar services is necessary.

E. Participation of More People in Planning

There are people in all walks of life who, if we can gain their cooperation and impart some training to them, can supply significant insights and first rate leadership in defining better approaches to problems which they see and live with. There are many people with competence in lower socio-economic groups who can serve as extensions of professional workers if we can bring them into the picture.

Job opportunities for volunteers and paid nonprofessionals need to be re-explored and training programs revamped so that more significant service positions are created. The Social Service Aides' program of 1962 illustrates that people are available and after receiving training can perform a real service.

F. Public Education

People are not generally well informed about social welfare problems. As facts are uncovered by the Council, the information should be made public.

G. Implementing Change

Cities and problems change. This is not always true of services. There are difficult decisions—controversial situations—which the Council must face up to. Councils have reputations for often creating many new services and seldom eliminating old services. Planning organizations which vacillate get into difficult straits. The difference between successful and unsuccessful planning organizations is the dedication of community leadership to do that which the facts indicate must be done and the ability of the professional staff to supply accurate, unbiased information.

Executive Director's Report

The Council is in a transitional phase. The past year was important because we searched for and found new directions. It was an exciting year, but as someone once said, "You ain't seen nothing yet!"

We finished a few things like Protective Services for Children, the Hospital and Health Inventory, "Atlanta's People," approved three requests for Hill-Burton funds, completed studies on the Massell Clinic and the Savannah Street Mission, made two reports to the Fund Appeals Review Board, and completed a report on Cuban Refugees.

Two grant proposals on planning for the aging were written, but neither was accepted. We helped several groups find projects—a time-consuming process. A tour of a "disadvantaged" neighborhood was organized in cooperation with the Council of Jewish Women and the Salvation Army. Our Information and Referral Service calls increased tremendously, including one international referral from Colombia, South America. We spoke to many groups and handled numerous requests to show the "Atlanta's People" slide presentation.

Consultation with agencies continued. Our staff worked with the Chest budget committees, Community Services for the Blind, and the Clayton County mental health committee.

We bogged down in finding a new "home" for Homemaker Services, in finding a sponsor for centers for the aged in new public housing projects, and in making a study of public welfare potential.

A new Neighborhood Improvement Program was launched in West End. Out of the mouths of the "disadvantaged" people have come ideas for services and new structures for services. An array of potential services have been outlined. We are discussing the possibility of joint project proposals with agencies. The problems of employment and day care have received our initial attention. The Georgia Department of Labor has temporarily assigned a job counselor to West End.

From the Permanent Conference have emerged two committees of significance, Youth Training and Employment, and Basic Education (illiteracy). Both groups are wrestling with difficult problems. The enthusiastic response by community institutions has kindled the imagination of many people and new, creative approaches to both problems are being suggested.

The request to the Council to become involved in social research in Atlanta's Urban Renewal Program and President Johnson's "War on Poverty" has important ramifications for the Council. In non-apparent ways, these two programs fit together and are within the limits of Council functions—rehabilitation of people and prevention of social ills. We need to know more about our social problems, and we need a strategy for getting at the problems. It is possible that these two programs as they unfold will create an entirely different social planning philosophy and technique.

Most important of all, however, is the encouraging response the Council is receiving as it re-emerges on the community scene. The Board, the Executive Committee, and all other committee members are responsible for this reception. I am grateful for the energetic support of all of the Council's "volunteers" and appreciate the expenditure of effort to build the Council.

State to Get Four Projects In Poverty War

Largest Is Plan To Train Adults On Basic Level

By TOM GREENE

Georgia will get four of 162 new projects and grants totaling $856,879 under a second phase of the "war on poverty" announced in Washington.

The total grants for the 162 new projects is $82.6 million.

The largest Georgia grant is $734,846 for an "adult basic education" program. This is designed to provide training in such areas as reading and basic arithmetic for 1,200 Georgians over 18 who never finished elementary school.

OTHER Georgia projects are:

—A $100,000 grant for a Neighborhood Youth Corps project in Cartersville.

—Grants of $11,483 to the Slash Pine Area Planning and Development Commission in Waycross and $10,550 to the Southwest Georgia Planning and Development Commission, Camilla.

The Cartersville project, which comes under the U.S. Department of Labor, will provide jobs for children from low-income families so they can stay in school.

IT IS EXPECTED that 240 students in the area will be provided such jobs as library, cafeteria or clerical aides or laboratory assistants.

The project will be under the supervision of the local school board and is designed for students between the ages of 16 and 21.

THE WAYCROSS grant will be used by the planning commission there to design development plans for Atkinson, Clinch, Ben Hill, Brantley, Charlton, Bacon, Coffee, Pierce and Ware counties.

The grant to the Southwest Georgia Planning and Development Commission will be used for a similar plan for Baker, Calhoun, Colquitt, Decatur, Grady, Lee, Miller, Mitchell, Seminole, Dougherty, Terrell, Thomas and Worth counties.

These two grants come under the Community Action Program.

Rural families in Georgia also will be eligible for a new loan program, under the Farmers Home Administration, designed to aid those unable to get credit elsewhere. They may apply for loans up to $2,500.

Job Corps Training Center to be operated by a subsidiary of International Telephone and Telegraph Co. for a possible fee of $540,000.

At a news conference, Wednesday, Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, said "I hope that a large amount of participation by private industry will develop over the months ahead."

The Urban Job Corps Training Center at Camp Kilmer, N.J., was one of three announced. The two others, at Tongue Point Naval Station, Ore., and Camp Gary, Tex., will be operated by nonprofit organizations.

The White House announcement also contained 18 sites in 15 states for the smaller rural job training centers. They are in addition to 41 sites announced in late November.

IN ALL, antipoverty program officials said, some 150 rural centers to train 100 to 200 youths in basic job skills and rudimentary education are planned. They hope to have about 10 urban area centers, for 1,000 or more youths, in operation by next June.

Also disclosed Wednesday were the first assignments for the domestic version of the Peace Corps. Dubbed Vista, the program calls for 99 volunteers to work on 28 programs among poverty stricken Americans in migrant labor camps, chronically depressed areas and big city slums.

The announcement also listed grants of more than $51 million for community action projects, adult education and work training programs, and full and part-time job training for school students who have dropped out or are about to.

COMBINED WITH the projects announced by the White House in November, Shriver said, the antipoverty program has now committed $117 million for 212 separate projects in all of the states and territories.

He said demand for programs is running 50 to 100 per cent more than the $784 million which Congress appropriated for the antipoverty fight this fiscal year. But he would not say whether President Johnson will ask more money from the next Congress.

AS SKETCHED by program officials, the Jobs Corps Training Centers, while scattered across the country, are not intended to be regional. Youths from 16 to 21 can be shipped to any of them, at government expense.

The criteria will be a volunteer applicant's expressed interest plus aptitude tests, but the final decision as to where he goes will be up to program officials.

The smaller rural centers apparently will concentrate more on basic job skills and education combined with conservation work. The larger urban centers, while providing basic education, will offer somewhat more complicated job training.

THE CAMP KILMER center will be operated by the Federal Electric Co., a subsidiary of IT&T.

Under the contract, Federal Electric, which officials said has conducted other private and government personnel training programs, will be allowed "reasonable" expenses up to $11.5 million for the term of the 18-month contract. It will receive a fee of 4.7 per cent of expenses.

And, subject to government approval, the company can subcontract any portion of the work to Rutgers University, the state university of New Jersey.

The Tongue Point, Ore., center, to be operated by the University of Oregon, bears an $8.1 million price tag. The Philco division of Ford Motor Co., another firm with personnel training experience, is listed as the subcontractor.

The Texas center contract for $8,160,000 is with the Texas Education Foundation, Inc.

Shriver said the private firms will assist in the placement of employes following their six-

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16 — President Johnson announced $82.6 million in new antipoverty projects today, including more than $20 million for New York State and surrounding areas.

The allocations, covering 162 projects in all 50 states, represents the second allotment of funds for what the President has called a nationwide war on poverty.

The initial allocation, $35 million for 120 projects, was announced Nov. 24. Congress has appropriated $784.2 million for the antipoverty program for the fiscal year ending next June 30.

A Major Assault Here

The new grants single out the metropolitan New York-New Jersey area as the target for a major assault on poverty.

New York City will receive a total of $5,339,652. Of this, $5 $5 million will go to the Poverty Operations Board for a Neighborhood Youth Corps program under which in-school young people will be given part-time jobs and those not in school will be given full-time jobs.

Additional funds for special antipoverty programs will go to the Borough of Manhattan Community College and the Albert Einstein College of Medicine at Yeshiva University.

In addition, New York State will receive $1,670,097 to establish a program of adult basic education. Funds for antipoverty projects also will go to Syracuse University and to the Board of Education in Buffalo for a Neighborhood Youth Corps.

The largest single allocation, $11,520,000, will be used to establish an urban job-training center at the abandoned military base at Camp Kilmer, N. J. Two similar centers will be established at abandoned bases at San Marcos, Tex., and Astoria, Ore.

The Camp Kilmer center, to be opened in February, will be operated under a cost-plus contract by the International Telephone and Telegraph's Federal Electric Corporation of Paramus, N. J. The company, noted as a leader in skilled training, will be assisted by Rutgers University.

Up to 2,500 young men between the ages of 16 and 22 will be trained at the Kilmer center each year for such positions as hospital orderlies, clerks, office workers, welders, and a variety of others.

The three urban job-training centers, the first to be announced, will be for young men only. Similar centers for young women will be established within several months.

The 162 new projects range from a nearly $4 million grant to help Chicago wage a community-wide attack on poverty to a $6,000 small-business loan to a Pittsburgh man, a former steelworker, so that he can expand his 12-seat luncheonette.

Sioux to Be Aided

Grants will provide preschool training for children of the Devil's Lake Sioux Indian Tribe; help parents on relief rolls in the Virgin Islands to learn how to operate power sewing machines; provide job retraining for residents of the little town of Martin's Ferry, Ohio.

In Eastern Kentucky, one of the nation's poorest areas, 1,200 college students will teach reading to deprived children and install libraries in 800 small schoolhouses under a $299,242 grant.

Yeshiva University's Albert Einstein College of Medicine will use its $289,652 grant to establish four neighborhood service centers offering counseling aid in the South Bronx area.

Ninety-nine Vista volunteers, domestic counterparts of Peace Corpsmen, will be sent to fight poverty in migrant camps in California, city slums and in the blighted villages and hollows in Appalachia. The formal name of this antipoverty organization is Volunteers in Service to America.

Federal funds, supplemented by local money, wil be used to attack poverty locally in Bridgeport, Hartford, New Haven and Waterbury, Conn.; and in Trenton and Jersey City.

$18 Million for Education

Highlights of the antipoverty projects announced today are:

¶Each state will receive Federal funds to establish adult basic education programs. The total allocation for such courses in the states, the District of Columbia and territories is $18,344,000.

¶Grants totaling $10,342,300 were made to 13 states, 22 cities, seven rural areas, three universities, one Indian tribe and one nonprofit organization to conduct antipoverty programs or to train workers in combating poverty.

¶Grants totaling $12,075,000 were made to establish 17 Neighborhood Youth Corps in 15 states to provide an estimated 22,380 young men and women with part-time employment.

¶The first VISTA volunteers will be assigned to 28 different communities to help teach, train and counsel impoverished Americans.

¶Grants totaling $10,500,000 were made to five states—Kentucky, Louisiana, Rhode Island, New Mexico, California—and to the Virgin Islands to provide job training for some 5,160 unemployed men and women. The major share, $9,600,000, went to nine Eastern Kentucky counties.

¶Eighteen Rural Job Corps camps—to provide remedial education and work experience for young men—will be established in 15 states. These are in addition to 41 other camps previously announced.

¶Loans totaling $29,500 were made to four small-business men in the Pittsburgh area by the Small Business Administration.

The Offices of Economic Opportunity, which is directing the antipoverty efforts, also disclosed that nearly 450 colleges and universities had indicated they would take part in the work-study program.

Under work-study, the Fedsral Government and the colleges and institutions will finance the cost of providing on-campus or off-campus jobs for students from needy families.

Another antipoverty program —one offering small loans to low-income rural families—will begin tomorrow when the Farmers Home Administration begins accepting loan applications. The loans, up to $2,500, would be used to finance small family businesses and farming enterprises.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16 — President Johnson announced $82.6 million in new antipoverty projects today, including more than $20 million for New York State and surrounding areas.

The allocation, covering 162 projects in all 50 states, represents the second allotment of funds for what the President has called a nationwide war on poverty.

The initial allocation, $35 million for 120 projects, was announced Nov. 24. Congress has appropriated $784.2 million for the antipoverty program for the fiscal year ending next June 30.

A Major Assault Here

The new grants single out the metropolitan New York-New Jersey area as the target for a major assault on poverty.

New York City will receive a total of $5,339,652. Of this, $5 million will go to the Poverty Operations Board for a Neighborhood Youth Corps program under which in-school young people will be given part-time jobs and those not in school will be given full-time jobs.

Additional funds for special antipoverty programs will go to the Borough of Manhattan Community College and the Albert Einstein College of Medicine at Yeshiva University.

In addition, New York State will receive $1,670,097 to establish a program of adult basic education. Funds for antipoverty projects also will go to Syracuse University and to the Board of Education in Buffalo for a Neighborhood Youth Corps.

The largest single allocation, $11,520,000, will be used to establish an urban job-training center at the abandoned military base at Camp Kilmer, N. J. Two similar centers will be established at abandoned bases at San Marcos, Tex., and Astoria, Ore.

The Camp Kilmer center, to be opened in February, will be operated under a cost-plus contract by the International Telephone and Telegraph's Federal Electric Corporation of Paramus, N. J. The company, noted as a leader in skilled training, will be assisted by Rutgers University.

Up to 2,500 young men between the ages of 16 and 22 will be trained at the Kilmer center each year for such positions as hospital orderlies, clerks, office workers, welders, and a variety of others.

The three urban job-training centers, the first to be announced, will be for young men only. Similar centers for young women will be established within several months.

The 162 new projects range from a nearly $4 million grant to help Chicago wage a community-wide attack on poverty to a $6,000 small-business loan to a Pittsburgh man, a former steelworker, so that he can expand his 12-seat luncheonette.

Sioux to Be Aided

Grants will provide preschool training for children of the Devil's Lake Sioux Indian Tribe; help parents on relief rolls in the Virgin Islands to learn how to operate power sewing machines; provide job retraining for residents of the little town of Martin's Ferry, Ohio.

In eastern Kentucky, one of the nation's poorest areas, 1,200 college students will teach reading to deprived children and install libraries in 800 small schoolhouses under a $299,242 grant.

Yeshiva University's Albert Einstein College of Medicine will use its $289,652 grant to establish four neighborhood service centers offering counseling aid in the south Bronx area.

Ninety-nine VISTA volunteers, domestic counterparts of Peace Corpsmen, will be sent to fight poverty in migrant camps in California, city slums and in the blighted villages and hollows in Appalachia. The formal name of this antipoverty organization is Volunteers in Service to America.

Federal funds, supplemented by local money, wil be used to attack poverty locally in Bridgeport, Hartford, New Haven and Waterbury, Conn.; and in Trenton and Jersey City.

$18 Million for Education

Highlights of the antipoverty projects announced today are:

¶Each state will receive Federal funds to establish adult basic education programs. The total allocation for such courses in the states, the District of Columbia and territories is $18,344,000.

¶Grants totaling $10,342,300 were made to 13 states, 22 cities, seven rural areas, three universities, one Indian tribe and one nonprofit organization to conduct antipoverty programs or to train workers in combating poverty.

¶Grants totaling $12,075,000 were made to establish 17 Neighborhood Youth Corps in 15 states to provide an estimated 22,380 young men and women with part-time employment.

¶The first VISTA volunteers will be assigned to 28 different communities to help teach, train and counsel impoverished Americans.

¶Grants totaling $10,500,000 were made to five states—Kentucky, Louisiana, Rhode Island, New Mexico, California—and to the Virgin Islands to provide job training for some 5,160 unemployed men and women. The major share, $9,600,000, went to nine Eastern Kentucky counties.

¶Eighteen Rural Job Corps camps—to provide remedial education and work experience for young men—will be established in 15 states. These are in addition to 41 other camps previously announced.

¶Loans totaling $29,500 were made to four small-business men in the Pittsburgh area by the Small Business Administration.

The Offices of Economic Opportunity, which is directing the antipoverty efforts, also disclosed that nearly 450 colleges and universities had indicated they would take part in the work-study program.

Under work-study, the Federal Government and the colleges and institutions will finance the cost of providing on-campus or off-campus jobs for students from needy families.

Another antipoverty program—one offering small loans to low-income rural families—will begin tomorrow when the Farmers Home Administration begins accepting loan applications. The loans, up to $2,500, would be used to finance small family businesses and farming enterprises.

Job Corps Names Chief For Its Women's Centers

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16—Dr. Bennetta B. Washington, principal of Cardozo High School in Washington, was named today as Director of the Women's Training Centers of the Job Corps, a part of the Government's antipoverty program.

Job Corps centers for women have not yet been established, but the first may open this spring. They will train disadvantaged young women between the ages of 16 and 22 in a variety of job skills.

Dr. Washington has been visiting professor in the department of guidance and personnel at New York University for the last 12 summers. She has written extensively on the problems of urban youth.

JOHNSON WEIGHS A $2 BILLION FUND TO FIGHT POVERTY

Pov Program

Considers Asking Congress for That Sum Next Year—Favorable Reaction Seen

12-18-64

By MARJORIE HUNTER

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17 — President Johnson is expected to ask Congress to step up the war on poverty with a multi-billion-dollar appropriation next year.

A $2 billion request is under consideration but has not been decided upon, it was learned today. Such an appropriation would more than double the antipoverty allotment for the fiscal year ending next June 30.

President Johnson had sought $962.5 million for the program. Congress appropriated $784.2 million.

If Congress agreed to appropriate $2 billion during the fiscal year starting next July 1, it would not mean that $2 billion would actually be spent in that fiscal year. Part of the increase could spill over into later years.

Willingness Foreseen

With antipoverty funds now flowing to cities and communities throughout the nation, Administration officials believe that Congress will be willing to increase the appropriation substantially next year.

To date, the Office of Economic Opportunity, which is administering the antipoverty program, has committed $117 million for 212 separate projects in every state and the territories.

A large portion of the money has gone directly to assist states, cities and communities in conducting antipoverty programs of their own.

The largest of these community-action grants have gone to cities with coordinated antipoverty programs already well under way. Chicago has received grants totaling $4,343,571, Detroit $3,403,759, Los Angeles $2,729,683, Atlanta $1,080,000.

However, the big cities have no monopoly on antipoverty funds. Of the 75 community-action grants made so far, some have gone to Indian reservations; mountain counties in Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee and West Virginia, and to poor rural areas in Louisiana, Arkansas and Virginia.

Youth Corps Funds

Large sums also have been allocated to establish Neighborhood Youth Corps in urban and rural areas of 23 states. These Youth Corps programs will provide part-time jobs for young people still in school and full-time jobs for those not in school.

Work-experience programs—designed to provide training and work experience for adults now on relief rolls—have been set up in nine states and the Virgin Islands.

Allocations totaling $18,344,000 have been made to every state, the District of Columbia and the territories to set up adult basic education programs. Within the next six months, 30,000 adults are expected to be attending such courses.

Recruiting already is underway for the Job Corps, a two-part program designed to provide up to 40,000 young people with remedial education and intensive job training.

Sites for 59 Job Corps Conservation Camps have been chosen in 28 states. The first camp, in the Catoctin Mountains of Maryland, will open next month. Others will open in the spring and summer.

Three sites have been chosen for Job Corps urban training centers. These centers, which will open within two months, will be at three former military installations—Camp Kilmer, N. J., Camp Gary, Tex., and Tongue Point Naval Station, Oregon.

Private industry, under contract with the Government, will assist in training youths at some of the urban Job Corps centers.

For instance, International Telephone and Telegraph's Federal Electric Corporation has signed an $11,520,000 contract with the Government to train up to 2,500 young men at the Camp Kilmer center to become cooks, waiters, welders, mechanics, office workers and dozens of other kind of workers.

Federal Electric Corporation, best known for developing the Distant Early Warning System for the Air Force, will work with Rutgers University in the job-training program. The contract provides for a 4.7 per cent fee to the corporation for operating the program.

Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, said he hoped to interest more private industries into entering contracts for operating job centers.

Another part of the antipoverty program soon to go into action is VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America), the domestic counterpart of the Peace Corps.

Ninety-nine VISTA volunteers will begin training next month and will then be assigned to migrant camps, city slums, mountain communities and other areas in nine states.

$13 Million Is Allocated for Adult Education Courses

12-22-64

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21 — The Federal Government and the states are teaming up this month to ease one of the nation's most serious educational problems—widespread adult illiteracy.

Using money allotted under the new antipoverty program, the Government distributed a total of $13,344,000 to the states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

The states and territories will set up adult basic-education courses, with training in reading, writing and arithmetic. About 30,000 persons are expected to begin training this year.

The courses will be open to persons 18 years of age and older who have not completed elementary school.

Based on 1960 census figures, an estimated total of 22.1 million adults 25 years of age and older have completed less than eight years of formal schooling; 11,472,732 of these have completed six years or less of schooling.

The problem is not confined to any one area, although on a percentage basis it is most widespread in the South.

New York State leads the nation in the number of "functional illiterates" (those with eight years of schooling or less). About 2 million adults in the state fall in this category.

Ranking next is Texas, with 1.5 million; Pennsylvania, 1.49 million; California, 1.3 million, and Illinois, a little over 1 million.

Recent surveys have shown that low-educational level is the single most widespread cause of poverty. It is characteristic of 67 per cent of low-income families.

Youth Centers Set Up

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21 (UPI) — The Labor Department announced today the establishment of youth opportunity centers in 18 cities as a supplement to the Federal antipoverty program to check soaring teen-age unemployment.

Labor Secretary W. Willard Wirtz said this would be the first of an expected 105 such centers to be situated in major metropolitan areas.

They will be charged with helping young people receive job training, part-time work to help them remain in school and other remedial programs.

4,500 Volunteer for Work In Poverty-Area Corps

Pov Prog

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27 (AP) —The director of the budding domestic peace corps said today 4,500 persons had applied for places in the organization.

He said the volunteers would be chosen largely on a self-selection basis after a close-up look at poverty.

Glen W. Ferguson, director of Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA), said that after preliminary screening and training "we will take the candidate and place him in the environment of poverty for four to six weeks where he will be trained in the environment where we hope to have him living and working."

Such an environment, Mr. Ferguson said on the Radio Press International's program, "From the People," might be an urban slum, an Indian reservation, a migrant farm workers' camp or some other focus of poverty. NYT 12/28/64

Poverty War Falters As Factory Fails

By BEN A. FRANKLIN

(Copyright 1964 by the New York Times Co.)

WILLIAMSON, W.Va.—The collapse of the first big federally assisted effort to revive the stagnant Appalachian region by creating diversified industry has left a bitter legacy here for both the rescuers and the rescued.

Until last Friday, when the National Seating and Dimension Co., Inc., closed its doors just ahead of an encircling posse of creditors, the company's venture into the manufacture of "dimensions" — finished parts for the wood furniture industry—was symbolic of the promised new deal.

The program began with John F. Kennedy's presidential primary campaign in this state in 1960. Since then the federal government has sought to deliver a massive amount of assistance to get the 11-state Appalachian region on its feet.

With $1.8 million in financing, most of it 4 per cent federal loans from the Area Development Administration and the Small Business Administration in Washington, the new woodworking plant here had created over 100 jobs, but practically no profits.

Now the jobs are gone, and according to officials of the West Virginia Office of Employment Security, many who held them have left to seek work in Ohio and Illinois.

MANAGEMENT MISTAKES

There is considerable evidence that the company's failure came largely as a result of management mistakes.

"It's not that you can't train a coal miner to be a woodworker," one company official said. "We proved that you can train them—but it takes a hell of a lot more money than anyone thought it would. These men are not used to working for $1.25 an hour, and wages in the furniture industry are not high."

Efforts to overcome the National Seating Co.'s failure and to revive the plant here by finding a buyer for the ready-made $675,000 tax write-off are under way.

TYPICAL TARGET

This city is a typical Appalachian target area—a dirty, peeling, railroad town tucked away on the Kentucky border in a narrow Tug Fork flatland between the pointed silhouettes of cone-shaped mountains.

At the Chamber of Commerce building, whose walls are made of blocks of coal, Williamson is billed as "the heart of the billion-dollar coalfield." The smog of soft-coal smoke in the surrounding draws and hollows gives the city's motto a certain gritty authenticity.

But coal long ago ceased to make a sufficient contribution to the economy.

The unemployment rate is 13.9 per cent—"a whole lot better than it was when it was 30 per cent in 1959 and 1960," an unemployment security official said.

The National Seating venture was started in 1962 at Varney, 17 miles, or three mountains, east of here. The plant is the newest and most modern in the dimension industry, according to government spokesmen.

FACTS

What is the Neighborhood Youth Corps?

A program to help youth stay in school and to start them toward constructive careers by providing work experience.

How was the Corps Established?

By the Department of Labor to carry out the youth work-training program under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, the basic Federal legislation to fight poverty.

Who is Eligible for the Youth Corps?

Unemployed young men and women, age 16 to 22, who need part-time work to stay in school or return to the classroom, or who need full-time work experience to equip them for jobs in today's market.

What Sort of Work Will Corps Members Perform?

Work which will serve the community and which would otherwise not be performed.

Specifically, What Sort of Occupations are Involved?

Jobs developed will include nurse aides, hospital orderlies, assistant dieticians, teachers' aids, playground attendants, arts and crafts assistants, and similar occupations.

Must a Youth be Out of School and Out of Work to Qualify?

No. Encouragement will be given youth who want to combine schooling with part-time work in the Corps.

What about Rates of Pay for Corps Members Assigned to These Jobs?

The law requires Youth Corps wages to be based upon starting rates in the occupation in which the enrollee works. With proven ability, enrollees' pay can go to the full starting rate.

Apart from Wages, What Might be Some of the Longer-Range Benefits on a Young Person's Service in Neighborhood Youth Corps?

Youth who work on Youth Corps projects will develop abilities in occupations where workers are in demand. They will acquire work habits and many will be able to continue their education. They will also receive essential counseling and guidance. All factors will make possible greater employability and more creative lives.

Who Initiates Projects Under the Neighborhood Youth Corps?

State and local governments and private nonprofit service and welfare organizations.

Will Members of the Corps be Required to Travel to Areas other than Their Hometowns?

No. Enrollees will work, and continue to live in their own communities; where their backgrounds will be of greatest use, and their efforts of greatest impact.

How does the Neighborhood Youth Corps Differ from the Job Corps, Another Key Part of the Economic Opportunity Act?

Job Corps members will live in residential centers and work and study away from home.

What Kind of Work Schedules will be Expected of Corps Members?

The law permits an extensive degree of flexibility. Some may work full-time; others may combine part-time work with either attendance at high school or other educational activity.

There will be part-time and weekend jobs for school students who need income, and summertime jobs during the school vacation periods.

What is the Project Size of the Neighborhood Youth Corps?

The Congress has authorized up to 200,000 enrollees nationally in any given year.

How are Costs of Corps Projects Financed?

The Federal Government will pay 90 percent of all costs; at the start local sponsoring organizations will be required to provide the other ten percent. Facilities and equipment provided by local sponsors will be accepted as all or part of their shares.

How can Individuals or Prospective Sponsors Obtain Additional Information on the Neighborhood Youth Corps?

By writing to the Neighborhood Youth Corps, U. S. Department of Labor, Washington, D. C. 20210, or inquiring at their State Employment Office.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5—Federal funds to assist local communities in birth control programs have been made available to one city and are likely to be granted to others.

The first grant was given recently to Corpus Christi, Tex., by the new Office of Economic Opportunity, which is administering the Federal Government's antipoverty program.

At least two other cities—Milwaukee and Washington—are seeking Federal funds for birth control clinics as part of their organized antipoverty programs.

The decision to allow Federal participation in birth control programs was made shortly after plans were drawn up last year for a national attack on poverty.

Sargent Shriver, who directed the drafting of the Federal antipoverty legislation and now heads the Office of Economic Opportunity, said publicly last March 22 that Federal funds would be made available for such a purpose if communities sought them.

In the $295,200 community-action grant to Corpus Christi, $12,580 is earmarked for birth control information and mobile clinics.

Milwaukee's decision to seek birth control funds was made yesterday by the Social Development Commission of Greater Milwaukee, which has been drafting an antipoverty program for that city.

A somewhat similar grant is being sought by the United Planning Organization, coordinator of the antipoverty program in the District of Columbia.

THURMONT, Md., Jan. 6—Some 100 staff workers who will open the first five Youth Job Corps centers across the nation began training near here today.

Under a program at Catoctin Mountain Park, they will convert their talents to assorted assignments, from cook to director, before opening the centers early next month.

The Job Corps is part of the Office of Economic Opportunity, which is spearheading President Johnson's antipoverty program. It is designed to aid youths between the ages of 16 and 21 gain the education and job skills they now lack.

The 100 staff workers will live and train for three weeks at a camp, which will be turned into one of the first five centers.

The other camps will be at Arrowwood, N. C.; Ouachita, Ark.; Winslow, Ariz., and Tillamook, Ore.

The Job Corps hopes to enroll 40,000 youths during the first year of its inception, a spokesman said in Washington.

Sanders Names 6 More To Lead War on Poverty

Ga Cons 1-8-65

Gov. Carl Sanders appointed six new staff members for Georgia's anti-poverty program Thursday.

The $10,000-a-year regional consultants will work with the Georgia Office of Economic Opportunity.

The new consultants will serve five geographic areas of the state, with one at-large staff member. They include:

Jackson County School Superintendent Frary Elrod of Jefferson, who will serve the Coosa Valley, Georgia Mountains and Northeast Georgia Area Planning and Development commissions.

Alex S. Boyer Jr. of Sylvania, Central Savannah River, Oconee and South Central Georgia commissions, as well as for Savannah and nearby unaffiliated counties.

Jere N. Moore of Milledgeville, for the counties around Macon and immediately south of Atlanta, as wel as the Chattahoochee Commission.

President Seeks Best Plan to Aid Depressed Areas

1-22-65

By MARJORIE HUNTER

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21 — President Johnson is taking a hard look at existing economic aid programs to find the best formula for helping depressed areas throughout the nation.

A Presidential aide said today that Mr. Johnson "is working on that whole area of economic growth' and would submit his recommendations to Congress this spring.

There are indications that the Administration is leaning strongly toward the regional approach used in the Appalachia bill, which is expected to reach the Senate floor next week.

This would be in contrast to the present programs, now nearly defunct, which provide Federal aid to scattered communities.

One of these, the area redevelopment program, is due to expire next June 30 unless it is renewed by Congress. Efforts to push through an extension failed in the waning days of Congress last fall.

Area Grants Allocated

The Area Redevelopment Administration is virtually out of business. All its money for grants has been allocated. The only funds left, a few million dollars, are earmarked for loans to urban businesses and for technical assistance to communities.

The other program, accelerated public works, ran out of money nearly a year ago. A bill to pump more money into the program failed to clear Congress last fall.

Area redevelopment and accelerated public works were two of the major weapons in President Kennedy's efforts to aid economically depressed communities.

The A.R.A. has allocated approximately $400 million in loans and grants for building public facilities; loans to industries to generate new jobs; grants for retraining jobless workers, and technical assistance for studies to evaluate community needs and potentials.

About $900 million in Federal funds has been allocated under the accelerated public works program to create jobs in constructing public buildings, water systems, hospitals and other public facilities.

Find Relief Temporary

Both these Kennedy-backed programs focused largely on widely scattered communities, as opposed to entire regions.

Some critics have said that such scattered aid provides little more than temporary economic props for towns that can never expect to become thriving communities.

The wiser approach, many within the Administration now believe, is to pump money into a more limited number of communities that have potential for economic growth. Roads from the less promising communities could be built to provide better access to towns singled out for heavy doses of Federal aid, they argue.

To carry out this more selective program of aid would require a regional approach, such as is contemplated under the Appalachia bill, one Administration official has said.

Mr. Johnson is under heavy pressure in Congress to seek legislation aiding regions outside the 10-state Appalachia region.

Johnson Opposes Move

Seeking to obtain a commitment for such regional aid from the President, members of Congress from Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan have proposed adding an amendment to the Appalachia bill to create an Upper Great Lakes development authority.

The White House is strongly resisting this move. The President wants the Appalachia bill "to go through unencumbered," Senator Jennings Randolph, Democrat of West Virginia said today.

That was the word from a Presidential aide who telephoned Mr. Randolph today just as two days of hearings on the Appalachia bill were ending.

"The President says Appalachia is top priority," Mr. Randolph said.

The Senator said he expected the $1,077,000,000 Appalachia development measure to clear the Senate Public Works Committee, of which he is a member, next week and go to the floor for quick action.

Testifying today in support of the bill were four Governors of Appalachian states—William W. Scranton of Pennsylvania, Hulett C. Smith of West Virginia, Carl E. Sanders of Georgia and Edward T. Breathitt of Kentucky.

Shriver Aide Is Named

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21 (AP) —Dr. Joseph A. Kershaw, provost of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass., was named today to take charge of measuring the effectiveness of the antipoverty program.

Sargent Shriver, who heads the Office of Economic Opportunity, said that Mr. Kershaw would be an assistant director in charge of the research plans and evaluation staff.

JOB CORPS RECEIVES 50,000 APPLICATIONS

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26 (AP)—Otis Singletary, director of the Job Corps, said today that 50,000 applications for training had been received in less than a month of recruiting.

He said the flood of applications, still pouring in, refuted critics who had said youths would not be interested in living in camps to work and train for jobs.

Mr. Singletary spoke to a Plans for Progress conference sponsored by the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity and a citizens advisory council. The Plans for Progress program is a joint undertaking by the committee and several hundred major companies aimed at eliminating job discrimination.

Mr. Singletary asked the 500 business representatives to work directly with the Job Corps to find employment opportunities for the youths when they complete the training.

In an interview, he said he expected applications to reach 100,000. The Job Corps expects to be able to handle 40,000 in the first year.

Many of those screened out will be referred to other programs, such as the Neighborhood Youth Corps and community-action programs, which are also part of President Johnson's antipoverty campaign.

The Job Corps is for unemployed, out-of-school youths who need basic education as well as job training.

Southwest's Poor Tell of Problems

By GLADWIN HILL

Special to The New York Times

TUCSON, Ariz., Jan. 26—Tourists and magazine readers know the Southwest as a land of bright sunshine, breath-taking scenery and a wealth of natural resources feeding an endless boom in everything from oil to agriculture and real estate.

For the last two days here, however, regional spokesmen in many fields have been examining the Southwest's hidden face: the face of poverty.

In many vital respects, the consensus was tonight, the Southwest is another Appalachia.

The five states of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado and California have some 30 million inhabitants. These include two-thirds of the nation's six million Spanish-speaking people, about 2.5 million Negroes, and nearly 200,000 Indians.

Representatives of these and other groups met in Tucson to tell their troubles at a conference aimed at gearing the Administration's antipoverty program to regional needs.

Humphrey and Shriver Attend

Among 500 participants forming the sounding board were Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey and Sargent Shriver, director of the Peace Corps and of the new Office of Economic Opportunity, the main antipoverty agency.

The witnesses were blunt in delineating the dimensions of the poverty problem.

"Some big agricultural operators have caused an immense amount of human suffering by paying far less than a living wage," one man said. "These groups of willful men oppose labor unions because their minds are in the 18th century. The economic philosophy of many of our citizens is thoroughly primitive."

The speaker was neither a labor leader nor a disgruntled worker, but the region's foremost churchman in the humanitarian field: Archbishop Robert E. Lucey of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of San Antonio, Tex.

A fellow citizen of San Antonio a few minutes later described another aspect of the situation. She was a slender, soft-voiced Negro girl, Gwendolyn Terrell, 17 years old. The oldest of five children born in Aberdeen, Miss., she went to live with grandparents in San Antonio while her mother moved from city to city doing housework.

'Wanted to Be Somebody'

"I'm trying to work my way through St. Phillip's College," she told a panel of poverty-program officials. "I would like to be a teacher. I work from 4 in the afternoon to 10 at night as a cook's helper. I get paid $43 every two weeks.

"All my life I've wanted to be somebody—so my children wouldn't have to live like I do."

The conference was sponsored by some 50 national labor, religious and welfare organizations. The co-chairmen were James Patton, president of the National Farmers Union; Walter Reuther, president of the United Automobile Workers; and the Rev. James Vizzard S.J., an officer of the national Council on Agricultural Life and Labor. Federal Agencies contributed $39,000, most of it going toward the attendance of individuals who could speak with first-hand knowledge of poverty.

These ranged from Havasupai Indians who live deep in the Grand Canyon to a San Joaquin Valley mother, a farm worker for 22 years, who is worried about her 16-year-old dropout son and the "second-class citizenship" to which farm work consigned them.

The woman, Mrs. Violet Rotan of Plainview, Calif., said she usually made $25 a week picking fruit. Slender and intense, she touched off sympathetic laughter when a California official asked if tomato-picking classified as "stoop labor."

"Well," she said, "tomatoes don't grow on trees."

Growers Criticized

"The poverty of farm workers was created by the big growers of this country," she went on. "But the legislatures have done more than anyone else to keep us there by making us second-class citizens. Your hour and wage laws read 'farm workers excepted.' Unemployment insurance: 'farm workers excepted.' All your labor laws, the right to organize, collective bargaining, the right to have a voice—'farm workers excepted.' Health and welfare laws exclude most farm workers."

A Mexican-American drug salesman from Houston, Roy Elizonda, attested that Southwestern poverty was not confined to rural areas. Although Houston is known as the home of the nation's new Manned Spaceflight Center, he said, 300,000 citizens are in the poverty income bracket.

He said governmental agencies were "two-faced" about poverty, discussing benefits yet themselves fostering substandard wages. He said the new Post Office cafeteria in Houston, operated under a Government concession, paid workers as little as $32 a week, and that a common wage in state schools and hospitals was $185 a month.

Archbishop Lucey said that the Texas Highway Department paid common laborers as little as $1.25 an hour.

"I defy any man to rear a family decently in the United States on $1.25 an hour," he said.

The chairman of the White River Apache Indian tribe, Laster Oliver, said that despite some economic development on the Apache reservation in northeastern Arizona, inferences that they were "well off" were not correct. About half the 1,000 employable men are jobless, he said, because "they don't have specific skills." As a consequence, $500,000 a year welfare payments are made to this tribe.

"I didn't come here for the purpose of seeking a handout," he said. "If this conference can produce ways and means to help the Indians help themselves we'll be much happier than with temporary assistance."

The Havasupai Indians live in a scenic gorge 2,000 feet below the south rim of Grand Canyon. In the lobby of Tucson's Music Center this morning their chief, Stanley Manakaja, informally outlined their poverty problem.

There are 250 in the tribe, and its total annual income is $26,000 a year, derived mostly from packing tourists down into the canyon. Eighty-six per cent of their "labor force" of 35 men and nine women lacks regular work.

Neatly dressed in slacks and a blue zippered jacket, Mr. Manakaja conceded ruefully that he would feel more able to cope with the situation if he himself had not been a dropout after four years of high school at the Indian School at Phoenix.

Tourism the Main Resource

"Our main resource is the tourist business," he said.

"We would like to develop it through building better facilities for visitors, and advertising, which could be financed with tribal funds. If we could get a loan for farm equipment, we could grow alfalfa to feed our horses and save a lot of money."

Vice President Humphrey told the conference last night, referring to the circumstances being reported:

"we cannot permit this to continue in the Southwest. You will have to be the Paul Reveres in the fight against these conditions. Tell people the war is on—that it doesn't have to be fought just in Appalachia or Pennsylvania."

Mr. Shriver hailed the conference's regional approach to poverty as a potential turning point in national attitudes.

"Alleviating poverty has now become fashionable," he remarked. "But a lot of people still want to put plenty of difference between themselves and poverty. To most people there's a dichotomy between 'we, the Americans,' and 'they, the poor.'

SENATE APPROVES $1.1 BILLION IN AID FOR APPALACHIA

Passage, 62-22, Is Victory for Johnson — He Hopes for Swift House Action

NEW YORK MAY BENEFIT

Kennedy, in First Speech on Floor, Wins Move to Study the Inclusion of State

By MARJORIE HUNTER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1 — The Senate passed the Administration's $1.1 billion Appalachia bill today after opening the way for possible inclusion of New York State in the program.

The vote was 62 to 22. It was a major victory for President Johnson, who had placed the measure at the top of his priority list this year.

The bill now goes to the House, which failed to act last year on a similar program of economic aid for the depressed 11-state region known as Appalachia.

President Johnson hailed the Senate action and said he was hopeful of prompt action in the House. The legislation, he said, would benefit not only Appalachia but "the entire nation."

Administration leaders successfully fought off strong efforts to use the Appalachia bill as a vehicle for establishment of other regional development programs in New England, the Ozarks, the Great Plains and the Upper Great Lakes area.

Plans Other Programs

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield said he had been assured by President Johnson that other economically depressed regions would not be forgotten.

The President plans to recommend regional development programs under the Area Redevelopment Administration program to the Congress in the next [illegible] Mr. Mansfield reported.

The move to expand Appalachia to include 13 counties was made by Robert F. Kennedy, of New York, who made his maiden speech on the floor.

period.

He offered an amendment, adopted by voice vote, to allow the inclusion of the New York counties subject to approval of the Appalachian Regional Commission and the Governor of New York.

Would Rule on Eligibility

The commission would determine whether the 13 New York counties, the so-called Southern tier, share the social and economic characteristics of counties already in the Appalachia program. If the criteria were met, the commission would ask New York to join the program.

Senator Kennedy accused Governor Rockefeller of being "short-sighted" in failing to place his state under the program.

New York was invited to participate in the conference of Appalachian Governors, which met in 1960 and subsequently devised a regional program leading to the legislation now before Congress.

Senator Kennedy pointed out that New York and several other states had declined to take part in the conference. Since then, Ohio and South Carolina have reversed their earlier stands and become a part of Appalachia. The program is based on voluntary state participation.

Conceding that it would still be impossible for New York to become a part of Appalachia unless Governor Rockefeller agrees, Senator Kennedy said, "The door should be kept open."

Terming the Rockefeller decison a "grievous error," Senator Kennedy said he hoped "the Governor would reconsider his short-sighted position in failing to help the counties develop their lagging economies."

The 13 New York counties are geographically part of the Appalachian mountain chain and are largely poor, Senator Kennedy said. More than 23,000 persons, about 12 per cent of the population of those counties, have incomes of under $2,000 a year, he said.

Supported by Javits

Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, backed the Kennedy proposal but insisted that Governor Rockefeller be allowed to participate in the commission study on the possible inclusion of the New York counties. Senator Kennedy agreed to this, and the amendment then passed by voice vote.

The 13 New York counties are Allegany, Broome, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Chenango, Chemung, Cortland, Delaware, Otsego, Schuyler, Steuben, Tioga and Tompkins.

In a statement released later, Senator Kennedy decribed some cities within the 13 counties as "relatively prosperous." He mentioned Elmira, Binghamton and Jamestown.

It is necessary to include such cities in a regional plan, however, because "they are the base on which the region can build its development," he said.

If Broome County, where Binghamton is situated, were omitted from the regional plan, "Federal assistance for roads for western counties [Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Allegany and Steuben] would have to stop at the Broome County line," Senator Kennedy said.

The New York counties would join 355 other counties in the program, which covers all of West Virginia and parts of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland, Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama.

The measure cleared today is considered the first installment of an economic aid program that might eventually bestow as much as $2 billion upon the region.

Appalachia, covering 165,000 square miles, is largely a mountain region of narrow valleys and twisted spurs. It is populated by more than 15 million persons.

Of the $1,092,400,000 authorized under the bill, $840 million would be used to construct 2,350 miles of highways and 1,000 miles of local access roads. The Federal Government would pay 70 per cent of the cost; the states and localities the remainder.

The only real threat to the bill came in a move by Senator Roman L. Hruska, Republican of Nebraska, to eliminate a $17 million program of soil improvement and erosion control.

Such a program, he said, would lead to increased cattle production in the Appalachia region at a time when the beef industry in the Great Plains states was already suffering.

The Hruska amendment was defeated, 56 to 28, after an emotional plea by the bill's floor manager, Senator Jennings Randolph, Democrat of West Virginia.

The bill would also authorize $90 million in grants to help states qualify for existing Federal-aid programs requiring local matching funds.

Another large sum, $36.5 million, would be used for reclamation of land ravaged by strip mining, the principal industry in much of the region. Government officials have estimated that there are millions of acres of abandoned strip-mining land in Appalachia.

The bill would also earmark $41 million for hospital construction, $28 million for hospital maintenance, $16 million for construction of vocational education schools, $5 million for studies of water resources, $5 million for development of timber resources, $6 million for sewage treatment systems, $5.5 million for research and development, and $2.4 million for administration.

Job Training Centers for Youth Designated for 13 More Areas

Tuly T 2-3-65

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2 (AP) — Secretary of Labor W. Willar Wirtz announced today that youth opportunity centers would be established in 13 more city areas in 10 states under the antipoverty program.

The designation brings to 44 the number of cities thus far selected under a program to prepare youths between 16 and 21 for job opportunities.

A national network that will eventually include 105 centers will be administered by the United States Labor Department's Bureau of Employment Security and its affiliated state employment agencies.

The 44 cities designated thus far have a youth population of more than 2.5 million.

Four of the centers announced today will be established in New York State — at Buffalo, Rochester, Utica-Rome and Albany. The others will be in Atlanta; Baltimore; Detroit; East St. Louis, Ill.; Hartford, Conn.; Minneapolis - St. Paul; Pittsburgh; Portland, Ore., and Tampa, Fla.

Mr. Wirtz said there was a growing number of unemployed and unskilled youths in these and other cities where centers will be established.

"Many of these young people came from backgrounds of poverty and lack the motivation necessary in a competitive society," he said. "These centers will provide an open door to a new world of opportunity for those most in need," he added.

Youths will be referred to the centers by local school systems, Selective Service boards, community agencies and other groups that work with young people. The centers will be staffed by specially trained personnel, many of them graduates of a youth adviser training program sponsored by the Labor Department.

Special emphasis, the department said, will be placed on increasing a youth's chances to obtain a job through enrollment in a neighborhood youth corps or job corps, referral to community agencies for remedial education or medical help, or referral to a skilled-training program.

The total population between 16 and 21 in each of the 13 areas and the number of personnel to staff the centers is as follows:

Atlanta 86,638 and 46; Baltimore 142,446 and 75; Buffalo 100,654 and 53; Detroit 282,984 and 147; East St. Louis 36,862 and 19; Hartford 40,190 and 21; Minneapolis - St. Paul 120,856 and 63; Pittsburgh 185,833 and 97; Portland 64,238 and 34; Rochester 56,171 and 30; Tampa 53,409 and 28; Albany 52,200 and 28, and Utica-Rome 25,370 and 21.

APPALACHIA—PORTRAIT

Gen

By MARJORIE HUNTER

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6—Wedged in between the rich Eastern Seaboard and the prosperous Middle West, Appalachia is often pictured as one huge and faceless poverty statistic.

In truth, it is a region of great contrasts: of backyard swimming pools and surplus food handouts; of luxury mountain resorts and blackened shacks perched on mine-stripped hillsides; of sprawling college campuses and one-room schoolhouses; of great industrial cities and tiny communities far up the hollows.

It is beautiful and scarred, patient and restless, alternately described as the "nation's most stubborn rural slum" and the "figment of the bureaucratic imagination, designed to justify a vast new spending program of the Federal Government."

Common Problems

Appalachia, as any mapmaker will vouch, is indeed a figment of the imagination, but not of the Federal bureaucracy. It is a name, borrowed from the Appalachian Mountain system that threads through the region, used by a group of Governors who got together five years ago to discuss the problems they had in common.

Out of that conference, and subsequent actions on both the state and national levels, the name Appalachia was coined to describe the 11-state region that stretches diagonally for 825 miles from the northwestern tip of Pennsylvania to mid-Alabama.

It embraces all of West Virginia and parts of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland, Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama and, if Senator Robert F. Kennedy of New York has his way, it will eventually embrace the 13 Southern Tier counties of New York.

The victim of both geography and automation, Appalachia lags behind the nation as a whole in employment, education, health facilities, housing and virtually every other yardstick used to measure a healthy economy.

While it has its pockets of prosperity—such as industrially rich Pittsburg and Birmingham—it is generally conceded to be the nation's largest economically depressed area.

The reasons are many. Automation has thrown hundreds of thousands of coal miners out of work. Road building in the mountains is nearly twice as costly as in the flatlands, so the region's roads are few and poor, most of them narrow, winding ribbons. Accessible forest stands have been stripped by lumber companies. The streams run red with the sulphuric acid drainage from the open sores of abandoned mines.

Industry, unwilling to settle in a region where floods are frequent, water power is largely unharnessed and roads are inadequate, has largely ignored Appalachia, except in the big cities.

Not a New Concern

It has been said that America discovers Appalachia—or rather, the largely isolated region that now bears that name—about once in every generation.

The most recent discovery, perhaps, can be credited largely to John F. Kennedy, who saw the poverty that marks the region when he campaigned in the West Virginia Presidential primary five years ago.

Spurred on by the determination of the Appalachia Governors to develop a regional development plan, President Kennedy established the President's Appalachian Regional Commission to recommend a comprehensive program.

It is largely this program that is before Congress today—a $1.1 billion Federal program of economic pump-priming to open up the region to more industry, more tourists, more timbering.

The major share of the money—$840 million—would be used to build 2,350 miles of highways and 1,000 miles of access roads. The Federal share would be 70 per cent, the states' share, 30 per cent.

Other millions of dollars would go into flood-control studies, sewage - treatment plants, improvement of timber production and marketing, soil improvement, vocational education schools, new hospitals and restoration of mine-scarred land.

Well aware that $1.1 billion can be stretched only so far in the vast region populated by more than 15 million people, the Appalachia program would concentrate on areas that have "the greatest potential for future growth, and where the expected return on the public dollars will be greatest."

Many little towns and rural areas could never hope to become anything more than "bedroom communities," linked to the growth centers by better highways.

The program is experimental. Government officials frankly admit that they do not know whether it will succeed, for there are no past performances by which to gauge it.

Too, the program would be but part of an over-all effort to bring Appalachia out of poverty. It would be geared largely to economic needs. Other Federal efforts—such as the new nationwide anti-poverty program and the school-aid bill now before Congress—would concentrate on human needs.

Congressional critics of the program have been few, except those who contend their own regions are equally in need of help. The bill cleared the Senate last week with no trouble. The House is expected to approve it within the next month.

Appalachia, the name used to describe the 11-state region shown on the map, lags behind the rest of the country economically. It has become the prime target of the President's war on poverty with an initial $1.1 billion program aimed at improving economic climate.

CHICAGO SETS UP 'FAMILY PLANNING'

Birth Control Plan Is Begun With Grant of U.S. Funds

2-18-65

By AUSTIN C. WEHRWEIN

Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Feb. 17 — The Chicago Board of Health started a birth control program today in its own clinics, open to all, regardless of income or married status.

It was described as the most far-reaching in any large American city.

But while the "family planning" program, as it is called, has flexible standards, provision was made for careful screening to avoid "promiscuity and immorality," according to the resolution setting up the program. The major criterion is "health," but the term will be broadly interpreted.

The resolution, which will begin in April, passed the eight-member body without dissent but with one abstention, and the abstaining member said that he had lacked time to study it.

The program, which will be operating with Federal funds, will be set up in six clinics on a pilot basis. It will be free, voluntary and medically supervised. Birth control pills and other devices will be suggested and provided, but never sterilization.

Parent and Child

Dr. Eric Oldberg, the board president, told a news conference that the health of both parent and child would be considered. He said that "broadly interpreted" meant that a child should have at least a 50 per cent chance of succeeding in life.

He also stressed that the people who wanted the devices and advice "ought to come to us." He repeated a section of the resolution that said the Board of Health would avoid controversies having to do with race, religion, tax questions and relief rolls.

He conceded that most of the people who came for help would be the poor who already use the clinics. "If they rode up in a Cadillac they would get kind of a cold shoulder," he commented.

But Dr. Oldberg also emphasized that the program would not be confined to women getting relief or to dependent mothers. He avoided saying so, but these two groups are the biggest single problem, according to social workers, either because of lack of money or through ignorance. Most of the women in these groups are Negro.

Dr. Oldberg said that the screening would be done by physicians in the clinics, following board guidelines.

The screening, he said, would weed out "young people who want to become promiscuous," or those who were so for financial gain. It would also screen out those who "for selfish reasons" wanted to avoid having any children, he said. Only valid medical reasons would be accepted, he added.

The program will be financed from a five-year $1.5 million grant for material and prenatal care from the Children's Bureau of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Thus the Board of Health, which has 36 branch clinics, avoided the need to get funds from the overwhelmingly Democratic city council.

Of the 46 members in the Council, 27 are Roman Catholics. The full council is 50 members, but there are four vacancies. Keeping the matter out of the Council enabled Mayor Richard J. Daley, a Catholic, to avoid pressure for a veto.

Dr. Oldberg, a physician himself, moved carefully and kept Mayor Daley informed, and two days ago the mayor said, "when it's on the basis of a health measure for everyone, public money can be used."

ANTIPOVERTY PLAN GETS A RURAL UNIT

Poverty - OEO

Task Force to Coordinate Government Activities

2-27-65

By WILLIAM M. BLAIR

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26 — A rural task force "to help wage the nation's War on Poverty in rural communities" was announced today by the Administration.

Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman said at a news conference that the task force would be available at the outset to move quickly into rural areas where immediate help was needed to overcome poor housing and other problems of low-income farmers and rural residents.

It will provide technical assistance and professional personnel and will coordinate the activities of Federal agencies in the field, including the new Rural Community Development Service of the Department of Agriculture.

The task force was set up by Mr. Freeman and Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity. It will be under the direction of Mr. Shriver's office.

The Rural Community Development Service will absorb the present Office of Rural Areas Development.

Mr. Freeman said the service would be headed by Robert G. Lewis, who has been deputy administrator of the Federal price-support programs. Deputy administrator of the development service will be Dr. A. F. Mace, director of the old rural development office.

This new agency, Mr. Freeman said, will have the mission of carrying out President Johnson's pledge that "no service of the Federal Government stops at the city line."

The rural task force will be headed by Richard M. Hausler, who has been in the Agriculture Department since 1961 and a member of Mr. Shriver's staff since last summer.

Mr. Freeman also announced the first four loans to rural cooperatives under the anti-poverty program. The loans by the Farmers Home Administration total $105,910.

Seventy per cent of the membership of the cooperatives was made up of Negro families, Mr. Freeman said.

JOB CORPS CENTER IS OPENED IN TEXAS

3-4-65

CAMP GARY, Tex., March 3 (UPI)--An Army camp of World War II opened as a Job Corps unit today and began receiving 250 young men as part of the drive against poverty.

The trainees came by bus, car and train. All were between the ages of 16 and 21.

The first group of 70 was welcomed by Dr. Oscar Baker, who organized the Peace Corps camp at the South Central Texas military base within two months. The Government let a $500,000 contract to refurbish the camp for the youths.

Most of the first group came from Arkansas. The remainder of the 250 are expected by tomorrow.

WASHINGTON, March 3 (UPI)—The office of conomic Opportunity, which administers the antipoverty program, approved a $252,119 Community Action grant today for the Council of Southern Mountains, Berea, Ky.

The council is a private group that has worked in the depressed areas of Appalachia for years to curb poverty. The money will be used in nine states.

U.S. Halts Antipoverty Grant on Complaints That State Appointed 'Extremists'

3-5-65

By BEN A. FRANKLIN

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 4—The Office of Economic Opportunity has held up a $132,000 planning grant to Louisiana because it does not like some of Gov. John J. McKeithen's appointments under the state's antipoverty program.

Federal officials here acknowledged today that the delay had been prompted by complaints that "at least two" of the Governor's four appointees were "segregationists" or "extremists." The agency is investigating the complaints, spokesmen said. Investigators were said to have been in Baton Rouge, the state capital, today.

It was the first time that any antipoverty funds had been withheld because of a racial issue. Under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Federal agencies are prohibited from making grants or loans to state or local agencies that discriminate on the grounds of race, creed or color.

Spokesmen at the Federal agency noted that planning grants were made to state antipoverty agencies in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi after the states gave assurances that there would be no discrimination in using the funds.

"When these Louisiana complaints came along," an official said, "we instituted precautions."

The $132,000 grant, to which Louisiana was to have added about $13,000, was approved by the Federal agency last December after Governor McKeithen appointed Champ Baker as director of the Louisiana Office of Economic Opportunity at $13,000 a year.

Mr. Baker was Mr. McKeithen's central Louisiana campaign manager in the bitter, seven-way governorship primary in 1963.

Before the planning grant was disbursed, however, Mr. McKeithen appointed as assistants to Mr. Baker three men closely associated with his 1963 campaign, and "complaints started pouring in," Federal officials said. The payment was stopped.

"We have had more mail and more complaints about these Louisiana appointments than we have had from all the other states combined," one spokesman said. Many complaints were from civil rights groups.

Gus Weill, executive secretary to Mr. McKeithen, said in Baton Rouge that "the objections were principally to the appointment of Shelby M. Jackson" as Mr. Baker's principal assistant at $12,000 a year.

Mr. Jackson, a former state Superintendent of Education, was a candidate for Governor in 1963 on a states' rights platform. After his defeat in the primary, he threw his support to Mr. McKeithen.

"Mr. Jackson is an avowed segregationist," Mr. Weill said in a telephone interview. "It would be rather difficult in this state to find anyone of any note in public life who is not an avowed segregationist, including the Governor."

The Federal agency also received objections to the appointment of John Harding, an Alexandria radio commentator of conservative views, to a $9,000-a-year Louisiana antipoverty post.

The Governor has shown no disposition to back down on his appointments, Louisiana officials said, and officials here said the situation was "a probable stalemate." They said the funds would probably not be released.

The rigidity of positions on both sides reportedly stems, in part, from the hostility of the Governor and Mr. Jackson to former Representative Gillis W. Long, who ran third in the 1963 governorship primary. Mr. Long, who is considered a moderate, is now the assistant director of the Federal agency in charge of Congressional relations.

Governor Out of Capital

Special to The New York Times

BATON ROUGE, March 4—Governor McKeithen was reported out of Baton Rouge today and unavailable for comment.

Mr. McKeithen has said that his appointees, including Mr. Jackson, know "there can be no discrimination in the poverty program, and are prepared to abide by this."

BIRTH CLINIC GETS U.S. POVERTY FUND

Corpus Christi Center to Furnish Contraceptives

3-7-65

Special to The New York Times

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex., March 6—The South Texas Planned Parenthood Center here made plans this week to use Federal funds for the purchase and distribution of contraceptive devices.

The funds are part of a $295,000 grant from the United States Office of Economic Opportunity to Corpus Christi's Community Action Committee, the local group directing the city's antipoverty program.

The grant for the planned parenthood group was for $8,500, of which $2,200 is "for those medical supplies that patients cannot afford."

Mrs. J. G. Bryson, past president of the center and now chairman of the planned parenthood program within the local "economic opportunity campaign" made the grant request.

She said she had used the words "medical supplies" in asking for funds for contraceptive devices.

"Everyone concerned knew what I was asking for," she said. "When the grant was approved the funds were there for medical supplies and the Government used the same words I did."

Although the grant is for the year beginning Feb. 1, Mrs. Bryson said the funds are not expected in Corpus Christi until next week.

Mrs. Bryson said Corpus Christi was the first city to receive funds for birth control work as part of the antipoverty program, and the grant was the first, under any program, to include funds designated for contraceptive supplies.

Other cities, including Milwaukee, have requests pending for funds to be used for planned parenthood programs. And two years ago the District of Columbia Planned Parenthood Center got a $25,000 grant. But the grant did not specify the funds were to be used for contraceptive aids.

The Planned Parenthood Center was the only privately supported organization invited into Corpus Christi's poverty program by the public agencies involved. The agencies include the city and county governments, the public library, city-county welfare departments, and the public schools.

Although nearly 40 per cent of the 190,000 people in Corpus Christi are of Latin-American descent and largely Roman Catholic, the city and county governments encouraged the planned parenthood campaign, which will be waged mostly in the Latin-American areas.

Although Corpus Christi is the see of the South Texas diocese of the Catholic Church, the church has remained publicly silent on the birth control program, choosing neither to protest nor support it.

Only married couples are eligible for the program.

Appalachian Governors Meet To Set Aid Program in Motion

WASHINGTON, April 19 (AP) — Governors of nine Appalachian states and representatives of two others met today to set in motion the $1 billion program of economic aid that grew out of a campaign promise by John F. Kennedy in 1960.

The Federal - state program is aimed at providing highways, water and land - resources development, vocational schools, and health clinics, among other things, for an area stretching from Alabama to Pennsylvania. The purpose is to improve the mountain region's economy.

Gov. Carl E. Sanders of Georgia was elected co - chairman of the Appalachian Regional Commission, to serve with the Federal co - chairman, John L. Sweeney.

Representatives of the governors will meet on a regular basis to work on the details of the program. Harry T. Boswell, former chairman of the Maryland Economic Development Commission, was elected head of this group. He and Mr. Sweeney form a two-man committee in charge of personnel and dispersements.

After a luncheon meeting with the governors, Secretary of Commerce John T. Connor announced the appointment of Under Secretary Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. as supervisor of the Appalachian activities assigned to the Secretary of Commerce.

The Activities

These activities include assistance in the construction of an Appalachian highway system; allocation of funds for increasing the Federal contribution to certain projects; programs to make grants to local development districts for administrative expenses and to other organizations for investigations and research on economic development.

Mr. Roosevelt headed a Presidential commission that studied the 11-state area's economic needs.

The $1.1 billion authorized by Congress for the program does not reflect the actual annual cost, since some programs are spread over several years and states will participate to a degree in financing some of the programs. For instance, some $840 million is authorized for a five-year highway program.

This is expected to be the first phase of the program, since it has been characterized as the region's most urgent need. Highway representatives from the 11 states are scheduled to meet Wednesday with officials of the Bureau of Public Roads to discuss a tentative highway plan.

The states are expected to put up 30 per cent of the money for highways.

Governors attending today's meeting were George C. Wallace of Alabama, Mr. Sanders of Georgia, Edward T. Breathitt Jr. of Kentucky, J. Millard Tawes of Maryland, Dan K. Moore of North Carolina, James A. Rhodes of Ohio, William W. Scranton of Pennsylvania, Albertis S. Harrison of Virginia and Hulett C. Smith of West Virginia. Mr. Scranton and Mr. Rhodes are Republicans, and the rest Democrats.

The two governors who did not attend are Frank G. Clement of Tennessee and Donald S. Russell of South Carolina. It was reported that Mr. Clement was unable to be present because of a strike situation.

Mr. Russell canceled his trip to attend memorial services for Senator Olin D. Johnston, Democrat of South Carolina, who died yesterday.

YOUNG AND OLD DRAWN TO VISTA

Poverty War Opposed

First Volunteers in Fight on Poverty Begin Training

3-7-65

By MARJORIE HUNTER

Special to The New York Times

CHAPEL HILL, N. C.—In Florida a retired school superintendent and his wife locked up their house trailer. In California a pretty coed left college. In North Carolina an 81-year-old woman stored her furniture and sold her car.

They all had one goal: To work long hours, at poor pay, in the rural and urban slums of America.

These are the VISTA Volunteers, the old and the young who have put aside middle-class comforts to give Appalachia and Harlem the kind of help that Peace Corpsmen have given Afghanistan and Kenya.

VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America) is the Federal Government's domestic version of the Peace Corps. Within a year, 5,000 VISTA Volunteers will be working in the nation's areas of hard-core poverty.

The first 13 of them came here this month, to a rustic church camp (prophetically named Camp New Hope years ago) to learn about poverty and how to deal with it.

Living in cabins, listening to lectures and taking part in discussions from dawn until long after dusk, they spent two weeks learning in theory about the poverty they had never known.

Put Theory to Work

Now, working in rural and urban slums of North Carolina, they are putting their theory into practice.

The training, both at camp and in the field, is being conducted by officials of the North Carolina Fund, an antipoverty program established nearly three years ago.

It was chosen to train the first VISTA Volunteers because of its experience in training antipoverty workers of its own.

Next month, their six weeks of study and field work completed, the first VISTA Volunteers will report to their assignments in migrant labor camps of California, the slums of Hartford, the mountain hollows of Eastern Kentucky.

Their pay: $50 a month and living expenses.

As pioneers, their jobs will be difficult, for they will be part of a new American revolution that threatens to upset the status quo in many communities.

James Hearn, director of a Federally financed $700,000 antipoverty program in New Bern, sounded a quiet warning to the Volunteers before they left camp:

"Remember, you're another string from Washington, and a lot of people in these places you'll be working don't like Washington."

Warning Against Impatience

Mr. Hearn also cautioned against impatience:

"Every place you go you'll wonder and fret about why people running the show don't do it as quickly as you would. Maybe they aren't as excited about it as you. Maybe they have their doubts about changing their community. You will have to use every bit of tact at your command."

The Volunteers are putting that advice to a test now, as they practice field work in New Bern and Winston-Salem.

In coastal New Bern, Volunteers are working on rural sanitation projects, helping school-attendance counselors, recruiting students for pre-school programs and adult education classes.

In Winston-Salem, halfway across the state, other Volunteers are counseling students at a special school for poor achievers, working as aides in day-care centers, recruiting students for adult literacy classes, visiting homes of the poor who are about to be relocated because of urban renewal.

Miss Elizabeth Myers Brown, 81, at a class for volunteers at Camp New Hope, N. C.

Why are they doing it? Why did they volunteer to live and work among the poor?

James D. and Cynthia Mawhinney spent years stationed at Army posts around the world. He is a retired colonel, 66 years old.

The Mawhinneys are selling their house in Alexandria, Va., and putting their furniture in storage. Their three married children think it's a fine idea.

"Being retired can get awful tiresome," Mrs. Mawhinney said. "You play a better game of golf and improve your bridge score. But it's deadening."

Locked the Trailer

Another retired couple, J. E. and Dorothy Holmes, had been living in a trailer along a canal at Tavares, Fla. They locked up the trailer, sent their car to relatives in Michigan and reported for training.

Mr. Holmes, who is 66, retired seven years ago as Superintendent of Schools in Spring Lake, Mich. His wife, 63, had done Red Cross work, helped establish a school for the retarded and served on the board of a home for the aged.

Next month, the Holmeses will report to a migrant labor camp in the San Joaquin Valley of California to teach and counsel migrant families.

Miss Elizabeth Myers Brown, 81, spent 18 years as clinical psychologist at a school for the mentally retarded near Kinston, N. C. She retired six years ago, traveled to Europe and Japan, then did some historical research on the school where she had worked and still lived.

A spry little woman with snow white hair, Miss Brown wears a hearing aid at times but has no trouble reading without glasses.

"If my hair is glossy and my skin is shiny and my fingernails are long and my feet don't hurt, then I figure I'm in good condition," she said, smiling.

Miss Brown will be assigned to the Clover Bottom State Hospital and School for the mentally retarded near Nashville.

"I may not have a lot to give," she said, "but I've got a lot to enjoy."

Miss Alta Bee Wolcott, 73, spent 27 years as physical education instructor at the University of Wisconsin in Milwaukee, then ran an art gallery in Ellison Bay.

George H. Cottell of Fall River, Mass., had retired twice—first after 33 years as business manager of Local 437 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; then after five years as executive director of the Fall River Housing Authority and Urban Renewal Agency.

Wants to See America

Now 70 and a widower, Mr. Cottell decided: "I didn't want to hang around and do nothing. I've been too busy all by life to pick up a hobby."

He will be assigned to work in urban renewal areas in Hartford.

John C. Henry, a retired Navy commander from Cleveland, decided that he didn't want to stay retired, either. He is 50 and still single.

"I'm tired of far-away places with strange sounding names," he said. "It's time to see America."

He, too, will serve in Hartford, helping to relocate families from six impoverished neighborhoods.

There are the young, too.

Betty Burnett, 21, the daughter of a Merced, Calif., school teacher, was a junior at San Francisco State College. Richard Guske, 20, the son of a Eugene, Ore., real estate broker, was a junior at Antioch College in Ohio.

The two will be working together in the hollows of Eastern Kentucky. Both plan to finish college someday.

Jacqueline Steingold, 22, graduated last year from Wayne State University in Detroit and planned to do graduate work this year. Instead, she volunteered for VISTA.

"I'm at the stage of life it's not serious for me to give up a year of my life," she said. "Then I'll know what I want to do. I'm a bit of a do-gooder, I guess."

Clarence Willingham, 24, the only Negro in the first class of Volunteers, wanted to join the Peace Corps after graduating from Monroe Technical Institute in his native Georgia.

The Peace Corps turned him down. He had lost both legs, below the knees, in a fire when he was a child.

Bright and cheerful, a straight A student in mathematics and science, he was accepted by VISTA and will be assigned to the Clover Bottom School.

Doris Jane Boyer, 27, of Edmond, Okla., majored in chemistry and psychology at Oklahoma Central State College. She taught gifted students in Oklahoma City and juvenile delinquents at a special school in Tennessee. She, too, has been assigned to Clover Bottom.

Magazine Piece Details Frauds Against Poor

Carolina Harbor News 9/3/65

For a long time it has been clear that many stores in slum sections of cities that promised "easy credit terms" and "36 months to pay" were not so much offering a convenience to low-income groups as mulching them.

This is pointed up in a recent piece in The New Republic which observes that lawyers hired by the local anti-poverty war to work in the slums as advocates of the poor are uncovering a wide range of consumer fraud cases and razor-sharp business practices.

Here are some examples of the sort of cases that routinely come across their desks, the magazine says: "One slum dweller is being sued for $356.40 on a 19-inch portable television set that retails in many other parts of the city for $115.94. Another paid $325 plus $96 in carrying charges for a similar TV. A third client paid $400 plus $128 in carrying charges for a set that sells in many stores for less than $200. The anti-poverty lawyers are fighting these transactions in court, claiming the sales contracts are unconscionable."

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

FEDERAL "ANTI-POVERTY" PROGRAMS

Present and Pending

THE FEDERAL PROGRAM for the rehabilitation of communities and their citizens is to be based on four statutes:

1. The Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 (Public Law 88-452). Purpose: To provide youth programs and community action programs — education, training, and work for young people, and help for urban and rural communities in mobilizing their own resources to combat poverty.
2. The Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962 (Public Law 87-415; amended by Public Law 88-214). Purpose: The training and retraining of unemployed workers who have the ability to learn skills needed in their labor market area.
3. The Area Redevelopment Act of 1961 (Public Law 87-27). Purpose: To assist localities in establishing new industries and in expanding existing industries through long-term, low interest loans.
4. The pending Appalachia bill. This legislation was not passed by the 88th Congress, but the Administration is assigning high priority to the Appalachia redevelopment program in the 89th Congress. Passage of an Appalachia bill would provide a special program for the economic rehabilitation of a depressed area comprising parts of eleven states, stretching from Pennsylvania to Alabama.

THESE SPECIFICALLY ANTI-POVERTY MEASURES will be supplemented, of course, by existing Federal, State, and Local programs; for example, such Federal programs as those of the Departments of Agriculture, Labor, and Health, Education, and Welfare.

THE ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT

JOINT FEDERAL-STATE-LOCAL PROGRAMS:

* The Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO), an Executive agency headed by a director reporting directly to the President, will have overall administrative responsibility for programs under the Economic Opportunity Act.
* However, participation at the local level in planning and operating the projects will be encouraged in all programs, required in most.
* Each governor will have 30 days in which to veto proposed Youth Programs and Community Action Programs in his state.
* Governor, by not acting within 30 days, may permit a project to begin.
* Governor may expedite project by giving his approval before the 30 day period is over.

YOUTH PROGRAMS:

 The Job Corps:

* Will enroll, in 1965 and 1966, up to 140,000 young men and women, ages 16 to 22, for up to two years service in conservation camps and training centers.
* Camps and centers will emphasize basic education, skill training, and work experience.
* Job Corpsmen will be recruited through U. S. Employment Service offices, schools, churches, settlement houses, public and private welfare agencies, boys' clubs, selective service boards.
* Corpsmen will receive room, board, and travel allowances while in the Corps.
* Upon completion of their terms, they will be paid $50 for each month of satisfactory service.
* OR, Corpsmen may contribute to their dependents $25 per month (to which Government will add another $25), and receive $25 for each month of satisfactory service when separated from the Job Corps.

 The Neighborhood Youth Corps:

* A work training program for unemployed young men and women, ages 16 to 22, in public service projects such as at parks, playgrounds, hospitals, and libraries.
* Examples of work training include nurses', librarians', and teachers' aides; nursery school and playground attendants; hospital orderlies; assistant dietitians; mechanics' helpers; landscape assistants.

* Projects will be developed by state and local governments, and by private, non-profit service and welfare organizations.
* The agency developing the work training project will be responsible for recruiting the young people to work in it.
* Up to 200,000 young people will be enrolled in NYC each year.
* Enrollees will work and live in their own communities.
* They will be paid wages based on local rates for beginners in similar work.
* They will be encouraged to continue or resume their schooling.

 Work Study Programs:

* Will operate through, and be administered by, colleges and universities.
* Will provide on-campus and off-campus part-time work for deserving students selected by participating schools.

URBAN AND RURAL COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS:

* Locally planned, locally administered direct attacks on any poverty-promoting community problem.
* Will require comprehensive community action plans, developed by local community action organizations which may be formed by government agencies, private non-profit agencies such as volunteer or civic groups, or a combination of public and private agencies.
* Will emphasize programs designed to produce "a permanent increase in the ability of persons to deal with their problems without further aid."
* Examples of such programs include job-training, counseling, vocational rehabilitation, remedial education, home management, health improvement, family planning.
* Federal government will bear up to 90% of the cost during the first two years, 50% thereafter.
* Communities' contributions may be in cash, facilities, and services.
* Participants in the Job Corps, Neighborhood Youth Corps, and Work Study programs will be available for work on community action projects.

OTHER ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT PROGRAMS:

 Grants and Loans to Combat Rural Poverty:

* Will aid low-income rural families and migrant workers.
* Will loan up to $2,500 to such families, payable within 15 years, for certain home and farm improvements, if they cannot obtain funds elsewhere.
* Will provide similar loans for local marketing and purchasing cooperatives.

 Voluntary Assistance Programs for Needy Children:

* Federal government will locate needy children, supply their names to persons who volunteer to give them financial help.

* No direct federal financial assistance to the children under this program.

 Adult Basic Education Programs:

* For persons with six years or less of schooling.

* Will teach adults basic reading, writing, and arithmetic, helping them to find and to keep jobs.

* Will be conducted at local level, under guidance of state Department of Education.

* Federal government will pay 90% of cost during first two years, 50% thereafter.

 Volunteers in Service to America -- VISTA:

* A "domestic Peace Corps" whose purpose will be to improve the health, education, and welfare needs of the poor in the United States and its territories.

* Will place special emphasis on aiding the mentally ill and the mentally retarded.

* Volunteers will receive allowances for living, housing, and travel expenses, and pay not to exceed $50 monthly.

THE MANPOWER DEVELOPMENT AND TRAINING ACT--MDTA

The Office of Manpower, Automation and Training--OMAT:

* An agency of the Manpower Administration, U. S. Department of Labor.
* Plans and evaluates training programs; programs are administered by state employment service offices and state departments of vocational education.

MDTA training and retraining programs:

* Are conducted only for skills which are in demand within the labor market area.
* Vary in length according to the skill being taught; maximum length is 72 weeks, or 52 weeks if no basic education is included in the trainees' programs.
* Are conducted at no cost to the trainees.
* Include on-the-job training, operating through the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training with the cooperation of employers and labor unions.

To receive MDTA training:

* A person must be unemployed.
* OR, he may be working less than full time in a skill that is becoming, or will become, obsolete.
* OR, he may be working below his skill capacity, that is, a job lower than his potential skills would qualify him for, if trained.
* OR, he may be a member of a farm family with less than $1200 annual net family income.
* OR, he may be over 16 years old but not yet 22 and in need of further schooling or occupational training.

Prospective trainees qualify for MDTA programs by:

* First, visiting their local State Employment Service Office.
* Next, being interviewed, tested, and counseled by the local SES to determine interest in, and suitability and aptitude for, job training.

Persons selected for MDTA training:

* Will be assigned to a specific training course.
* Will be expected to maintain satisfactory attendance, and to make satisfactory progress, in the course being taken.
* Will be assisted in finding jobs by the State Employment Service office upon completion of their course.

Trainees are eligible for training allowances:

* If they are the head of a household, and have at least two years experience in gainful employment.

* OR, if they are between 17 and 22 and are enrolled in a specialized youth training program.
* If they are employed while in training, they may receive a reduced allowance.
* AND, if training facility is not within commuting distance of their residences, they may also receive subsistence and transportation allowances.

THE AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Area Redevelopment Administration---ARA:

* An agency of the U. S. Department of Commerce.
* Makes long-term, low interest loans to properly organized community groups establishing or expanding industry.
* Makes grants to communities for up to half the cost of building public facilities needed to attract and to aid new industries. Examples are roads, railroad spurs, dams, reservoirs, waterworks, sewerage systems, navigation channels, libraries.
* Retrains jobless workers and provides them with subsistence allowances during their training.
* Gives technical assistance to communities, helping them to survey, catalog, and assess the potential of their resources.
* Authority expires June 30, 1965, unless renewed by Congress.

To qualify for ARA aid:

* An URBAN area must have high unemployment--a current unemployment rate of 6% or more; OR, an annual average unemployment rate of 50% greater than the national average rate in three of the preceding four years; OR, 75% greater than the national average in two of the previous three years; OR, double the national rate during the preceding calendar year.
* A RURAL area must be one of low income and/or high unemployment--an area where farm-family incomes average $1170 or less annually; OR, where all family incomes average $1500 or less annually; OR, an area with a labor force of 15,000 or fewer where there has been persistent unemployment; OR, an area of "low production farming."

To receive ARA aid:

* A community must have been designated by the ARA as a "redevelopment area"--i.e., as meeting the above qualifications.
* A community must organize a local redevelopment committee, broadly representative of local groups such as commerce, industry, agriculture, labor, education, local government, and ethnic groups.
* An Overall Economic Development Program--OEDP--must be drawn up, and submitted to ARA for approval and financial aid.

The OEDP:

* Describes the community redevelopment organization.
* Details and assesses the community's existing resources and facilities.
* Outlines the plans for improving the community's economy.

* Explains why ARA aid is necessary; that is, why the community cannot accomplish the proposed plan without ARA assistance.

ARA Loans:

* Can finance as much as 65% of the total cost of an ARA approved project.
* Require, in addition, a minimum of 10% investment from public sources and a minimum of 5% from private sources.
* Commercial and industrial loans carry an annual interest rate of 4% and can run as long as 25 years.
* Public facility improvement loans are made at 3½% annually for up to 40 years.

ARA job retraining programs:

* Are intended to attract new industry to labor surplus areas by providing a supply of skilled workers.
* Have included training for semiskilled factory workers, office workers, nurses aides, farm and construction equipment operators and maintenance men.
* Are similar to programs offered under the Manpower Development and Training Act (see page 6); maximum training period is 16 weeks.

SOME OTHER FEDERAL PROGRAMS

Rural Areas Development Programs -- RAD:

* Administered by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.
* Programs are "concerned with the total economic development of the rural community"; for example, industrial development, community facilities, conservation, and recreation.
* Programs are designed and carried out at the local level by county RAD committees composed of local businessmen and farmers, assisted by the local county agent and the Department of Agriculture.

THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF PRIVATE AGENCIES AND CITIZENS

For political as well as practical reasons, provisions requiring LOCAL INITIATIVE, LOCAL ACTION, AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION of "anti-poverty" programs were written into the laws.

This creates many community-service opportunities for private agencies in the welfare, health, housing, education, and employment fields, as well as for public-spirited private citizens. The first responsibility of every private agency and every concerned citizen is to be a source of information and publicity for the anti-poverty campaign. Agencies and individuals should learn about the various programs, should function as ready sources of general information to anyone who might inquire about "the war on poverty," should study all programs carefully to determine which ones are applicable to their own communities, and should know whom to approach for complete information. In short, they ought to serve as go-betweens for persons or groups who might give help and persons or groups who might need such help.

Civic, fraternal, and even religious organizations, if they are non-partisan and (in most cases)non-profit, are eligible for initiating and participating in most anti-poverty projects. The Office of Economic Opportunity, for example, requires only that the agency be "broadly representative of the interests of the community" and that the project be non-discriminatory as to race, color and religion.

The Economic Opportunity Act invites private agencies to participate in Community Action programs. Such agencies, either singly or in cooperation with other interested persons and groups, can receive federal help in developing remedial education classes, after-school tutoring and study centers, programs for pre-school children, rehabilitation programs for the mentally and physically handicapped, and even in setting up new industries to provide jobs for the unemployed. Private agencies can be especially helpful in assembling the income, unemployment, education level, drop-out, migrant family, health, housing, and other community data which must be gathered before any anti-poverty program can be developed or approved.

The county Rural Areas Development committees are good examples of local initiative groups. Any existing local private agency, or any group of community-minded citizens, with the cooperation of the County Agent, can establish a local RAD committee where none exists. (Most counties already have them.) Local private agencies should try to work with existing RAD committees in the interests of those whom the agencies represent.

Area Redevelopment Administration programs require local initiative and local community action. Any private, non-partisan organization is potentially the agency through which the community redevelopment program can be initiated and carried out. If the program sets up a new industry, or expands an existing one, these may be operated for private profit. Although there are no provisions in the Act requiring equal employment opportunities in industries set up with ARA funds, such industries will be covered by Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, either initially or eventually, if they employ as many as 25 persons.

The concerned individual can be invaluable, not only in his own efforts, but in stimulating group action. The private citizen, living in a community where there is not now in existence either a private or public agency qualified to receive anti-poverty aid which may be provided to communities, can initiate an effort to have the necessary agency organized. He can approach local government officials and inform them of the aid available under anti-poverty programs, and work with them to secure such benefits for the community.

Working through existing agencies--and every community has some--he can seek the cooperation of school officials, parent-teacher associations, and religious, fraternal, civic, and social organizations, in order to secure the involvement of the total citizenry in planning and accomplishing community improvement projects. Together with other public-spirited individuals, the private citizens can secure appointments, at the policy-making and administrative levels, of qualified persons who represent all elements of the community. Further, he can monitor the actual performance of federally aided community improvement projects, seeking to assure that all elements of his community are properly benefited.

PACKING too many people into an urban area increases the cost of providing still another essential of everyday living: electric power. Even more serious, such concentrations of people may make absolutely reliable electric service more and more difficult to maintain. I doubt if it was a mere coincidence, for example, that New York City needed 10 hours to restore electricity after the recent Northeast power failure while smaller communities were able to turn on their lights in a much shorter time. Growth is desirable up to a point; then the advantage of size diminishes and the multiplication of complexity multiplies the headaches. And by 1980 we can expect at least a 300 per cent increase in the nation's electrical energy needs. Most of this will flow into urban areas. The present difficulties of maintaining absolutely reliable service to such concentrations of people and industry, and holding down costs, will thus be magnified.

As chairman of T.V.A. and the Atomic Energy Commission, and in my present work in Asia and Latin America, I have become familiar with the problems of producing and distributing electricity on a large scale. Indeed, it was T.V.A. a generation ago that pioneered the concept that the greater the use of electricity the lower the cost per kilowatt hour. This is still generally true. But for great cities the exact contrary is coming to pass. To distribute electricity in a large, densely populated area such as New York is more costly than in smaller urban markets. Huge generating power plants produce ever lower generating costs; but to bring this power to the consumer in massive concentrations of population grows more and more expensive. Consequently, the price of this essential of modern life probably will go up in the great cities as population growth continues.

Fecund Future

At the estimated 1965 U.S. birth rate of 19.5 per 1,000 of population, a woman who reaches the age of 45 will have an average of three children. To achieve a stationary population, in which parents only replace themselves, the average number of children would have to drop to about 2.1. If childbearing gradually declined to this level by 1980 —a highly unlikely possibility — the U.S. population would then be about 250,000,000, and by 2020 the population would hit 300,000,000 and remain unchanged thereafter. At that point the birth rate would have declined to 14 per 1,000 and the death rate would have climbed to 14 per 1,000 (because a nongrowing population includes a much higher percentage of the aged).

On the other hand, if present fertility and mortality trends continue, a long-range projection by the National Academy of Sciences foresees that in about 650 years there will be one person per square foot throughout the United States, and in less than 1,500 years the weight of the U.S. population will exceed the mass of the earth — that is, 6,588,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons!

WITHOUT realizing it, we are fast approaching what may be called the population barrier beyond which lie unpredictability and, I fear, problems of unmanageable size. Consider, for example, the relationship between population growth and the poor.

The Federal Aid to Dependent Children program has doubled to more than four million cases during the last decade, while the costs have soared from about $600 million to more than $1.8 billion. Even more depressing than the numbers of families who cannot survive without welfare assistance is the phenomenon known as the "cycle of dependency."

More than 40 per cent of parents whose children receive A.D.C. funds themselves had parents who received relief checks. This cycle is sad but not surprising. Poor people tend to have more children than they want or can afford, and the children have less chance to receive the education and training they need to break the pattern. Thus, even the third generation appears on relief rolls in the U.S., the most socially mobile nation in the world. In America, reports the National Academy of Sciences in a recent study, "The Growth of U.S. Population," "the burden of unwanted children among impoverished and uneducated mothers . . . is much like that experienced by mothers in underdeveloped countries."

Since the poor cannot contribute their share of the mounting costs of education, medical care, public housing and similar necessary government enterprises, the money must be supplied by the rest of the population through taxation. But the most painful loss is not measured in dollars but in human resources. And one measure of the potential loss is the fact that one-fourth of America's children are the offspring of poor parents.

Belatedly, we are helping poor couples who need and want financial and medical help in family planning. The White House Conference on Health in November gave high priority to birth control as part of Federal efforts to halt the cycle of dependency and poverty. Tax-supported activities in 40 states, combined with such large-scale private efforts as Harvard's Center for

IN INDIA—"Many Americans regard overpopulation as a menace only to other peoples. It can't happen here, they think. But it can."

Population Studies and the $14.5 million grant by the Ford Foundation for basic research by the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center and the Population Council, herald new progress in a long-neglected field.

We tend to patronize the poor by preaching to them about birth control; though poverty-stricken parents with four, five or six children are the most publicized aspect of population growth, they are by no means the most important numerical aspect of the problem. As a matter of simple arithmetic, the four-fifths of the nation's families who earn more than the poverty-line income of $3,000 a year — and who can afford two, three or four children—produce a greater total of children than the one poor couple out of five which may have six youngsters.

In fact, the latest census information reveals that though poor families may have more children than do better-off families, the difference is much smaller than many people believe. According to the National Academy of Sciences analysis, in 1960 married women 40 to 44 years old in families with incomes below $4,000 and above $4,000 differed in the average number of children by less than one. The postwar baby boom, for example, was more pronounced among middle- and upper-income families than among the poor.

Thus, these relatively well-off families are the ones mainly responsible for our rapidly rising population curve. They and their children are the ones who will account for most of the 100 million additional Americans by the end of the century.

How many children a couple should have is a decision only they should make; a government inducement or deterrent —a tax, for example—is morally repugnant and politically impossible. We cannot penalize the poor in order to limit the size of their families while we allow more prosperous parents to have as many children as they want. The large majority of middle- and upper-class parents need no birth-control help from government, nor will they welcome outside advice on so personal a matter. Yet it is this group of families who will want to have three, four or more children for the very natural reason that they like children and can afford to suppport them. The question is, can the country support them?

Any notion that The Pill or some other scientific device is the sole and complete answer is very dubious. At a symposium on birth control not long ago, Dr. Stephen J. Plank, a professor in the Harvard School of Public Health, cautioned against "the facile assumption . . . that we may be able to contracept our way to the Great Society." Birth control, he said, is a question of motivation rather than technology alone.

THE neglected arithmetic of the population problem facing us is depressing. Look at this table showing the birth and death rates over the past quarter-century in the United States:

Year	Births	Rate (per 1,000 pop)	Deaths	Rate (per 1,000 pop)
1940	2,360,399	17.9	1,417,269	10.8
1945	2,735,456	19.5	1,401,719	10.6
1950	3,554,149	23.6	1,452,454	9.6
1955	4,047,295	24.6	1,528,717	9.3
1960	4,257,850	23.7	1,711,982	9.5
1964	4,027,490	21.0	1,798,051	9.4

Although the birth rate has been declining since the mid-50's, while the death rate has remained relatively stable, the drop in the birth rate is too little and too late to prevent an oversized population. The surge in the number of births over deaths continues (2.3 million were added to the population in 1964).

Or examine these low and high population projections prepared by the Census Bureau:

	Low	High
1970	206,000,000	211,000,000
1985	248,000,000	276,000,000
2010	322,000,000	438,000,000

The high figure would be reached if birth rates returned to the levels of the early 1950's. The low estimate — enormous as it is—is based on the possibility that the rates may decline by 1985 to the comparatively low levels of the early World War II years.

One theoretical way out of the dilemma would be to say that since America can no longer sustain complete "family freedom," some form of compulsory birth control is, regrettably, necessary. It would not be the first time in our history that government intervened to restrain individual impulse in the name of collective welfare. Yet, where children and parents are concerned, I do not believe we can yet advocate the sacrifice of one freedom for the sake of preserving another. Such a "solution" would make no sense at all, theoretically, practically or ethically.

Government policies and private programs must make plain the kind of life we all face if economically comfortable families reproduce at rates they personally can afford. With equal urgency we must make plain the dangers if poor families have children in numbers they cannot afford.

OBVIOUSLY, a stationary population—one in which the birth rate matches the death rate—is out of the question for many years to come. It is probably not feasible, nor even desirable. All we can hope to achieve is a slower rise in the size of our population rather than the present steep increase. What is needed is a far more drastic cut in the birth rate—a voluntary curtailment of the right to breed. It is needed, but I have no great conviction that it will happen.

For though scientific ingenuity may be able to solve many of the technological problems we are only beginning to understand people always change more slowly than technology. It is easier, after all, to design a new industrial process than redesign a cultural tradition. Yet that is the order of change we face if we are to preserve life's dignity and quality. Confronted by the crisis of population growth, we must, at present, appeal to private conscience for the sake of the general good.

Census + population

MEANING OF THE CHANGES IN U. S. POPULATION

1/10/66

New patterns are emerging in America's population. Growth has slowed sharply, diminishing the earlier "explosion" in numbers of people. Birth rates are plummeting. Yet there's a marriage boom. Teen-agers, young adults are increasing fast. So is the work force. Makeup of the school population is dramatically changed.

THE U. S. POPULATION explosion has subsided.

Because of fewer births, the population's annual rate of growth has been shrinking each year since 1961.

Experts say that the downward trend will continue through this decade.

At the end of 1965, people of the U. S. numbered just under 196 million. The total is expected to top 198 million this year, exceed 200 million next year, and climb to about 208 million in 1970. Some earlier projections had estimated the 1970 total at upward of 214 million.

In 1960, the population showed a gain of more than 3 million over 1959. That was a peak gain. By 1965, the increase had dropped to 2,367,000. The estimated gain in 1966 is 2,327,000.

More family planning. The downtrend reflects, in part, spreading knowledge and acceptance of birth control. New methods—such as birth-control pills—have made family planning easier.

As a result, more and more young married couples are choosing to postpone having families, or to limit their size, in favor of early achievement of a higher standard of living.

Population changes other than the decline in birth rate are generally favorable to business. A large growth in young adults is under way, which means an increasing number of marriages. This promises more demand for homes, household equipment and other goods and services in years just ahead.

Young couples who defer the start of a family may seek an apartment instead of a house. This could stimulate the already booming construction of modern apartment buildings with luxuries that many people have come to expect—such as swimming pools, "party rooms," and ample garage space.

Another factor: Many younger people will have two incomes instead of one. Young wives, not tied down by babies at home, will be free to take full-time employment.

BIRTHS

Birth rates are tumbling. The decline is the sharpest since depression days of the 1930s.

In eight years, the birth rate in U.S. among women 15 to 44—the fertility rate—has dropped by a fifth. A further decline, to 88.6 per thousand in 1970, is projected by the Economic Unit of "U. S. News & World Report." In 1965, the number of babies born dropped below 4 million for the first time in years. The number born in 1965 was 3,813,000. Estimate for this year is 3,773,000.

MARRIAGES

—Monkmeyer Photo

Marriages, in an uptrend, will top 2-million rate by 1970, against this year's 1.8 million.

The baby boom has ended despite a rise in the number of marriages.

Marriages have been increasing each year since 1958, when they totaled 1.5 million. The number is estimated at 1.8 million in 1965 and is expected to exceed 2 million in 1970.

Household formations—which reflect not only marriages but young or old people living alone, and nonmarried groups—have shown little rise in recent years, having averaged 890,000 a year since 1960.

From 1966 through 1970, however, it is estimated that household formations will average a million a year. This should stimulate demand for houses and household equipment.

The large growth in that portion of the population which is of young adult age comes as people born just after World War II reach maturity.

Estimates are that there will be 60,000 more marriages in the U. S. in 1966 than there were in 1965, and that the upward trend will be even more pronounced in 1967.

NEGROES

Racial "mix" of U. S. population is changing. Negroes are a growing portion of the total.

The Negro population is rising faster than the white population. Latest official figures show 171.4 million whites, and 23.1 million nonwhites, including 20.8 million Negroes.

Nonwhites accounted for 15.3 per cent of all U. S. births in 1957, for 17.4 per cent in 1965, and are expected to account for about 18.3 per cent in 1970.

By the year 2000, according to present estimates, about 23.1 per cent, or almost 1 in every 4 births, will be nonwhite. Nonwhites will account for an estimated 14.7 per cent of the U. S. population by the year 2000, up from 11 per cent in 1957, and 11.9 per cent in 1965.

YOUNG PEOPLE

—Monkmeyer Photo

Fast-rising teen population offers promise of new markets—and a problem of enough jobs.

The most rapid rate of population growth in years ahead will be in the teen and young-adult ages.

Total U. S. population is expected to rise 12.5 per cent in the next 10 years, with gains of 20.6 per cent in those aged 10 to 24, and 39.3 per cent in those aged 25 to 34. The increase in these groups will account for 78 per cent of the entire growth in population.

The population changes in prospect indicate that a growing number of young people will be available for employment. If they can be fully employed, they represent a large potential source of new demand for goods and services. This would mean a strong push for expansion of the U. S. economy.

OLDER PEOPLE

—Pix Photo

Older people in the country now number 18.2 million. By 1975: more than 21 million.

In the decade ahead, the number of people 65 and over will increase at a slower rate than in the last decade.

The total number of Americans aged 65 and over rose by 29 per cent in the period 1955-65, from 14 million to 18.2 million. The increase in the next 10 years, it is estimated, will be to a total of 21.2 million, or 16.6 per cent.

WORKERS

The U. S. work force is heading sharply upward. New jobs are needed by the millions.

Population changes in the next six years are expected to increase the size of the labor force from 78.3 million to 86.1 million. This means that nearly 8 million more jobs must be generated in the U. S. if rising unemployment is to be avoided.

There will be a substantial expansion in numbers of younger workers. Persons aged 24 and under now make up 21.4 per cent of the labor force, but will account for 23.2 per cent in 1970.

In the year just ahead, if estimates are correct, actual employment will rise by 1.5 million, against 2.1 million in 1965. Predicted for this year is a drop of 509,000 in unemployment, compared with 545,000 in 1965.

GRAMMAR SCHOOLS

Grade schools can relax a bit. The earlier flood of postwar students now has crested.

The population boom that began when World War II ended put heavier and heavier pressure on elementary schools, all the way from kindergarten through the eighth grade. As a result of the dwindling birth rate, that pressure now is to ease somewhat.

In the years from 1955 through 1965, enrollment in public and private elementary schools rose from 27.7 million to 35.7 million. The grade-school population now is expected to increase at a much slower rate. The total, it is estimated, will reach 37.1 million in 1970 and 38.6 million in 1975.

HIGH SCHOOLS

High-school crush is abating. New-school construction will not have to match the earlier pace.

The number of high-school students, population projections show, will grow at a rate appreciably slower than in the last decade.

In the years from 1955 to 1965, enrollment in grades 9 through 12 rose from 7.6 million to 12.8 million. High-school enrollment is expected by present estimates to reach 15.1 million in 1970, and 16.7 million in 1975.

COLLEGES

College campuses face a big squeeze. Attendance is expected nearly to double by 1975.

The spectacular growth of colleges is to continue in the decade ahead.

Many colleges now are overcrowded. Increase in the U. S. college-age population and the rising importance of a college education are to put an even greater strain on this country's institutions of learning.

In the years from 1955 to 1965, total enrollment in U. S. colleges doubled—from 2.7 million to 5.6 million. The total is expected to exceed 6 million this year, to reach 7.2 million in 1970, and to exceed 9 million by 1975.

(March, 1966) Americans at Mid-Decade of the total population in 1965, compared with 11.4 percent in 1960. Since the nonwhite population of the United States is largely Negro (over 90 percent), patterns of growth for nonwhites largely reflect those of the country's Negroes.

Differences in patterns of growth resulted in a difference in age structure for the Negro population as compared with the white population. The Negro population was younger—approximately 37 percent were under 14 years of age, compared with 28 percent of the white population. Comparatively fewer Negroes were found in the oldest ages—whereas nearly 10 percent of the white population was 65 and over, only 6 percent of the Negro population was in this oldest age group.

Geographic Differences in Population Growth

Geographic differences in population change during the first half of the 1960's were generally similar to those for the latter half of the previous decade. The West continued to be the fastest growing region, with an annual rate of increase nearly twice that for the country as a whole. Three of the four most rapidly growing States were in the West, with only Florida in the remainder of the country keeping pace with this rapidly growing region. Whereas all regions showed some gain in population in the 1960's, the Northeastern and North Central States increased at a rate below the national average and the South only a little above average. The rate of increase picked up somewhat in the South and decreased in the North Central region during the present decade, suggesting that net migration from the South has slowed considerably and that the northern industrial areas are not attracting inmigrants as they were in the 1950's. Nevertheless, the States along the eastern seaboard from Connecticut to Virginia, which include the greater part of "megalopolis," the metropolitan belt extending from Boston to Washington, continued to show increases well above the national average.

As a result of differences in rates of population growth, some States moved up in rank and others slipped to a lower position. Notable among such changes were the displacement of New York by California from the number one position, the ad-income came from such sources as pensions and welfare payments. Income was comparatively low for families with a woman as the head, partly because many of these women were part-time workers or were nonworkers dependent on other income and partly because of the generally lower compensation received by employed women.

Income of Negroes

The lower level of income received by the Negro population is illustrated by figures on income of year-round, full-time workers. For all races, the median income of this group in 1963 was $6,100 for men and $3,600 for women. (The median is the middle amount, half the workers receiving more than this amount and half receiving less). Negro men who worked year round full time had a median income of only $3,900, about two-thirds the amount received by white men; and the median income of Negro women in this category was $2,200, about three-fifths as much as for white women. In all regions of the country, incomes were substantially lower for such Negro men, but the differences were most striking in the South. Negro women had incomes that were close to those of white women in the North and West; but in the South, where the majority live, their incomes were about half the amount received by white women.

The charts presented here have reflected some of the accomplishments of the American people in the last five years as well as some of the problems that still challenge the citizen and his government. The Bureau of the Census, through its current statistical programs, strives to report as promptly as possible the continuing changes in our population. For up-to-date descriptions of individual communities, however, we must wait for the next decennial census in 1970.

The Negro Response To Birth Control

HANNAH LEES

"CAN WE afford birth control as a minority group in the United States?" was one of the questions listed for discussion at a recent panel on birth control in a prosperous Germantown, Pennsylvania, church with a largely Negro congregation. Almost all educated and responsible Negroes would answer "Yes." They realize they cannot make progress without it and are taking constructive steps to promote it. But they are also aware of the charge from other Negroes that birth control is a concealed form of genocide.

At the all-Negro panel discussion, two participants out of seven—a city planner and a pathologist—spoke against it. "Until you bring together action and words, until you help people to be free, to maximize their potential, birth control is utter nonsense," the planner stated. "If we have an oversupply of food and there are empty areas in the world, where is the population problem?" the pathologist demanded. "This whole thing is the concern of people who didn't want too many of a certain race."

"The trouble is that this charge is either whispered or hurled as an angry accusation," I was told by Uvelia Bowen, a highly trained Negro social worker who has recently been appointed a consultant to the VISTA program. "The accusation has to be brought out in the open and discussed intelligently because the fear is certainly there, hidden in the thoughts of every Negro man and woman in the United States, whether they express it or not. It is too bad for America that the thrust for world population control should have come at the height of the civil-rights struggle. We are only twenty million, after all, only ten per cent of the entire population, and many of us feel our whole strength lies in numbers, in the power of the vote. Why did the Alabama Democratic Committee, for example, just now take that White Supremacy slogan off its ballot emblem? They were forced to by the growing number of registered Negro voters." Yet as she expressed these views Mrs. Bowen was sitting by me at a Philadelphia Planned Parenthood luncheon and has since become a board member.

"The highest birth rate, the most unwed mothers are in the poverty areas which are largely Negro," she went on. "And they're the target, aren't they? Negroes don't want children they can't take care of, but we are afraid to trust you when your offered help has so often turned out to be exploitation. Negroes are never going to accept birth control in any numbers from the hands of white people. You will have to find and train a great many more Negro workers if you expect to have any real impact."

The Growth of Acceptance

There is no question that the fear of exploitation is present in some Negro leaders. Few go so far as Philadelphia NAACP President Cecil Moore, who, at a public meeting of the local anti-poverty committee last fall, browbeat the executive director of Philadelphia Planned Parenthood for offering a program of family-planning education, calling it "replete with everything to help Negroes commit race suicide." The Reverend Henry H. Nichols, an eminent minister who tried unsuccessfully to supplant Moore and give Philadelphia's dwindling NAACP more constructive leadership, has told me he is unalterably opposed to any birth-control program until the youth have become moral enough not to use it for immoral purposes—even though the National Council of Churches, of which he was the Philadelphia president in 1963, has come out strongly in its favor.

The Reverend Leon Sullivan, who originated the Negro-operated job-training centers that are spreading across the country, will not even have Planned Parenthood literature—a logical aid to female self-respect and independence—available in the centers. He is not opposed to birth control, he has said; he just doesn't want to have anything to do with it.

That such sentiments are heeded was demonstrated last winter when the Pennsylvania Secretary of Welfare stated publicly that the time was not ripe for state-supported birth control; he cited the arguments of Moore along with those of the Catholic Church. Later, however, he reversed himself with the announcement that the state would begin paying for family-planning services to welfare recipients.

Despite the attitudes of Moore and Sullivan, it is remarkable how far and how fast many Negro leaders, whatever their inner anxieties, are moving toward awareness that birth control is a weapon in their fight for equality. The number of Negroes on the national and local boards of Planned Parenthood is fast multiplying. Though this is partly because Planned Parenthood has learned to seek them out, their ready acceptance is significant. And there is some more concrete evidence of change.

As recently as four years ago, the National Urban League issued this guarded statement: "Every family has a right to be informed about all the resources in the community, including family planning and the various approved methods of birth control. Then it must be left up to the individual family, giving them freedom of choice based on their own values and religious convictions, which method, if any, is desired." In 1964, it issued a considerably more positive statement which said, among other things, that the organization would "attempt widespread publicity about available family planning facilities, services, and possibilities among the lower socio-economic groups likely to be cut off from such information from private physicians or regular educational channels." Now the Chicago Urban League has gone further and said, ". . . to fight poverty without birth control is to fight with one hand tied behind the back."

The Importance of Carfare

With Urban League co-operation, a group of Negro doctors and nurses —most of them doctors' wives—have for the past year been operating a volunteer birth-control clinic in Bell Center, a Cleveland settlement house, under the leadership of gynecologist Dr. Joseph Martin. This is not, of course, the only such clinic in Cleveland. Some are operated by the local Planned Parenthood organization, and others by the major teaching hospitals, but none were reaching the poorest Negroes.

Rejecting the popular circumlocutions, the clinic called itself the Birth Control Clinic at Bell Center, "so that," says Dr. Martin, "a less sophisticated clientele would not be confused by the title—and if this name could be used without engendering community opposition, it would make future disguises of the name in our town unnecessary." Thirty Negro doctors volunteered to staff the clinic in rotation. The only scarce commodity turned out to be patients.

Most women in the area, the doctors gradually found, simply didn't know about birth control. Others had been badly frightened by tales of embolism, cancer, or permanent sterilization, by what Dr. Martin calls "granny medicine." Many had no one to leave their children with or nothing "decent" to wear to the clinic.

At the end of the first year, the doctors at Bell Center had provided contraceptive help to only two hundred women, but they had learned from the Bell social workers how to spread the word from door to door. In addition to preliminary education and even reassurance that anyone would be warmly welcomed whatever clothes she wore, the doctors now realized that they would have to provide baby sitters and even carfare for many women. But they had gained enough community support to get private grants of $12,000 for the next year. (One gift of $8 was donated specifically for carfare.)

A considerably more ambitious clinic has just been opened in Philadelphia by the African Methodist Episcopal Church. Under the leadership of Austin Norris, a prominent Negro lawyer, and Philadelphia A.M.E. Bishop John Bright, the church has converted a bankrupt hospital into an old-age home and health center. The center, named the Sarah Allen Home, applied a short time ago to the Philadelphia Anti-Poverty Action Committee for funds for what it cautiously called a Conception Regulation Clinic, though in its presentation it forthrightly declared its intention of giving service to all who came for help, including unmarried and adolescent girls.

SINCE anti-poverty funds could only be used for birth-control services to women living with their husbands, Planned Parenthood last fall proposed a purely educational program to the Philadelphia Anti-Poverty Action Committee. It was turned down as much because some PAAC members thought it inadequate as because of Cecil Moore's accusations. This March, PAAC approved A.M.E.'s request, and then went on to endorse a greatly revised proposal from Planned Parenthood to provide services to each poverty area tailored to its individual needs and wishes over the dissenting votes of Moore and a Roman Catholic priest.

The Sarah Allen Conception Regulation Clinic did not wait for the anti-poverty funds, however, but opened in March in a separate building adjacent to the hospital with the help of a $20,000 grant from the national African Methodist Episcopal Church. Only one woman appeared the first day, though Bishop Bright had directed that the clinic opening be announced from every A.M.E. pulpit in the city. Austin Norris, a man noted for direct action, asked a well-known broadcaster to announce the clinic hours on the radio. He also had handbills printed and passed out giving the clinic's hours and address. The next week there were seventeen patients.

Because the Negro population is increasing at a rate of 2.4 per cent a year as opposed to 1.7 per cent for the white population and because its illegitimacy rate is so much greater, there is a widespread conviction that Negroes want more children than whites, or are simply more irresponsible about parenthood. Yet a 1960 study on the growth of American families found that most nonwhite wives wanted fewer children than white wives (2.9 children compared to 3.3). Middle-class Negro families are smaller, on the average, than comparable white families. In a Florida group of public-health maternity patients, mostly Negro, seventy per cent said they wanted no more children.

Chicago Planned Parenthood recently published a study of fourteen thousand low-income patients taking the pill, eighty-three per cent of whom were nonwhite and nearly half of whom had not finished high school. It revealed that thirty months after first coming to the clinic, about four out of five patients were still regularly taking the pill.

Freedom to limit family size was first called a basic human right only a year ago, in a report of the National Academy of Science's National Research Council. This was echoed by Mrs. Katherine B. Oettinger, the head of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, in a speech last fall and recently by the Population Panel of the White House Conference on International Cooperation. But many Negroes are already adopting this point of view and beginning to see failure to provide birth-control services as a form of discrimination they must fight.

THEY ARE also becoming remarkably direct and clearsighted about the question of giving birth-control services to the unmarried and underage. Last year Edwin C. Berry, executive director of the Chicago Urban League, stated: "Fortunately, the attitude toward the illegitimate mother is changing. . . . The thought that it is sinful and immoral to provide birth-control knowledge to unmarried mothers will hopefully be reevaluated throughout the country." His words were prophetic, for on March 31 it was made public that any birth-control program under the Department of Health, Education and Welfare would provide services to all women regardless of marital status—a revolutionary reversal of position that may soon affect the policy of the Office of Economic Opportunity.

A Soviet Critique Of China's 'Total Strategy'

RAYMOND L. GARTHOFF

THE EXCHANGE of polemical letters and articles between the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and the Communist Party of China has been highly revealing. It has, however, been a public polemic—fashioned with an eye to domestic consumption and on the Communist and "neutral" nations following the dispute abroad. Perhaps even more revealing are documents of an internal Soviet discussion on Chinese Communist politico-military strategy not intended to be made public. One such is an article called "The Peking Version of 'Total Strategy,'" which appeared in the Soviet General Staff theoretical journal Military Thought for October, 1963, and it is still both pertinent and instructive. This journal is marked "For Generals, Admirals, and Officers of the Soviet Army and Navy Only"—it was not intended to be read by Chinese (or American) eyes.

It analyzes Chinese Communist views on military theory and policy, and while it no doubt distorts the Chinese Communist position to some degree, it reveals a great deal both about the Chinese and Soviet conceptions. The current Chinese Communist view of military science is described as "facing the past, the Chinese past, not recognizing any experience other than the experience of China. . . ." This attitude, according to the Soviet critic I. Yermashev, leads to another and even more critical fault of contemporary Chinese military science: "It is simply obsolete. And it became obsolete not merely by itself but as a consequence of radical changes in many objective conditions, including the material base of war and above all of weaponry." Primarily, Yermashev comments, the Chinese exaggerate the significance of the political and ideological character of possible future war at the expense of evaluating realistically "the balance of real material forces"—that is, recognition of American military power. The Chinese Communists are said to bank on a protracted war, and on winning such a protracted war "even if at a given time—that is, speaking plainly, at the present time—the enemy is stronger, because in the course of the struggle the relation of forces will change to the advantage of the weaker." This the Soviet writer finds unconvincing: "It is absurd to suppose that a war of attrition will favor the weak and harm the strong," he writes. "In such a war, the weak will be exhausted before the strong."

"CHINESE MARXISM" (Military Thought put it in quotes) is said to make population a "decisive factor, along with political-morale factors, determining victory or defeat." The Soviet rebuttal not only cites the British conquest of India as an example where size of population was no index of strength but also pointedly recalls the defeat of China in 1895 by "little Japan." Similarly, the Chinese example of the defeat of Japan in China in 1945 as an illustration of victory in a "protracted war"—the cornerstone case for Mao Tse-tung's theories—is rejected as "unconvincing." The Chinese neglect to note that Japan was "tied down on many fronts in the Pacific Ocean," Yermashev says, and that "the anti-fascist coalition took the war to the Japanese homeland"—both rare, if indirect, Soviet credits to our role in defeating Japan. The author does not forget to note that "the Soviet Army dealt complete defeat to the Japanese Army in Northeastern and Northern China," without which "the might of Japanese imperialism would not have been broken." Both the historical role of the Chinese Communists and the theoretical underpinning of their present military doctrine and politico-

POVERTY IN THE U.S.A.

BY J. STOUDER SWEET

SOME MIGHT think it ironic that American concern about poverty should have reached its peak in today's affluent society. But it is not, perhaps, really odd that as America has become more prosperous it has become more aware that all Americans are not well off – in fact, that many are poor, by any standard.

It's been said that the poor of the 1960's are "invisible"– they wear cheap store-bought clothes that look like everyone's clothing, and they live in miserable housing, but in areas where most other Americans never go.

Who are these "invisible" people? They are: racially segregated, unemployed, underemployed, minimally paid, physically or mentally ill, those living a marginal existence on pensions, including among them men whose skills are technologically outmoded. They are: female heads of families, young people ill-educated for today's urbanized and automated industry, and dependent children. They live in economically depressed parts of the country, in big-city slums, or in migrant worker camps.

Today's American poor may be out of sight, but they are often not out of mind. During the recessions of 1949, 1954, 1958, and 1961, the long-term unemployment rate was edging up. Clearly, many Americans were being shaken completely out of our affluent society – or had never managed to gain entry to it at all. Why? Geographical and technological changes in the economic structure made it difficult for millions of older workers and new job-seekers to get jobs.

Half a decade of unexampled and uninterrupted prosperity since 1961 has pointed up the contrast even more. Thus contemporary poverty is increasingly discussed in terms of paradox: nearly full employment, yet persistent unemployment; jobs going begging while millions of unemployed are untrained to fill them; jobless inhabitants of depressed areas who don't move to labor-shortage areas to get jobs.

changing attitudes toward poverty

In the United States the public attitude toward poverty has changed considerably during the past century. In 1893 President Grover Cleveland stated that "While the people should patriotically and cheerfully support their government, its functions do not include the support of the people." (A year later, the leaders of Coxey's "army" of unemployed, demanding a federal program of work relief, were arrested for walking on the Capitol grass.) In contrast, the Employment Act of 1946 declared, with qualifications, that it was the national purpose to create and maintain within the free enterprise system useful employment opportunities for those able, willing, and seeking to work. The 1946 Act, passed with bipartisan support, institutionalized a virtual revolution in American thinking by establishing a Council of Economic Advisers in the President's Executive Office and the present

Joint Economic Committee in Congress to study and recommend ways to maintain "full employment."

What are today lumped together as programs of health, education, and welfare, of course, might be considered part of a long-established, continuing "war on poverty." These go back to 1787, to the somewhat premature provision for public schools in the Northwest Ordinance (repeated in every statehood enabling act including that for Hawaii in 1959).

The focus of present anti-poverty action by the government may be found in the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 (Public Law 88-452, August 20, 1964).

The 1964 Act authorized a variety of anti-poverty programs under the general supervision of an Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) in the President's Executive Office:

1) a Job Corps for school dropouts aged 16 through 21;
2) a Youth Conservation Corps (the counterpart of the Civilian Conservation Corps of the 1930's) within the Job Corps;
3) popular part-time "work training programs" for unemployed youth under a Neighborhood Youth Corps;
4) "work-study programs" for college students from low-income families;
5) "community action programs," including the highly popular "Head Start" program for pre-kindergartners from culturally deprived areas;
6) "adult basic education programs"—teaching the unemployed to read and write;
7) employment and investment incentive programs for small business;
8) "work experience programs"—providing citizens on relief rolls with experience and job training needed to get jobs;
9) special programs for rural areas;
10) Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA), a domestic version of the Peace Corps, staffed by low-salaried anti-poverty workers.

Wide World Photos

At mid-decade, the OEO directly administered only the urban Job Corps, community action programs, VISTA, and one of the rural programs for migrant workers. Other programs under the Act were administered by the departments of Health, Education, and Welfare; Labor; Agriculture; and Interior; and by the Small Business Administration.

Other anti-poverty legislation of the 1960's involved the passage of various area redevelopment acts (including acts authorizing developmental public works commissions in Appalachia and the Ozarks); the Primary and Secondary Education Act; the Higher Education Act; the Demonstration Cities Act of 1966; and acts establishing a National Teacher Corps, rent supplements for low-income families, and increased minimum wage rates and coverage.

Virtually all these programs were the subject of political controversy, and the necessity of obtaining annual Congressional appropriations for them guaranteed continued controversy. One might, for instance, take the outraged denunciation of Horace Mann by mid-19th-century conservatives as characteristic of the heated comment any governmental anti-poverty effort usually arouses among some Americans. In getting laws taxing the well-to-do to send the children of the poor to school, Mann was frankly advocating using the wealth of the older generation to equalize opportunity for the younger.

Even today, many middle class people, because of their self-righteous attitude toward income as the reward for work, look down on the poor. And it's been suggested that the continued existence of an inferior, impoverished class gives the middle-income groups their sense of status and identity. Consequently, any significant effort to raise the status of the poor (getting them jobs and taking them off relief, for instance) would seem to some in the status-anxious and status-striving middle class to be a threat to their own position in society.

"the culture of poverty"

Social scientists have been emphasizing recently that there is a "culture of poverty," with an ethic different from the dominant middle class ethic of obedience to law, self-discipline, work, and putting off today's enjoyment to work toward a future goal. This viewpoint, for instance, is expressed in recent books by Oscar Lewis.*

The culture of poverty, Lewis says, transcends national boundaries. It exists in rural and urban settings. "Wherever it occurs, its practitioners exhibit remarkable similarity in the structure of their families, in interpersonal relations, in spending habits, in their value systems, and in their orientation in time." For instance, Lewis discovered that common-law marriages and households headed by women, found among many poor American Negro families, were also common among the poor in Mexico and Puerto Rico. Typical of this culture is a fatalistic, live-for-today, let-come-what-may attitude.

Lewis argues that not all the world's poor live in the "culture of poverty." Such a culture typically exists, he says, in a cash economy with wage labor, a profit system, long-term high unemployment and underemployment for unskilled labor, where there are dominant middle class values that the unemployed and underemployed don't feel will work for them.

A 1966 publication of the United States Welfare Administration, Low-Income Life Styles, summarizes recent United States comment on common social and mental characteristics among the poor. In it, the poor are found to be fatalistic, authoritarian in their attitudes to others, casual in the choice of marriage or common-law marriage partners, and emotionally isolated from the community and from each other. Men are believers in male superiority, but families usually center about women, who are frequently the main providers in one-parent families.

the "new school" study

Publication of John K. Galbraith's The Affluent Society in 1958 triggered interest at the New School for Social Research in New York City in a study that would break the traditional link in economic thinking between the poverty of nations and of individuals. Dean Henry David and Professor Oscar Ornati of the New School felt that poverty must now be studied in the context of an affluent society. The Twentieth Century Fund, which had been thinking along parallel lines, agreed to finance the project, and the Fund's book, Poverty Amid Affluence, is Dr. Ornati's report on that project.

As the New School research study pointed out, most students of the United States economy up to 1960 had given their principal attention to growing productivity and the nation's general prosperity, ignoring a persistent number of Americans who were not sharing in the prosperity—who in fact were, and are, practically outsiders in our society.

WHAT IS POVERTY?

Just as there was no generally accepted standard for measuring employment and unemployment in the early 1930's—resulting in widely varying estimates of Depression-era unemployment—today there is no generally accepted method of measuring poverty. This is particularly evident in making time comparisons. You can be optimistic or pessimistic about United States progress in eradicating poverty, depending on what standards you use, and whether you compare today to yesterday using an old standard, or today to yesterday using a present-day standard.

As the New School report points out, most recent discussions of poverty have used a "poverty line" or "cut-off" concept—every family with less than a certain amount of family income is considered poor; every family with more is considered not poor. The income dividing line between poor and non-poor is the "poverty line" or "subsistence level."

Robert J. Lampman's 1959 study for the Joint Economic Committee of the United States Congress, for instance, used a cut-off of $2,516 for a four-person family—a figure which lies between the $4,000 "adequate standard of living" of the Bureau of Labor Statistics City Worker's Family Budget (1947) and relief budgets used in most states.

what "subsistence level" means in real life

Typical of 1960 subsistence budgets is a New York City budget requiring an income of $2,660. It provides for simple clothing to protect against the weather and maintain cleanliness. It leaves no room for impulse buying or fashion. It barely copes with the problem of wear. A woman's coat, for instance, must last five years. Left-over food must be retrieved. There can be no error. A cup of flour spilled means no thickening of gravy that week; a blown bulb, no light for that month; and a chair broken in anger cannot be replaced for a year. The meat budget allows for stewing lamb, beef liver or heart, picnic shoulder, fillet of haddock, or perhaps a boned veal roast. No frozen foods are provided for. Compared to a 1935 subsistence budget in New York City, which provided $600 less in 1960 dollars, the 1960 budget emphasizes more fresh vegetables and high-protein foods. It still allows for only 520 carfares, as the 1935 budget did, and allows nothing for an occasional beer, tobacco, or telephone calls.

The budget assumes a small rented five-room flat (two or three rooms more than in 1935). The family living room might have two chairs. A mattress and spring on legs may serve as a couch. A drop-leaf table for eating and two straight chairs may be there. Linoleum may cover the floor, and there can be a lamp or two. Electricity is to be used carefully. An electric refrigerator and iron are allowed (neither was provided for in 1935). The family may listen to the radio an hour a day; but television is not included in the budget. There will be money to buy aspirin but none for "miracle" drugs. The husband may get a haircut once a month, and the wife a home permanent once a year. She can use a self-service launderette. There will be no money to buy the children candy or ice cream, or to go to the movies, or to offer a visitor a cup of coffee.

The U.S. Welfare Administration reports an aspect of poverty-level life style that the New School report passed over—what the relief and Aid to Dependent Children client actually does with the relief money.

It shows that low-income families generally buy necessities first and luxuries last—with exceptions. Notable was moderate overspending on large household appliances, radios, television sets, and phonographs. The low-income wife values the appliances as a means of being a more effective housewife—a role she accepts more willingly than some middle-income wives. Some poor Negro families may underspend on housing, food, and medical care, and overspend on fashionable clothes.

Low-income shoppers do not usually try to get the best quality goods for the lowest price. They lack extensive knowledge of quality features of the immense variety of goods available and of credit agreements and consumer rights. They also tend to prefer personal relationships with dealers and friends to depersonalized dealings in large chain and department stores. Budgeting may be limited to saving coins in a sugar bowl until there is enough there for a purchase. Low-income families don't make or repair much themselves—they usually don't have the know-how required for such work.

Low-income families also do not take much advantage of consumer education aids available to them, just as they don't take full advantage of health, education, and legal assistance they could get. People offering such information must usually go to them and make it easier for the poor to use it.

the "poverty band"

Instead of a single poverty line, the New School study used a "band" concept—e.g., when the income of a family of four fell below any point in a band ranging downward from "comfort" ($5,609) through "adequacy" ($4,348) to and including "subsistence" ($2,662) the family was classified as deprived or poor.

The New School staff used comfort, adequacy, and subsistence budgets prepared by government agencies, wage determination boards, charities, research foundations, and such organizations as the National Industrial Conference Board and the Heller Committee for Research in Social Economics of the University of California to trace the "poverty band" back to the early 1900's. The following chart, adjusted to 1960 dollars, shows how the standards have gradually risen throughout the years.

THE POVERTY BAND

The subsistence budgets represent contemporary notions of rock-bottom poverty in America. Adequacy budgets represent the level below which United States social welfare agencies usually will provide free services such as medical aid. Comfort budgets represent current concepts of a comfortable or "American" standard of living: anyone living below this standard might reasonably feel he was living in "deprivation."

All three levels of the poverty band have gone up over the years—but comfort budgets have gone up fastest, being most responsive to rising expectations in the prosperous society. The subsistence budgets are generally tied to the bottom-most part of the labor market. They are currently lower than "men's low wages"—wages earned by unskilled labor.

poverty as inequality

The chart below depicts trends the New School study reported in U.S. income distribution between 1935 and 1959.

The lowest fifth (two out of ten Americans, coinciding most closely with the poverty group) got $4.10 out of every $100 of national income in 1935; $5 in 1947; and $4.50 in 1959.

The combined middle three groups (six out of ten Americans) got $44.20 in 1935; $49 in 1947; and $49.80 in 1959. The top fifth, consisting of wealthy and well-to-do Americans (the remaining two out of ten Americans) got $51.70 in 1935; $46 in 1947; and $45.70 in 1959.

All five groups have gained in real income; in their share of total U.S. income, only the middle three groups have gained over the years—at the expense of the poor and the well-to-do.

Some goods and services included in poverty budgets today—such as heat, electricity, running water—reflect the general rise in U.S. living styles, including those at the poverty level.

But no matter how much total United States income and consumer goods and services have improved, the low-income share of these has not increased but has decreased since World War II.

how many poor are there?

Asking how many poor there are at any time is about the same thing as asking how concerned the questioner is about poverty.

– Is he concerned about poverty as insufficiency, or as inequality?

– Is he concerned about American families living at the level at which they become eligible for relief or welfare payments? In 1960, a family of four living at this "subsistence" level received $2,660 or less. There were about 20 million individuals in such families—11 per cent of all United States households, an irreducible core of abject poor, by anybody's standard.

– Is he concerned about families eligible for free social services? A family living in this "minimum adequacy" level in 1960 got $4,350. There were 46 million individuals in such families, or 26 per cent of all households.

Wide World Photos

– Is he concerned about families living below a "minimum comfort" level—the level the Bureau of Labor Standards and most labor unions consider a normal "American" standard of living for a city worker's family? In 1960 this level required an income of at least $5,610. There were about 71 million individuals in families—or 40 per cent of all households—with incomes less than this amount. These people feel poor, or at least deprived, not fully sharing in the current prosperity.

Counting the poor only by contemporary standards and in terms of the three "lines" making up the poverty band, the New School staff projected its count to previous years.

It found:

LEVELS OF INADEQUACY (% of households)

Measuring poverty and deprivation in terms of contemporary concern, it will be seen that the high percentage of households in poverty and deprivation during the Depression of the 1930's finally declined during the World War II years. The "subsistence" portion of the band today is about half what it was, as a percentage, in the Depression. The band as a whole (all those below the "comfort" level) has not improved since 1947; we continue to judge that more or less 40 per cent of Americans live in conditions most Americans consider as less than comfort, and 26 to 28 per cent at conditions considered less than adequate.

WHO ARE THE POOR?

Poverty and deprivation are the disproportionate lot today not simply of individuals but of certain population groups: non-whites, females, the aged, the young, rural farm dwellers, Southerners (particularly rural non-white Southerners), those with no work experience, the part-time employed, large families with numerous minor children, and those with little schooling.

The poor and deprived of today are increasingly not the victims of a Depression-era economy or of their own bad habits, but of membership in some of these ill-favored population groups.

Census data can be produced for these groups for 1960 and for the decades before. When the New School staff compared this demographic data with census data on income, they found the long-term trends show a close association.

In 1960 all of these groups had low incomes. Below the $4,500 level, the proportion of families with one or more of these characteristics was very high—close to half.

When a head of family has not merely one but two or more of these characteristics, the probability of poverty may be overwhelming:

Family Head	Per cent below $2,500 in 1960
Rural farm, non-white	78
Female, non-white	65
Aged, non-white	63
Aged, rural farm	55
Female, rural farm	55

The characteristics discussed here, of course, are not the only ones often associated with low income. Poor housing and poor health are also found to be closely associated with poverty. The New School staff investigated these along with other factors.

the geography of low income

Poverty, without a doubt, has a geographic dimension. Employment opportunities are not evenly distributed. They are few in an area of labor surplus, or where changes in technology have outmoded many people's job skills.

Farms and isolated small towns and cities are increasingly areas of labor surplus. Cities almost always have been the main centers of opportunity. As a result, a constant migration of rural and small town people to major cities and metropolitan areas has taken place.

While the big cities have more low-income people than other areas, there's less risk of being abjectly poor in a big city.

The larger the town or city, the less likelihood there will be of having an extremely low income. For instance, in 1960 the median family income in towns of 2,500 to 25,000 was $5,356; in towns of over one million it was $6,486. Thus in dollars there was a $1,000 advantage per family in the metropolis.

The South is at a special disadvantage. It has a large proportion of poverty-linked groups—non-white, rural farm, ill educated. Even eliminating non-whites and rural farm people from consideration, the urban South has a relatively low income compared to the North and West.

poverty among negroes

In the years since World War II, the economic gains of the non-white population (which is about 92 per cent Negro) have been less than those of whites. Further, among the non-white group those who have gained are in a minority, and the relative position of many non-whites has worsened.

At each level of low income, many more non-whites per hundred are poor or deprived than whites. Taking all families in 1960, approximately 49 per cent of all non-white families had less than $4,000 annual income, as against 17 per cent of all white families. In cities, the picture was little better—42 per cent for non-whites, 11 per cent for whites. Among the rural farm group, 89 per cent of all non-white rural farm families had income below $4,000, as compared to 52 per cent of all white rural farm families.

DIFFERENCES WITHIN LOW INCOME GROUPS

Negroes can almost always be found in lower-paid, less skilled occupations. Within the same occupations, non-whites are customarily paid less than whites, particularly where the education levels of both are above average.

Non-white women are handicapped in the type of work they can get. Ten per cent of non-white women working in 1959 were domestics as compared to only one per cent of working white women. Only 12 per cent of non-white working women were secretaries or clerks, as compared to 44 per cent of the white women who worked.

education

In theory, public education puts opportunity equally within the reach of all children. This is the ideal, but not the fact. Only recently has it been realized that the United States public school system acts as a "selecting out" mechanism. Behind the effort to maintain the appearance of equality of opportunity in school, a relentless competition goes on. For this competition the children of the poor are ill-fitted. By the time they have entered school, children from culturally deprived homes are already at a disadvantage. They get discouraged early and drop out much more readily than other children. It was this fact that sparked the Head Start programs.

Inadequate education has been part of the life style of the poor. This shows up early in poor reading skill. The pupil who has trouble reading seldom catches up. Parents, children, and teachers alike take it for granted that he never will.

About 40 per cent of all who started high school in the early 1960's dropped out before graduation. At a family income level of $9,000 the dropout rate was only 3.6 per cent a year; when family income went as low as $3,000-$5,000 the rate was 19.2 per cent a year.

Every school year completed brings measurable advantages in job opportunities. In 1959 unskilled workers (median earnings $2,834) had completed, on the average, 8.5 years of schooling; semiskilled workers ($4,101), 9 years; craftsmen and foremen ($5,272), 11 years; clerical workers ($4,691), 12.5 years; professional and technical workers ($6,287), 16.4 years.

home influence

A University of Michigan study found that education of the father was the most powerful predictor of income for the son. Having or not having money does not in itself preclude the possibility of getting a high school or even a college degree. Strong motivation to acquire an education generally comes from the home. Lack of interest in education at home can completely destroy a youngster's interest in the advantages of education.

The desire for achievement seems to necessitate urging by parents to master skills early. At an early age, such skills may only be climbing, jumping, and sports. The mothers of boys with a low desire for achievement tend to impose more restrictions and do not expect their sons to show independence and mastery as early. The best time to encourage a desire for achievement is apparently between six and eight years of age.

Children from low-income families tend to score low on intelligence tests. In Harlem older children have actually tested lower in I.Q. tests than when they were younger. Most of these tests involve language ability, and low-income families are often less given to reading than others. The style of language in low-income families is usually concrete rather than abstract, making it more difficult for low-income children to understand what teachers are talking about.

housing

Hereditary poverty appears to be forged in a combination of inadequate education, poor housing, bad nutrition, limited knowledge of hygiene, and late identification of disease.

Good housing, though essential, will not solve all the problems of poverty. Good housing may provide a favorable physical environment. But it does not teach children to read, abolish discrimination, or provide jobs. Nor is bad housing exclusively, or mainly, urban. There is in fact more substandard housing outside than inside metropolitan areas, according to the 1960 United States Census of Housing. Of the 19 million occupied housing units outside the metropolitan areas, only 12 million were in sound condition and had complete plumbing facilities. In the urban areas, where housing conditions may be intolerably cramped, about 28 million out of 34 million units met these standards. However, of housing units occupied by non-whites, in the non-urban areas only 17 per cent were in sound condition with all plumbing; in the cities 57 per cent qualified.

There is a direct connection between improved housing and education. Youths 14-17 years of age are more likely to stay in school if they live in public housing projects than if they live in the slums, even though the public-housing family's income may be slightly lower.

health and poverty

There is a clear-cut relationship between low income and poor health. The poor are particularly prone to certain diseases, especially those associable with poor housing or the lack of immunization. They are more likely to suffer from accidents which are characteristic of hazardous occupations and from mental disability. The United States National Health Survey, 1957-58, found that low-income sick people lost more days of work due to ill health, spent more days in the hospital, and had more days of bed disability and of restricted activity than higher income people.

Having less to buy health with, the poor have less health. Better health among the higher income groups may also result from better knowledge of hygiene among the educated. Or, to look at it the other way, ill and disabled persons are less likely to be able to earn a good living.

In addition to having poor health facilities, low-income people have a fatalistic attitude toward health that hinders them from seeking what health care exists and taking preventive measures. Curable conditions are often believed to be unavoidable. Dental decay and the loss of teeth are often considered as inevitable. Disease symptoms, such as discomfort, are not identified as illness. Only when a person becomes incapacitated do many poor people consider him "sick."

Poor people tend not to be affected by public health programs. Immunization for polio has been more readily accepted among high- and middle-income families than lower income groups. The poor practice self-medication, and may consult friends and neighbors for advice about medical treatment rather than doctors. Although they are sick more often, low-income families spend a relatively small proportion of their means on doctor bills.

the "displaced" and "never placed"

The periodic recessions of the 1950's and the recession of 1961 brought mounting "structural" unemployment (joblessness resulting from lasting changes in the labor market). With it came growing awareness of a mounting level of permanent unemployment and of a class of seemingly permanently unemployed and unemployable people.

How does one become displaced in an affluent society?

Increasingly, unemployment in the 1950's and 1960's affected special groups—Negroes, the young, the aged, the unskilled, the poorly educated, and, significantly, factory workers. Technological unemployment was high in certain depressed areas. In Hagerstown, Maryland, for instance, the 1960 unemployment rate —one out of every six workers—almost matched the level of the Great Depression. (In 1961, the first of the recent federal "anti-poverty" programs, area redevelopment, was established to deal with this problem.)

The growing productivity of the United States economy, contrary to traditional expectation, had not by the mid-1960's remedied structural unemployment resulting from technological change or the structural poverty resulting from unfavorable geographic location. "Full employment" policies of the past had not proved to be enough.

Furthermore, making a living depends increasingly on ability to fill in questionnaires, to pass aptitude tests, to use the right words, and more important, on formal education. Entry to jobs may be affected by possession of training that may or may not be directly related to the duties of the position.

poverty and the labor market

Farmers and farm workers frequently have fared ill in the prosperous 1950's and 1960's. However, the statistics include as "farmers" many who have but a few acres from which they earn a little income. Thus, there were in a recent year at least 350,000 families on very small farms whose income from farm operations was primarily in kind and whose cash receipts, on the average, came mainly from off-farm work. As a group, these so-called farmers averaged about $450 during the year from the sale of farm products as well as a little over $500 in earnings from off-farm work.

While workers in industry generally fare better than farmers and farm workers, there are several industries whose wages over recent decades have hovered just above the "minimum subsistence" level. As a result, this has placed many of their workers squarely in the "poverty band." Poorly paid men and women workers in 1960 included employees of general merchandise stores, apparel and accessories stores, hotels, motels, and tourist courts, laundries, cleaning and dyeing plants, drug stores, limited-price variety stores, women's ready-to-wear stores, manufacturers of clothing and textiles, cigar manufacturers, and poultry dressing and packing establishments. Workers in these enterprises had an average hourly 1960 wage of between $1 and $1.50. Migrant farm workers constituted another very large group whose wages were even lower.

In the distressed areas there are too many people for too few available jobs. Older people, particularly, afraid of the risks involved in starting anew in strange surroundings at their age, tend to stay in such areas. These are frequently underdeveloped regions, very similar in their lack of public and private investment to non-industrialized nations of the world.

Few Americans are starving—although many suffer from malnutrition, unsanitary housing, lack of attention to health problems and inadequate education.

THE COMMITMENT TO REMEDY

What is being done to fulfill the historic United States commitment to remedy the inequities in opportunity and justice that remain in our national life?

the anti-poverty dollar

The New School staff estimated annual public and private "anti-poverty" expenditures in 1960 at about $52.4 billion. This total anti-poverty expenditure (spent for palliatives such as relief and for remedies such as social welfare services and education) exceeded 1960 national defense expenditures of about $46 billion.

The vast bulk of the $52.4 billion in "anti-poverty" expenditures was taken from people in the form of taxes. This totaled an estimated $49 billion in 1960. Some of this money – such as the amount used to provide Social Security pensions – represented in part a repayment of money contributed by the recipients. Much of it, however, actually constituted a redistribution of "other people's money."

Taxes themselves are, of course, redistributive so long as the taxpayer does not get equal value in return for the amount he has paid. So practically all public programs, including many not designated as an "anti-poverty program," involve some redistribution of income.

Of the estimated $49 billion public anti-poverty expenditure in 1960, the New School staff found about $37 billion were devoted to the prevention of poverty through various social security, health-care, physical disability, unemployment, and educational programs. Direct support of the poor accounted for about $9 billion, and support of those not officially declared poor (no "pauper's oath" required) accounted for about $2.5 billion.

In addition, the New School staff estimated that about $3 billion was spent by private organizations and individuals to prevent or alleviate poverty in 1960. This was somewhat less than half of charitable giving in 1960. Not all expenditures of tax-free organizations, of course, are devoted to health and welfare programs that can fairly be designated as anti-poverty efforts.

how private and public efforts interact and overlap

Health research is an obvious area in which private and public anti-poverty efforts overlap. About three-fifths of all medical research is now paid for by government. In recent years, philanthropic expenditures for health care and medical research have risen much more slowly than those by government.

By the early 1960's, the National Institutes of Health had a budget amounting to more than four times the total budgets of the 37 largest private national health agencies. One reason for this has been that voluntary fund-raising drives have increased public awareness of health needs, leading to demand for increased government research expenditures. For instance, the National Association for Retarded Children, which was formed in 1953, had helped by 1960 to direct federal attention to retardation, with a consequent marked increase in government expenditure. The government is also today a large-scale contributor to construction of private non-profit hospitals through the Hill-Burton Act. Private foundations and individuals also contribute some funds to publicly owned medical facilities.

how much do the poor pay for their own support?

Estimates by the New School poverty research staff indicate that a larger proportion of the total anti-poverty tax burden is carried by those earning under $4,000 than by any other income class. It consists of contributions to social security programs and those portions of sales and excise taxes used to finance anti-poverty programs. Sales and excise taxes, which fall on those who spend all their money rather than saving or investing part of it, strike lower-income people much more heavily than the higher-income persons who are savers or investors. The New School staff estimated that about $8.6 billion of the total $49 billion public anti-poverty expenditure in 1960 was paid by those earning under $4,000. The under-$4,000 group also contributed about a half-billion dollars to private anti-poverty programs.

ANTI-POVERTY EXPENDITURES 1960

public assistance programs

The 1935 Social Security Act, in addition to establishing Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance, also established three "categorical assistance" federal-state fund-matching programs: Old Age Assistance, Aid to Dependent Children (which was later expanded to Aid and Services to the Families of Dependent Children), and Aid to the Blind. Two other categories, Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled, and Medical Assistance for the Aged, were later added. A sixth program, totally dependent upon state or local financing, is known as "general assistance" or "home relief."

The number of persons covered by these programs has changed sharply with the years. Of the shifts since 1936, the most dramatic have been:

1) The very sharp decline in those receiving locally-financed general assistance. This reflects transfer of general assistance cases into "categorical assistance" programs.

2) The rise in the number of recipients of federal-state financed Aid and Services to the Families of Dependent Children.

The poverty of children, one of the less well-known aspects of the post-World War II "baby boom," has been a rapidly increasing fact of American life. Between 1947 and 1960 the average number of children under 18 benefiting from this program (2.3 million) almost equaled the number aged 65 or over who were completely dependent on Old Age Assistance (2.4 million).

But in addition to the "baby boom," the recent years have also been marked by an increase in the number of aged. The fact that 14 per cent of all those 65 and over in 1960 were completely dependent on Old Age Assistance shows that Social Security, Railroad Retirement, civil service retirement, and private pension plans have been far from universal or adequate in their coverage.

social insurance programs

The Social Security System, as the New School study points out, is based on the idea that an individual worker's income is to be spread over periods in which he does not earn, as well as over those in which he does earn. Thus it is a system deeply intermeshed with the labor market and with participation in it.

The major policy debates of the 1950's and 1960's have centered on coverage and the level of benefits of various social insurance systems. This is still the essence of the debate about minimum wages and unemployment insurance.

Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance now covers almost 95 per cent of all employees and self-employed persons. Yet those with limited employment experience are largely excluded. Social insurance financed out of paychecks does not help people who do not receive paychecks. The bulk of Social Security benefits – useful as they are – still goes to those who have worked steadily, and are not in the greatest need.

Most discussions of social welfare until the 1960's have bypassed entirely the actual problem posed by contemporary poverty. The efforts to extend Social Security have been designed primarily to cope with aberrations of the economic system. They have not been designed to bring the abject poor into the system.

THE FEASIBILITY OF PREVENTING POVERTY

The increase in the level of poverty-band budget standards over the years – including the low "subsistence" budget standards set for relief eligibility – poses a question. Are we not making the eradication of poverty impossible by continually raising budget levels?

The answer, says the New School report, is clearly no. It is no, the report explains, for the reason that the definition of poverty in each generation represents not only the contemporary life style of the low income classes; it also represents a life style below which society agrees that its citizens shall not be allowed to fall. Definitions of poverty therefore reflect not only habitual expenditure at the poverty band level but also reflect current social ideals.

If people are complacent about the living conditions of those within the poverty band, standards will not change much. If public opinion discerns great inequities in life styles on the poverty level, standards may improve. The test is whether people are willing to pay what it costs. Relief budgets, Poverty Amid Affluence reminds us, tell a great deal about United States ideals as well as the realities of life at low income levels.

Accepting it as possible (or probable) that the income share of those in the bottom 20 per cent of the United States income distribution will remain at about 5 per cent of total national income, it would still be possible to eliminate poverty up to the "subsistence" level, at least, by bringing national income up so that those in the bottom segment of the income distribution obtain what society currently accepts as minimum "subsistence" standards.

The New School staff does not see new capital investment as a realistic means of attaining this goal. There is not sufficient private capital available to step up private investment from about $25 billion per year to the between $65 and $85 billion the New School staff thinks would be needed.

redistribution of 3 per cent

On the other hand, a redistribution of 3 per cent of current income or less – amounting in 1960 to $4.6 billion and representing a rise of less than 10 per cent in public anti-poverty expenditures – would appear to be not only feasible but easy.

Feasibility, of course, includes a political dimension. Although Congress in 1966 appropriated supplemental rental payments for selected low-income groups, it did so grudgingly. If Congress won't authorize such rent subsidies on the basis of low income alone, it is hard to see how it could be induced to authorize any other type of direct, broad-scale subsidy. Nevertheless, many serious students of the problem, including Barry Goldwater's 1964 adviser Dr. Milton Friedman, have proposed such subsidies, in the form of a "negative income tax." Some writers (such as Friedman) see this as a way of doing away with various welfare programs and eliminating large numbers of government bureaucrats. Others see them as an American counterpart to family allowances now being paid in some other advanced industrial nations.

Says the New School staff: "In the future as in the past, the final determination of what society must do will be made in terms of what level of living the United States 'ought' to consider minimal in terms of current possibilities and expectations."

Most anti-poverty programs existing or proposed in the early 1960's, as the New School report points out, centered on Social Security programs which largely exclude the poor. A true anti-poverty campaign would concentrate on those who are virtually outside the economy. The efforts of the Office of Economic Opportunity are of this type.

a practical program

The New School report adds: "It is now widely accepted that differences in the rate of economic development of various societies can be explained as much by different amounts and rates of 'investment in human beings' as by investments in capital goods. Such investment in human beings might take one or more of the following forms: educational enrichment programs aimed at the very young children of the poor, adult literacy and retraining programs, specialized training for new entrants to the labor market, national health services financed out of general revenues, fair employment practices legislation, increased emphasis on public housing, and mass investment in the underdeveloped areas of the United States. Extension of minimum-wage coverage could be accomplished without extensive governmental expenditure.

"Private welfare agencies can pioneer in formulating new programs . . . as does the Ford Foundation in its 'Big City' programs of enriched education for deprived urban children."

The report concludes: "Although anti-poverty policies are necessarily linked, as a practical matter, to the gross national product, and specifically to the amount of it needed to prevent poverty, they should not be considered primarily a means of stimulating the nation's production. Present-day affluence makes it possible to do away with poverty. If we do not do so now, there is no way of knowing whether the problem will in the future be equally manageable."

President's Welfare Proposals Branded 'Timid' and 'Toothless'

POVERTY 2/4/67

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3— A spokesman for a national organization of welfare recipients criticized President Johnson's welfare proposals today as "too timid, token, tardy and toothless."

George A. Wiley, director of the Poverty/Rights Action Center, made the statement at a news conference on the eve of a national welfare rights meeting here.

Mr. Wiley said he expected more than 200 delegates, representing welfare recipient groups in 21 states, to attend the meeting. After sessions tomorrow and Sunday, the delegates will lobby on Capitol Hill for stronger welfare legislation.

Proposals in the Economic Message of the President, Mr. Wiley said, are "not much encouragement to welfare recipients, who are among the poorest of all the poor people in the nation."

He said studies have shown that 95 per cent of welfare recipients were unable to work because of physical disabilities or because of child-care necessities and "not a single state's average welfare payment is as high as the poverty standard."

Definition of Poverty

The Federal definition of poverty is annual income below $3,200 for a family of four and $1,570 for a single person.

Mr. Wiley criticized President Johnson's plan to establish a two-year study commission to look into proposals for a "guaranteed minimum income." Such a step, Mr. Wiley said, would insure "that there will be no major steps to raise income for the jobless poor for at least two years."

He also criticized the proposal to require each state to set its welfare payments at a level that at least meets its own definition of need. He called the proposal a "sad substitute" for a national standard at least as high as the Federal Government's poverty standard.

Mr. Wiley praised the President's proposal to remove a part of what has been called a 100 per cent tax on welfare recipients— a reduction in public assistance of a dollar for each dollars of earnings — but he said the President gave no indication of the level of income exemption that he would propose to Congress.

Mr. Wiley noted that the President did not propose that the training program for unemployed parents be made mandatory for the states. Only 21 states participate in that program now, he said.

'Uncle Tomahawks'

MEMPHIS, Feb. 3 (UPI)— An Indian leader told the President's poverty commission today that Government efforts to help the rural poor were hindered by "Uncle Tomahawks."

Clyde Warrior, a 27-year-old Ponca Indian from Tahlequah, Okla., and president of the National Indian Youth Council, described "Uncle Tomahawks" as those Indian leaders allied with the Bureau of Indian Affairs who "say what the Government wants them to say."

Mr. Warrior was one of several persons heard at the second of three regional hearings held by the President's National Advisory Commission on Rural Poverty.

One hearing was held in Tucson, Ariz., last week and the third will be in Washington, Feb. 15-17. The commission will make recommendations to the White House.

Mr. Warrior advocated Federal aid without strings and an end to "paternalistic control." He said decisions on how to spend the money should be made locally.

Lag in Poverty Aid Not Blamed on War

Federal support for the poor has been falling off since 1960 and the war in Vietnam is not the reason why less money is available for the war on poverty, the former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers said here Wednesday.

Addressing a conference on welfare problems and public policy, Leon N. Keyserling said that state and local governments have actually done a better job in the war on poverty than has the federal government.

Keyserling said, "The truth is that the national government is not making a full effort in the poverty program."

He said that federally guaranteed full employment and minimum income are necessary if the War on Poverty is to be successful.

Keyserling said that the problem of poverty is not an economic one but is a "moral problem." He said that if the War on Poverty is in trouble, it is because of poor analysis of the fundamental causes of poverty and of the line that needs to be taken to correct the problem.

"There are two main reasons for poverty," Keyserling said. "First, the absence of adequate job opportunity and pay. And second, the absence of an adequate system to care for those who are unable to work for one reason or another."

NOT CORRECT

Keyserling said that current figures which set the nation's unemployed at 4 per cent are incorrect. He said, "This 4 per cent that you read about does not represent the same people all of the time. In other words, some people are unemployed at one time of the year and others are unemployed at another. The real unemployment figure is in the neighborhood of 7 to 8 per cent with 16 per cent of the people losing about one-fourth of the year in unemployment."

Keyserling suggested doubling the welfare checks of persons 65 and over.

Lisle Carter, assistant secretary in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, told the group that the United States has the resources to see that every citizen is housed, clothed and fed.

MONEY FIRST

Carter said that while we have the resources to reduce poverty substantially that it is "doubtful whether we have the commitment."

Carter, who is the highest ranking Negro in HEW, said that what the poor need first— before services — is "simply money." He added, however, that services should be made available whenever possible and should not wait until everyone has the money they need.

The HEW official said that until now welfare payments have been based on the character of the recipient. He said eligibility should be determined by need, not character.

AT PARLEY

2 Women Seek State GOP Votes

Both candidates for president of the National Federation of Republican Women politicked for the support of Georgia GOP women on the eve of a state convention here.

Gladys O'Donnell of Long Beach, Calif., who was nominated by the national nominating committee, and Phyllis Schlafly of Alton, Ill., who also seeks the presidency, were at a reception in Atlanta.

They will speak Thursday at the biennial convention of the Georgia Federation of Republican Women. The keynote speaker will be Sen. John G. Tower, R-Tex., one of the speculative prospects for second place on the GOP national ticket in 1968.

The two candidates failed to encounter each other directly during more than one hour at the reception. In separate interviews, each claimed solid records of supporting Republican candidates and shied from any labels.

Neither would venture any guesses about a presidential nominee for the party next year. "I hear talk," said Mrs. Schlafly, "but nobody seems to have come to any conclusions."

Mrs. O'Donnell said she did not believe in "hyphenated Republicans."

"Well, look what it did for us the last time," she said, referring to the divisive 1964 Republican campaign in which Barry Goldwater was defeated by President Lyndon B. Johnson.

The national federation will meet May 5-6 in Wasington for election of officers.

Birth Rate Lowest Since '36

M. Herald 3-6-67

WASHINGTON —(UPI) — The birth rate in the U.S. during 1966 hit the lowest level since 1936 and total births were the lowest since 1950, the Public Health Service (PHS) reports.

The PHS said the birth rate dropped to 18.5 births for each 1,000 population, continuing the decline from 1957, the most recent peak year, when the rate was 25.3.

Births totaled 3,629,000, down 131,000 from 1965, the PHS said.

The fertility rate also declined to 91.8 births for each 1,000 women, the lowest since 1957, but well above the 76-79 rate of 1933-39, the PHS said.

The only rising statistic reported was the number of marriages, 1,844,000 in 1966.

The health service said the declining percentage of women 15-44 years of age in the total population was one reason for the lower birth rate.

Another factor was the drop from an unusually high birth rate during the 1950's among women over 30. The high rates during the 1950's were attributed to the making up for births postponed during World War II and the late 1930's.

Another major factor in 1966 was the drop in birth rates among younger couples. The PHS said this was thought to be caused partly by a tendency toward wider spacing of births and a decline in the number of children desired.

The PHS made no mention of the effect of improved birth control techniques. It said the causes of the declining birth rate among young couples had "not yet been decided with certainty."

The increase in the number of marriages is the result of the large number of young people reaching marriageable age. These are the children born in the post-war baby boom, the PHS said.

The upward trend in the number of marriages should continue and cause a similar trend in the number of births, it added.

U.S. Approves New Plan to Cost $4-Million a Year—Court Must Also Act

5/28/67

By SETH S. KING

Another attempt to provide free legal service to the poor is to be made under a new program organized by the city and financed by the Federal Government.

Ten neighborhood law offices are to be established and coordinated by a central agency called Community Action for Legal Services.

In a joint announcement yesterday, Mayor Lindsay and Robert J. Mangum, Northeast Regional Director for the Office of Economic Opportunity, said that the $4-million-a-year program had received Federal approval.

But it still must be approved by the Appellate Division of the State Supreme Court.

An earlier version of the program was rejected by the Appellate Division last November. The court called the plan "unworkable because of excessive layers of organization." It also said the program would compete too directly with anti-poverty law offices operating in the same areas.

New Plan Formed

However, the court made the rejection "with regret" and invited new proposals "free from infirmities."

Mayor Lindsay, in his statement yesterday, said that immediately after the adverse ruling the city's Community Development Agency had begun revising the original program. This was accomplished, he said, after extensive negotiations with city and county bar associations and the Office of Economic Opportunity.

"The new program is a milestone in our efforts to make equal justice a reality for all the people of the city," Mr. Lindsay declared.

The Association of the Bar of the City of New York announced yesterday it accepted the new program, as did the five county bar associations.

Russel D. Niles, president of the city bar association, said in a statement that the organized bar would have preferred "a simpler structure."

However, the bar associations would accept the plan with the reservation that they be free to recommend improvements later, he said.

"They will do everything that they can properly do to make the plan succeed," Mr. Niles asserted.

The revised program appears to meet some of the objections the Appellate Division had to the original.

8 More Groups Due

The Legal Aid Society and Mobilization for Youth are already providing legal services to the poor with Federal funds provided last year.

The new plan would join these two groups with eight others to be established by and directed through the new legal agency.

The court had objected to the extensive use of persons other than lawyers in the original plan. The revised plan calls for the staffing of the neighborhood law centers by full-time lawyers, with law students assisting them on a part-time basis.

As described by Mr. Mangum and the Mayor, the lawyers in the neighborhood legal centers would represent poor clients in civil and criminal cases. They would also appear for them at police stations and advise them before arraignment.

The legal centers would have funds to pay court costs for the poor and other expenses involved in cases.

In addition, the organizations would sponsor research, handle test cases, prepare and comment on legislation, and "educate the people of the community about their legal rights."

Maximum Income Set

Maximum Income Set

To be eligible for free legal service under the plan a person must earn an annual base income of no more than $3,000, with an additional $500 for each dependent. However, in certain hardship cases, this maximum might be raised.

The statement outlining the new plan noted that its employes would be restricted in political activities and the neighborhood law offices would be forbidden to represent any political faction.

Whenever possible, the statement noted, investigators and other nonlegal personnel in the law centers would be recruited from the people to be served in the poverty neighborhoods.

Arthur Blaustein, director of public relations for the regional agency o fthe Office of Economic Opportunity, said a great deal of painstaking work had been done to meet the Appellate Division's objections.

"We hope to get a ruling before the summer recess, and if this is in our favor, we can start the program immediately afterward," he said.

Makeup of Agency

The board of directors of the new legal agency will consist of 20 lawyers and 10 lay representatives from the communities to be served. The latter will be chosen by the 10 legal groups under the over-all agency.

Among the 20 lawyers will be representatives from all the county bar associations and the minority-group bar associations. Also among the 20 will be two law professors and five lawyers chosen from the city at large.

Prof. Willis L. W. Reese of Columbia University and AssociateProf. Thomas M. Quinn of Fordham University have already been named as the faculty representatives.

The following five lawyers have ben named attorneys-at-large:

Robert L. Carter, general counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Burke Marshall, general counsel, of International Business Machines Corporation.

Orrin G. Judd of Goldstein, Judd & Gurrfein.

Edward V. Sparer, director of Columbia's Center on Social Welfare Policy and Law.

Theodore Pearson, of Kelley, Drye, Newhall, Maginess & Warren.

Dear Bob:

Our report should perhaps be divided into the following general categories, although not necessarily in the order in which I have listed them:

(1) An account of the historical and philosophical background of FCM with particular emphasis on those qualities which separate it distinctly from its parent organization CDGM and its competitor MAP.

(2) A factual and rather detailed account of the medical, social, and economic problems that we saw on our visit to the homes and centers.

(3) Certain background information concerning the economic and political conditions and attitudes of the region.

(4) The acute and long-term medical needs of FCM and the recommended program of medical aid.

(5) Observations concerning the needs of the region with which we should immediately concern ourselves.

(6) Recommendations for the utilization of our report.

(1) FCM is an organization of poverty stricken, oppressed, and uneducated Negro people who have acquired a vision of how they can escape from their predicament through their own efforts to help their children despite great odds and pressures from many powerful sources. These people have held steadfastly to their belief that their children can best be helped, not by others, but by the efforts of their own parents. These parents believe that they must, at any price, preserve their right to decide every level what direction their program should take and who should administer it.

Here in six Mississippi counties, the American ideal of democracy was first encouraged, then ~~studied~~ stunted as help was withdrawn and self-determination denied. With unbelievable strength of conviction, the friends have stood together in the effort to maintain their rights of dignity, independence, and self-determination, knowing that their children can achieve these same values only if they first see them manifested in their parents.

We saw evidences of this inner strength and determination everywhere we went, in all types of people, but perhaps I remember best the purity of its manifestations in the face and voice and presence of Mrs. Burns in Belzoni.

The essence of the story of the Friends seemed to be encapsulated into those few tense moments as we stood on the tiny yard before the little tenant house in which she lived, and listened to this gray-haired, handsome, and poised woman tell us in measured, articulate words of her long fight to keep intact the children's center in her community.

Aligned against her were the hostility of the whites and the efforts of a stronger, better financed, and better equipped organization to take over. She seemed unaware of a sudden increase in numbers of passing automobiles filled with whites who slowed to stare and to hoot and to call out insults. As she talked, she communicated to all of us her strength, her fearlessness, and her determination that nothing would stand in the way of her effort to provide her children with what they needed most - care, affection, and an example of dignity from their own parents, not from outsiders, however well meaning.

(2) It seems most important that we describe in detail what we saw as we visited the homes of the parents and the centers which they are operating for their children.

Each doctor was taken separately into a number of homes from which came the young children who attended the centers. We saw the children, talked with the parents and gained a mass of information from which gradually emerged a pattern which seemed to fit almost every community we visited.

The homes were tiny, usually two or three rooms, mostly in poor repair, located on narrow alleys, and surrounded by accumulated filth and debris in which the children were forced to play.

Most houses had running water; few had inside toilets; many were without screens or adequate ventilation. The land allocated to each dwelling was so limited that the houses were oppressively close, no play areas for the children or stretching room for adults, and certainly no room for a garden through which a family might supplement its diet.

COPY

At one house which might have had enough space for a garden, the landlord had forbidden the occupants to have one. We were told that this was common practice both by landlords in town and also on the plantations, who take every possible measure to see that the economic bondage of the Negro is perpetuated.

This seemed to be borne out by our observation of the tenant houses on the plantations, where several houses were grouped closely together around barns or equipment sheds and where the crops were planted almost up to the doorsteps, leaving no room for garden, pig pen, cow, or chicken coop.

The houses were visited were usually occupied by worn mothers looking much older than their actual ages and children ranging in number from four to ten, most often there was no father and the explanation for the absence was either "we are separated" or "I don't know where he is". Although neat, the houses were pitifully bare and the children often poorly clothed and always barefooted in spite of a soil infested with hookworm, broken glass, and rusty tin.

When questions were asked about diet, the answers were always the same - a little rice or biscuit for breakfast, dried beans or peas with occasional salt pork for lunch - if lunch could be afforded, and for supper more rice or bread with occasional molasses or peanut butter. Only one family I saw ever had milk and this was reserved for the "sickliest" ones. The children "goes to bed hongry and gets up hongry and don't ever know nothing else in between".

In almost every household, serious illness of one or more of the children had occurred in the recent past and brought forth stories of no doctor available because there was no money to pay, refusal of hospitalization for the same reason, or in an occasional case, of a hospital bill owed by a mother who barely had enough income to subsist, but who was being required to make her weekly payments out of unbelievably small wages. One mother said to me that she only went to a doctor herself or took her child when she was convinced that not to go might mean death.

Running noses and legs covered with indolent sores was the rule rather than the exception,-evidences of lowered resistence to disease due to malnutrition and poor hygiene. Thin arms, sunken eyes, lethargic behaviour, and swollen bellies were everywhere to be seen. Even cursory examination of tongues, eyes, and nailbeds disclosed unmistakable evidence of anemia and vitamin deficiencies in many of the children.

An orthopedic surgeon in Jackson and a Negro physician in Yazoo City told me that almost without exception, these children required pre-operative transfusions before any surgery could be performed.

COPY

One survey by Dr. Murman in Lands County, Alabama, a county similar to these, the average hemoglobin level in 80% of the children was below 9.4 gm., a level incompatible with a state of vigor, with learning or with sustaining normally any kind of physical or mental activity.

Iron, vitamins, medicines were simply unobtainable for there was no money to purchase them.

The financial resources available to these families were so meager as to make it beyond my comprehension how they were able to exist. One young mother of five children worked ten hours per day, five and a half days per week, for $15.00 per week, as a domestic for a locally prosperous white family. Out of this she paid $8.50 per week rent and bought food and clothes with the rest.

Another mother managed to earn $25.00 per week, - unusual I was assured - by holding three jobs.

Others without a job or a child old enough to remain at home out of school and look after the younger ones, subsisted on surplus food and handouts and welfare checks large enough only to prevent total and immediate starvation, but not large enough to provide minimal subsistence.

The usual sources of support which one would expect to be available to these unfortunate people are almost non-existent and where they do exist, uniformally they are the enemy rather than the friend.

Time after time we heard stories of dehumanizing treatment or refusal of aid by welfare departments in the county. There seemed to be no pattern or standards by which one could determine whether he could receive welfare help. There did seem to be a pattern of active discouragement by the welfare department of anyone applying for help. Personal indignities, unexplained cuts in size of checks, outright refusal of aid, no funds for hospitalization or medical care, all of these were reported to us repeatedly.

One example is burned indelibly into my memory. A forty-nine year old woman with whom I talked was herself the mother of fourteen children, all of whom had died in infancy but one. Her husband was also dead.

A year ago her husband's nephew abandoned his three small children, ages three, four, five, leaving them with her and she resolved to give them a home. Uneducated, destitute herself, but full of love for these children, she spoke with ~~emotion the~~ strong feeling "Doctor, ever since I took these chillen on, my life has been hell", and then the story poured out.

COPY

She earns $5.00 per week working two days as a domestic. The welfare department supplies a maximum check of approximately $26.00 per month for aid to dependent children. Her rent is $8.00 per week for a tumbled down house.

Each month as she goes to the welfare department for her check, she is subjected to all sorts of personal indignities including pressing inquiries about her sex life and whether she has a man in the house. At regular intervals she is awakened at 2:00 A.M. or later by white male welfare department workers who demand that they be allowed to search the house for male occupant. On other nights she can hear them prowling around the house, listening at her windows for sounds inside to indicate the presence of a man.

Her check may be delayed for days or arbitrarily cut while "we make an investigation". Her neighbors have been encouraged to report her activities by the simple measures of threatening to withdraw their checks if they don't.

Yet this woman,threatened with loss of her financial support, harrassed at every turn by both her neighbors and her oppressors, remains strong in her determination to give these children a home, affection, and a chance in life. Every day these three children attend a Friend's Center.

This woman's story seemed so extreme that I questioned several members of the local county Council of the Friends about her reliability. They assured me that her story was not exaggerated.

The county health departments are only slightly less identifiable as the enemy as are the welfare departments and perhaps even less useful to survival.

They perform a few services such as tuberculin testing and innoculations for those parents who know about them and are able to get their children to the clinics. They do little else. They have formally and in writing refused to participate in organized immunization programs for the centers with the excuse that parents must be with the children to be instructed in possible reaction to the shots.

The parents tell us that there are no generally available programs in health education and sanitation. At the health departments, the Negroes are segregated, subjected to personal indignities, discouraged from using the facilities. I saw one little girl who had a nasty, partially healed laceration of her hand who had been carried to the health department for a tetanus booster. She was given the injection, but the nurse not only did not dress the cut, she refused even to look at it.

COPY

Occasionally, charity clinics are provided for sick children, but exams are brief and no follow-ups are scheduled and most important of all, no medicine is provided for people who have absolutely no chance of buying it.

Hospital facilities for the Negro poor are nearly non-existent. As one man said, "If you are not protected through an employer with hospital insurance and if you don't have the $50.00 down-payment, your only choice is to go home and die". Apparently, charity hospital funds do not exist except for a rare, unpredictable case which is, I assume, used for window dressing in the department report.

The administration of medical care is still on a strictly segregated basis. Negro doctors are not permitted membership in local medical societies. In communities where all Negro hospitals exist, such as in Yazoo City, white doctors refuse to serve on its staff. In Yazoo City, because of the refusal of the white doctors to go to the Negro hospital, one courageous and overworked Negro physician, the only Negro doctor in town, is forced to provide all of the hospital care for Negroes including surgery and obstetrics. Complicated cases beyond his ability, must be sent forty or fifty miles to Jackson regardless of how grave their conditions.

Proventive medicine, health education, basic sanitation, are nearly non-existent. I saw one alley, fronted on both sides by a number of small dwellings, used by a business backed up to the alley as its private garbage dump which was so labeled by large sign. This total absence of humanity on the part of the white man must strike rage into the hearts of even the mildest of those parents whose children must play around the garbage and among the rats and broken bottles.

No program of birth control is available to the poor although every mother with whom I talked expressed a desire for help in limiting her family. A few who did know about "the pill" had not been able to afford it. Maternal health care is available on limited basis at some of the health departments, but almost all the poor mothers have their babies at home, sometimes alone, sometimes with the help of a midwife.

Medicare, which would solve the problem of hospital care for at least the portion of the population over sixty-five, is of little help in Mississippi. Many of the white owned and operated hospitals have elected to retain segregation and give up their eligibility for Medicare payments.

To summarize briefly, the medical needs of the Friends encompass the entire range of our medical knowledge from nutrition, sanitation, and health education to the more technical and highly skilled services for acute medical care, birth control and hospitalization. They are without them all and they desperately need them all.

COPY

The pre-school centers, dotted about both the rural and urbnm areas of six Mississippi counties offer one an immediate and painfil distillation of all the despair and aspirations, the dignity and the pathos of these wonderful people and their children.

We visited a large number of them, some in churches, others in plain little wooden barracks-like buildings, and one in an American Legion Hut. The impact was the same wherever we went.

They were crowded, oppressively hot, and filled with lovely little children between the ages of three and five. All children were scrubbed and dressed in their best and all wore shoes. Mostly they were shy with strangers, but when unaware of observation, were smiling and obviously enjoying themselves. Some seemed healthy and sturdy, others weak and apathetic. Coughs and dripping noses were common and on several occasions acutely ill children were brought up to us by the teachers who had no place to turn for medical help. There were a significant number with congenital defects such as hairlips and cleft palates; a few were mentally retarded or exhibited evidence of brain or spinal cord damage. All of these should have qualified for special schools or institutional care or for corrective medical care.

The teachers were usually mothers of children of the Center, largely uneducated and somewhat superficially trained. Their devotion to the children and the pride in their work was unmistakable. Time after time we talked with a woman, uneducated, the mother usually of six to ten children, with no previous work experience except as a field hand or a domestic. Amazingly, these people were articulate, poised and competent in their roles as teachers. Through their love and concern for their children, they had acquired their very sense of self-respect, dignity, and independence which they so much desire to nurture in their charges.

Repeatedly, I asked what changes the teachers had observed in the children after they had been in the Centers for a few weeks. The answers were usually the same. The children, previously shy, withdrawn or apathetic, became cheerful, outgoing and active. They had learned to share, to participate cooperatively in group activity and to communicate with each other and their teachers. For the first time, many of the children experienced a relationship with someone who cared and to whom they could turn when troubled.

One teacher told me with pride how she had handled a youngster who had come to the school defiant, combative, overly aggressive and had been unable to adjust himself to the others in his group. Instead of punishment, she had given him simple tasks not assigned to the others and as he performed them, she rewarded him with praise and affection.

COPY

Many of us go to school for years to gain insights these teachers have acquired as they work with the children.

The Centers themselves were distressingly bare. There was never enough equipment. The few toys available were made by the teachers. Crayons, books, paper and musical instruments were hard to find.

Most distressing of all was the absence of adequate food. On the day of our visit, not a single center had been able to supply a full meal to its hungry children. Most had scraped together a few bites - a cookie and Kool-aid, but some had nothing. One teacher said to me - "The most difficult part of this program is when a child licks his plate clean and says "I want some mo'" and you look in the pot and there ain't no mo'".

After visiting the homes and centers for two days, we ended our stay in the Delta by attending a mass meeting of the Friends from Humphries and Leflore Counties who came primarily to hear their visitors tell what they had seen and felt as they had traveled around the communities.

Two hundred strong, they packed the tiny Legion Hut and it took only a short while for us to sense their need for hope and encouragement and for assurance that what they were doing was right and necessary and important, - not only for their children - but important in bringing new meaning to our concepts of democracy and human dignity.

We learned quickly that for too long they had experienced no contact with or encouragement from anyone outside their communities and that some were having doubts as to whether the difficult struggle was worth the pains and anguish it demanded of them.

Their responses to our words of sympathy, understanding and encouragement and our promises to try to bring help, were overwhelming in their emotional impact.

That hour of uninhibited exchange of thoughts and feelings between those parents and their only contact with a friendly world beyond, was an experience that will always live in hour hearts. We left there knowing that, with just a minimum of support from those who care, the Friends will never give up ther effort to build for themselves a more meaningful life.

(3) As a background for the recommendations of the report, certain information should be included concerning the economic and political conditions and attitudes which bear directly on the almost insurmountable difficulties that the Delta people have experienced in attempting to solve their problems.

COPY

During the past twenty years over two hundred thousand workers have been displaced from their jobs as farm workers due to mechanization of the huge plantation farming operations. With no other jobs available to them, the workers have been forced either to leave the state or to remain on the farm or in the towns, existing on private and public charity.

Unable to find a job and unable to provide for his family, many a worker has left his family in search of work outside the region. His absence at least gives his wife and children a chance to receive some aid from welfare sources which they could not receive if an able-bodied, even though unemployed, male remained in the family.

There are no industries in the Delta to which he can apply for a job. Service jobs, usch as janitors, porters, yardman, are almst non-existent. Credit is no longer extended at the plantation store and the man is not permitted to garden or have livestock if he lives on the plantation.

Sources of public charity are totally inadequate to provide even for survival. Dependent children receive payments amounting to approximately 25% of what the state of Mississippi estimates that it is necessary for minimal subsistence. These payments were reduced, I am told, after the Civil Rights demonstrations of 1964.

Provisions for food supplies by the welfare department and the USDA are totally inadequate. The family may use their welfare department checks to purchase food stamps, but if they do, no money remains for rent, medical care, and clothes. If they do not buy food stamps and subsist on surplus commodity hand-outs, this means attempt at survival on the most inadequate of diets, both in quality and amount. The commodities usually consist of fluor, dried beans, dried milk, and occasionally a little peanut butter or a can of meat. By almost unanimous agreement of the county/boards of supervisors, no county is permitted to have both the food stamps and surplus food programs. Neither is adequate alone to sustain life above the condition of bare existence.

There is little doubt in my mind that the situation as described represents an unwritten but generally accepted inhumane plan on the part of those in control of the state to eliminate the Negro Mississipian, either by driving him out or by starving him to death.

How else can one explain the denial of the tenant the right to have a garden and livestock, the prohibition of both food stamp and surplus food programs to the same person, the reduction in welfare help to the barest minimum, the absence of even the feeblest attempt to provide medical care to the destitute and sick, and the overpowering atmosphere of hatred which pervades the land?

COPY

We were told by knowledgeable people that there is organized resistence to industry coming into the Delta, more jobs were not wanted which would threaten the available supply of labor. We heard recurring rumors of unauthorized sterilization (when ~~they~~ we start cutting, they we start running) and we were told that the only assistance a Negro male could be certain of is a bus ticket out of the state if he goes to the White Citizens' Council.

The pattern seems to be clearly identifiable and my fears were substantiated by the opinions of others, both Negro and white, with whom we talked. The state of Mississippi is a vast concentration camp in which live a great group of poor, uneducated, semi-starving people, from whom all but token public support has been withdrawn. These people are completely isolated from the outside world who might care and help. They have no where to turn for material aid or moral support. They must have both in order to survive.

(4) Our Committee report should contain not only recommendations for medical needs of Friends, but perhaps it might be worthwhile to point out long-term measures, initiated on state or regional levels, which would bring significant and lasting benefits not only to the Friends, but to the poor wherever they are and whatever their color.

The most urgent and overriding need of the Friends is food. Any medical wants must be subordinated to the task of seeing that these children are adequately fed. The vary accomplishment of this would provide the single most important measure for maintaining good health.

The second greatest need of the Friends is adequate funds to maintain operation of the Children's Centers - money for minimal salaries, gasoline, and minimal equipment. Again, in my opinion, this need takes precedence over medical ones, for without the psychological motivation of both parents and children which the Centers are accomplishing, medical care would have little lasting value. The will to survive and to grow in self-respect and in independence must be maintained at all costs.

From a purely medical point of view, certain needs seem most urgent and most possible of accomplishment with the facilities available:

(a) Physical examination of each child to include blood count, urinalysis, stool examination, tuberculin rest.
(b) Follow-up treatment and/or referral as indicated.
(c) A vitamin supplement for each child. This need not be given daily as most daily vitamin preparations contain far more than minimal daily requirements. This requires no medical personnel to administer.

COPY

(d) Immunization program - could be done by nurse under supervision of medical director.

(e) Birth control information and medication. This program could be organized and donducted by the health counselor under supervision of medical director and would not require his personal attention.

(f) A fund must be available to buy medicine for those who cannot afford them.

(g) The above program would cost a minimum of $50.00 per child per year, perhaps more. In my opinion, the staff and board of F.C.M. are capable of organizing this program and getting it under way and of dispersing the funds as the needs arise.

(h) The above recommendations do not make provision for hospitalization of the children. Title 19 may offer the solution to this problem ultimately, but much depends on what each state is willing to do. A much wider definition of Crippled Children would offer hospital and physician's care to a larger number of children. Apparently, now in Mississippi, the Crippled Children's Funds will provide only for neurosurgical, plastic, and orthopedic surgical needs of children.

The state board could broaden that definition but has refused to do so and would probably need pressure put on it in the future to do so. This problem seems immediately almost insoluble given the apparent absence of Charity Hospitalization Funds and the state of public indifference to the health of the poor.

(5) Improvements in the welfare and health departments are urgently needed, but will certainly not come to pass unless the Federal government exerts the weight of its considerable influence:

(a) Increase in welfare payments to a realistic level.

(b) Employment of Negroes in the departments. I saw many Negroes capable of the kind of investigational work required to distribute welfare services.

(c) Prodding of local health departments to provide the public health services they are supposed to furnish.

(d) Again, desegregation of the department staffs would go far to assure that the departments are receiving proper information about the actual needs of the people, and at the same time, Negro employees would improve the image of the health departments among the Negroes.

(e) Food stamp program is inadequate and is helping only a very few people. The price of the stamps and the size of the welfare payments conspire to make the program of little value.

(f) The surplus commodity foods program seems to have the best potential for reaching and helping more people. It requires no complex rules of eligibility, compared to the food stamp program and is available to all people under specified annual income regardless of whether on welfare. Unfortunately, the food products are mostly carbohydrate and fail to provide a diet which contains enough protein and vitamins for maintenance of health.

The failure of Surplus Commodity Program to be available in counties where food stamps are provided, the inadequate food, and the alleged ineffectiveness of distribution to the really poor - all suggest the need for stronger, more effective program by the U.S.D.A. It seems tragically obvious that the past policy of the United States Government to utilize state and local people and local agencies to implement its programs, ~~have~~ has not been successful in Mississippi. Certainly in the fields of welfare, health and food distribution, more vigorous and direct government action is needed.

(6) We talked with Fred Mangrum, the young dedicated and talented Negro who directs the F.C.M., about the implications of the present situation for the future. What are the chances for long-term survival of the unemployed Delta worker with no new job in sight and no hope of help within his own state? What can be done now which might provide immediate jobs? His answers were thoughtful, brave, but not very reassuring to me.

Voter registration and voter education, in his opinion, are the keys. Political representation by the Negro will quickly mean better services, the encouragement of industry, the creation of new jobs. In the meantime, Mangrum points out that there are many hundreds of Federal programs, which, if properly implemented, could provide massive helpt to the area - self-help housing, on the job training, assistance to small businesses, training and employment of people in the social services - all are among the programs ~~elicited~~ listed. The programs are available. People of experience and dedication, in numbers needed to operate them, are apparently not available.

I mentioned guaranteed annual income and he was quick to agree that such a law would cut through the thickets of regulations, standards, and redtape, eliminating opportunities for foot dragging and discrimination - in a program designed to provide adequate financial aid quickly to everyone who needs it. We agreed that what we had seen in three days in the Delta was a powerful argument in support of such a law.

(7) The disposition of our report certainly depends upon who is willing to listen to us. I think it important that we present it to Senator Kennedy, Secretaries Gardner and Freeman, Sargent Shriver. I do hope that you and Bob Anderson will be able to find ways of distributing widely the story of this "Miracle of Friends".

It Isn't True That Nobody Starves In America

By ROBERT SHERRILL

HEYWOOD BROUN, watching a breadline in 1932, is said to have remarked with cynical sympathy, "Poor people wouldn't be such a bother if they didn't starve so publicly." Since the end of the Depression, and especially in recent years with the development of more sophisticated welfare programs, poor people have been much more discreet about their starving.

Occasionally, the public peace of mind is elbowed by a news story indicating that something may not be quite right—a Mississippi family is reported to have eaten a cat; some Kentucky coal miners are seen eating only potato peelings for lunch; in Washington, D. C., pensioners scramble for discarded lettuce and cabbage leaves behind one of the largest markets. But most poor people are not observed in their ingenuities, and, in any event, the Government lists only 1,279 deaths from "malnutrition" and 197 deaths from "hunger, thirst, and exposure" in 1965, the last year for which there are statistics.

This, coupled with the natural optimism of Americans, has pushed into public faith an almost religious tenet—a second miracle of the loaves and fishes—called Nobody Starves in America, with the alternate title, No Adult Is Completely Broke For Long.

As with most economic dogmas, both are false, yet the foundation heaves a bit when either is challenged. And this may account for the present unease and unhappiness among some high Washington officials as they observe the Senate Anti-Poverty Subcommittee going around the country holding meetings and reviving the political topic of hunger as it has not been revived since the nineteen-thirties. (When, on Senator George Murphy's motion, the subcommittee unanimously asked President Johnson to send emergency food to Mississippi to stop wide starvation, even the Office of Economic Opportunity jumped in to belittle the subcommittee's findings.) With all the powerful antagonisms the tour is arousing, its revival mood would probably not achieve much, except that one of the evangelists on the subcommittee happens to be Senator Robert F. Kennedy, whose disciples fill many a grotto and thrive on opposition.

THE problem that a majority on this subcommittee—Joseph Clark of Pennsylvania, both Kennedy brothers, Jacob Javits of New York, et al.—is attempting to attack is illustrated perfectly in the two charity food programs administered by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

The older program deals in surplus commodities. The men who put it through Congress never posed as humanitarians—the basic purpose of the commodities program is to support and stabilize farm prices, not support and stabilize needy people. It distributes free food from a larder stocked with whatever the Government's price support program has piled up, and the major items include flour, cornmeal, rice, grits and dry beans.

None of this is expected to supply more than three-fourths of minimum diet requirements. The only meat, when there is any, is a canned variety which the department states in its literature is not expected to provide a family with more than one-seventh of its needs. Each member of the family gets about $5.50 worth of food a month, but the food never includes eggs, citrus fruits, green or yellow vegetables, potatoes, sugars or sweets.

A diet of nothing but "commodities" is guaranteed to produce physical lethargy, mental depression and frequent onslaughts of disease. But, after all, this is called a supplemental program, and the optimistic Agriculture Department assumes that there is other food in the house to be supplemented. As for the quality of the commodities, that is debated. I attended a welfare rights conference at which the delegate from New York City said the commodities are "not fit for pigs." This came as something of a surprise to the delegate from Mississippi, who pointed out that in those relatively few parts of the South which have permitted this Federal program to operate, thousands of Negroes live on nothing else.

The other Federal anti-hunger program run by the Agriculture Department is food stamps.

Enaction of this program was the first thing President Kennedy did in the White House. Today 41 states participate to varying degrees; all major cities are in it except New York and Boston, and New York may join if pending Congressional legislation increases its funds.

Theoretically, it is a gorgeous program, constructed around the notion that everybody spends something for food each month, but poor people just don't spend enough. Solution: Allow the poor people to pay the Department of Agriculture what they would ordinarily spend for food, and in return give them bonus stamps which are just as good as money for buying any U. S.-produced food in the stores. A scale had to be worked out arbitrarily to decide what people "ordinarily" spend, but the department had no trouble settling on a scale starting at $2 a head, with a maximum payment of $12 a month for the largest family with the lowest income. In exchange for the $12, the family would get $70 worth of tickets.

The assumption is that any adult breadwinner can manage to raise $2 for each member of his family once a month. For Congressman Jamie Whitten of Mississippi, chairman of the House Subcommittee for Agriculture Appropriations, this is more than an assumption; it is a certainty. Whitten is a powerful man in agriculture. Secretary of Agriculture Orville Freeman sometimes says, "I have two bosses. One is President Johnson. The other is Jamie Whitten." So when Freeman wants to clear something important, he takes it to Whitten.

Recently he went to Whitten for a private consultation on the idea of lowering the food stamp prices, maybe to 50 cents for people with no income. After all, there was a lot of rumbling in Mississippi. There were rumors, even, that some Negroes were so desperate they were contemplating breaking into Government warehouses. Well, what did Whitten think about it? "Nonsense," said Whitten. "There's nobody in Mississippi who can't raise $2 a month. If there is, just bring me a list of them and we'll take care of them." Freeman left the proposal at that.

If he ever gets around to making up the list—which should be about the longest noncensus list in history—Miss Marian Wright, Jackson attorney for the N.A.A.C.P., will be glad to give him her file of several hundred sworn paupers. Gene Roberts, head of The New York Times bureau in Atlanta, can probably add plenty of names. He recently wrote of one Locket Mayze, 59, who said "he could not remember when he last had a dollar in his pocket or when—with the exception of a hog's head given him by a friend—his wife and eight children had eaten anything other than surplus farm commodities." A couple of weeks ago Jim Hyatt told, in The Wall Street Journal, of meeting Richard Bogen, 62-year-old Negro farmhand, in an Arkansas plantation store, where he sat "with cap in hand and tears filling his eyes" because "'Right now I've got just 2 pennies in my pocket.'" These people may be invisible to politicians, but any reporter who covers the South is constantly running into the Mayzes and the Bogens.

"Government administrators seem not to understand," Negro leader A. Philip Randolph told the National Advisory Commission on Rural Poverty, "that the poorest people simply don't have money." The South is thick with Negroes who live in a primitive world of barter. They work or they don't work, but when they do work it is for past debts or to establish future credit. No money changes hands. They wear cast-off clothes, they eat charity food. They buy nothing. The sharecroppers wound up the season last October either in debt to their landlords or coming out of the cotton year with, say, $50—which promptly went to pay debts in town. Their pockets have been empty for six or seven months, at least. To them, $2 a head—or even 50 cents a head—for the stamp program might as well be $2,000 a head. They simply can't raise it. If they could raise it, it would only be by borrowing from their landlords, who charge up to 50 per cent interest.

The best proof of the nonexistence of money in some areas lies in the Agriculture Department's own file cabinets, where records show that in eight Mississippi counties that changed over from commodities to food stamps (the department won't permit both programs to operate in the same county because, with its usual optimism, it assumes a family getting cheap food doesn't need additional free food) the list of participants fell off by 21,000—which can be presumed to be the number who did not have the money to stay in.

Although these two programs at present are social booby traps, with relatively minor adjustments they could be perfected and with even fewer changes could be spread. Agriculture officials concede that in the South there are 17.5 million people in poverty (nearly half the nation's total) but only two million are receiving Federal food.

Of the 283 poorest counties in 15 Southern and border states, 93 counties—the home of three million people considered poor by O.E.O. standards—have no form of food distribution whatever. In the other 190 counties live 7,100,367 poor people, but only 1,029,331 get food aid. There are several reasons the other six million may have been excluded: maybe they can't afford to pay for the stamps; maybe the commodities distribution center is too far from their home; maybe local welfare workers have not bothered to tell them about the programs or welfare officials have refused to qualify them for help. In some states it isn't easy to qualify. Department of Agriculture officials acknowledge, for example, that if a four-person family in South Carolina earns more than $1,400 a year it cannot qualify for the stamp program (the only aid available), although the O.E.O. rates nonfarm families of four

"The same people who were considered 'good ol' darkies' just a few years ago are now considered deadwood, hardly worth keeping alive."

TIMES CHANGE — Now that farming has become almost totally mechanized (right, a cotton-picking machine), field hands are, as one planter put it, "as useless as a mule."

as poor if they don't earn more than $2,250 a year.

Hard times aren't limited to the back country. Of the 310,000 persons living in Mobile County, Alabama, 99,000 are judged poor by Federal standards. None has access to either commodities or food stamps. Of the 67,000 poor in Pulaski County (Little Rock), Arkansas, only 3,483 get Federal food. In Harris County, Texas, location of the South's largest city, Houston, there are a quarter of a million poor people but only 20,000 get food aid, and only the commodities.

Unquestionably it is easier, however, to exist in the urban clumps. The odd job is easier to come by. Proximity helps—it is more convenient to send the children to a neighbor's table, or to borrow a dollar from a relative whose welfare check hasn't been held up. It is easier to wangle an Aid to Dependent Children check in urban counties because hunger is unsightly and the cities are more sensitive to esthetics these days.

The family living in the shanty on the "back 40" of the old plantation is out of sight, out of the county officials' minds, and therefore usually out of luck. In this respect, the forces squeezing the blacks out of the rural South and into the Northern cities may be nutritionally beneficial. The squeezing forces are fourfold: there's a cotton cutback in some areas; mechanization of many jobs is almost total; weed-killing chemicals are eliminating the need for a human being on the end of a hoe; and the $1-an-hour minimum wage that went into effect this year is re-hardening many a planter's heart. The same people who were considered "good ol' darkies" a few years ago are now considered deadwood, hardly worth keeping alive.

NOWHERE are the faults and the promises of the Government's food distribution program seen better than in Mississippi, which has one of the most complete programs in America. Every county in the state participates in some form of Federal assistance, which is rare not merely by Southern standards but by national standards. Nowhere else in the Bible Belt are poor folks given anything like a comparable amount of assistance.

One-fourth of all Mississippians (about 470,000) are eating federally paid-for food, more even than New York's charity food population (440,000). The food comes via Washington, but at least Mississippi lets it in. By comparison, South Carolina won't let the commodities program into the state at all and permits the stamp program to operate in only 10 of 46 counties; in only three of the 20 poorest counties are the stamps sold, and on such a tight basis that only 10,900 of the 715,000 poor in these counties are assisted. Virginia has food programs for only 1.9 per cent of its impoverished people; Texas covers only 5.6 per cent; Louisiana, 7.9 per cent. In the Deep South no state but Mississippi allows more than 10.9 per cent of its poor people to participate in food programs—and Mississippi offers them to 42.3 per cent.

Yet Mississippi is a laboratory of hunger and of Federal fumbling. On the Delta—that northwestern bulge of the state that arches along the river from Memphis to Vicksburg—one can stand on a steaming summer day and be persuaded that God created the world simply to give Adam a cotton allotment. There is big money here. Delta plantation owners will take out of the soil more than a quarter of a billion dollars this year, most of it in tax-supported crops. In the same area, because of newly mechanized farming techniques, Government officials estimate there will be between 60,000 and 100,000 unemployed hands by this summer. And, since Mississippi has no general state or local welfare programs, these people must depend on Federal largesse.

Choose any shanty; only the number of bodies inside will vary. Here is a mother and six children, residents of Washington County, against the river. Four of the children are asleep on the floor. They sleep most of the day as well as all night. Their lips and legs are covered with scabs and open sores. The youngest has a distended stomach and from it the umbilical knot sticks out like a valve from an inner-tube. Some days they eat nothing. Most days they have one meal, of cornmeal. Washington County quit the commodities program in March and went on food stamps. Left-

"A choice between not eatin' at all and eatin' so bad you wonder if that is an improvement" over commodities are all this family has. Now, it is after 2 P.M. and they have eaten nothing, but the mother says she will cook "a little something" later on. She points to a bag on the floor by the stove; a couple of inches of meal are left of what has lasted them two weeks. When she runs out of cornmeal, she will borrow something from a neighbor. Yes, she nods, the neighbors are in bad shape, too. But she will get something.

This must be an extreme case, so drive on, northeast into the Delta's proudest county, Sunflower, home of Senator James O. ("Our Jim") Eastland, who operates a 5,800-acre plantation near Ruleville, which is also the home of Sunflower County's next best-known politician, Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer, a leader of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic party. Mrs. Hamer used to be a sharecropper, but, like many thousands of others, she was chased off the land. Being well imbedded in the 32-million in this country officially designated as impoverished, Mrs. Hamer speaks empirically: "The main problem about bein' poor is that it only leaves you the choice between not eatin' at all and eatin' so bad you wonder if that is a improvement."

Although reared on a farm and now middle-aged, she has eaten turkey only twice in her life, once a couple of years ago when comedian Dick Gregory shipped a batch of the birds to Mississippi Negroes and the other time when she bought a turkey on the installment plan and paid for it at the rate of 70 cents a week. When the conversation turns to food, Mrs. Hamer will always mention those two turkeys, because otherwise she has nothing to talk about except the customary meat that gets on her table—meat that is thinly attached to hog neckbones (she broke off a front tooth discovering just how thinly attached). She is a big woman, built out in rings of starch—rice and grits and more grits and flour—held together by bean proteins. Perhaps once a year she eats fruit, but only if a friend who has moved to the relatively luxurious welfare rolls of the North sends it. She cannot afford it herself.

Even the little towns of Mississippi, places like Indianola, county seat of Sunflower, have their slums and they are full of farm hands who no longer have a farm to work on and have come into town to do their starving. I met a boy in Indianola who had had nothing to eat that day but a plate of butterbeans; the day before it had been bread and butterbeans; the day before that, again just butterbeans. Sometimes, he said, it was bread alone. One-course diets are commonplace. Kenneth Dean, executive director of the Mississippi Council on Human Relations, who has moved among these people for many months, describes a typical hardship case:

"Breakfast will be grits, molasses and biscuit. For lunch, the adults will eat nothing, and the children who are at home will be given a piece of bread and a drink of Kool-Aid or water. The evening meal usually consists of boiled beans and cornbread." In the worst cases, which are not uncommon, "there is usually no table on which to eat, and what little food there is is eaten by hand out of a bowl or from a newspaper on the floor."

WITH hunger so abundant and easy to find, it might be anticipated that the Department of Agriculture would react to it in a dramatic fashion. But this has not been the case. Seventeen months ago, Congressman Joseph Resnick, Democrat of New York, made a tour of Mississippi and came back to Washington writing letters to all the appropriate Administration leaders about the "desperation point of . . . starving Negroes." Nothing happened.

A month later 35 Negroes invaded the abandoned Greenville, Miss., Air Force Base, and before a phalanx of troops was flown in to evict them they distributed leaflets explaining: "We are here because we are hungry and cold and we have no jobs or land." It made the front pages as a protest story, but their appeal for food somehow went astray. Last summer the Department of Agriculture's own Civil Rights Advisory Council held hearings in Jackson, Miss., and made confidential recommendations to Secretary Freeman that he act upon their "deep sense of urgency" that something must be done swiftly "before suffering, hopelessness and frustration make an evolutionary approach extremely difficult and infinitely more expensive, if not—for an interim — impossible." About the same time, across the Mississippi River, Arkansas State Welfare Director A. J. Moss was writing letters to Freeman, warning that thousands of families would soon be unemployed on the Arkansas Delta and that the food situation was critical. Neither warning disquieted the adamant Agriculture Department calm.

Then, in April, the Clark-Kennedy troupe hit Mississippi, accompanied by TV cameramen, journalistic jongleurs and the usual ballyhoo machinery. It made a difference. At this point Freeman began to move cautiously. He dispatched two of his aides—Howard Davis and William Seabron—to Mississippi for a confidential report. Davis and Seabron found, of course, what everyone else had been reporting for more than a year: many Mississippians are limp with malnutrition, many cannot afford to buy the food stamps, and some landlords are profiteering off the programs. Among the cases of suffering they cited a man in Winstonville, father of six, who got into the food stamp program only because "a New York A.B.C. newsman on assignment in Mississippi gave him $12 twice to buy food stamps. He does not know what he will do when his present commodities and stamp supplies are gone."

Another case: Mrs. Effie Mae Jackson of Billy May Plantation, mother of five, "has a problem of having the date to buy stamps come prior to receipt of her check from welfare. To meet this she borrows from her landlord the $22 each month, and when her check comes he charges her 50 cents on the dollar, which means she has to pay $33 for the stamps each month." This, plus her $10-a-month rent, means that she must pay $43 for food and rent out of the $55 she gets from welfare.

For some reason, the story Davis and Seabron brought back penetrated where others had failed. Freeman wrote Senator Clark that he was "deeply concerned about their findings" and that he might change the rules to make persons with no income pay only a fourth as much as at present. He said this before talking with Congressman Whitten. After the latest Whitten conversation, Freeman told Jack Conway, head of the Industrial Union Department of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. and unofficial boss of Walter Reuther's Citizens Crusade Against Poverty, that he isn't going to try to cut the stamps' cost "until the department budget gets out of Whitten's committee."

AND that is where reform of the program stands today. It hasn't started.

Civil rights leaders damn Freeman for not opening his ears until two winters had passed since he was first alerted to the predicament of the foodless Southern Negro. But Freeman is not his own man in this dispute. In many respects he is the prisoner of the Southerners who command the agriculture committees and the agriculture appropriations subcommittees in both houses of Congress. As human-support programs, neither the free commodities nor the food stamps are popular with these groups. A bill is now being pushed by some House Southerners that would kill the food stamp program by making it prohibitively costly for many

"ANOTHER ONE-MEAL, BEANS-ONLY DAY"—Mealtime in a Mississippi shanty: "In the Deep South no state but Mississippi allows more than 10.9 per cent of its poor people to participate in Federal food programs—and Mississippi offers it to less than half."

It took two years for the U.S. to heed the Negroes' plight states, particularly those states in Dixie with the highest concentrations of Negroes. Many farm-oriented legislators have a hoary suspicion that any give-away program promotes shiftlessness among the menials.

Nowhere is this attitude better seen than in Alabama, where the distribution of Federal food is made inversely to need, and also inversely to the concentration of Negroes. The 30 richest counties, in the top half of the state, participate in the free-food program; the 37 poorest counties in the bottom do not. Although not notorious for pampering Negroes, the Alabama administration nevertheless encourages the acceptance of Federal surplus foods by the counties because it is a sure-fire way of "beating" Washington. For a very small expense — about one or two cents a day per recipient —the counties receive a cornucopia of food. Montgomery County, for example, would pay about $15,000 a year as the cost of distributing almost $1,000,000 in commodities to its people.

But Montgomery County won't enter the program. Neither will other counties where most of the state's Negroes live. Tallapoosa County, home of the State Welfare Commissioner, refuses to pay the $10,000 required to distribute $700,000 worth of surplus foods. The Negro leaders of Hale County have been trying for two years to get county officials to bring in a food program. First the officials said it was too expensive, but when Washington offered to bear the total cost, they still refused. Agriculture officials refuse to fight this kind of local obstinacy. Secretary Freeman promised a commodities program for Hale last August, but he hasn't delivered it yet.

Could the Federal Government just send the food in anyway, without local approval, and have Federal workers distribute it or let the poor people distribute it themselves? Yes; for 30 years the Secretary of Agriculture has had power to distribute food where emergencies exist. And, when pressed hard enough, he will. When Negroes in Dallas County, already warmed up by the Selma civil rights activities in 1965, began demonstrating loudly because they wanted food, Federal officials told Dallas County leaders the food was coming in, and if they wouldn't distribute it, civil rights leaders would. Dallas County surrendered and took the goods, but the scope of the victory is disputed. Some say it only hardened the will of surrounding counties to resist.

THIS kind of tugging and heaving reveals the great weakness of the food programs: commercial interests of the South use them for reprisal and coercion. They are the political and social weapons of a region. Free Federal food was valued by the Delta planters for many years because, by allowing their hired hands to live off it through the winter, it became a kind of subsidy for the farmers. (Free commodities were never given to Delta Negroes after spring plowing time, because a little hunger was expected to make them eager to earn $3 a day in the fields.)

But now that farming has become almost totally mechanized, field hands are, as one planter put it, "as useless as a mule." They and their shotgun shanties only clutter the landscape, chafing the consciences and the pocketbooks of the region. Get rid of them. And what better way than to shift to a food program they cannot afford? Half of the Delta counties have already dropped the commodities and put in food stamps. "What does that mean?" asked Amzie Moore, a Negro leader from Cleveland, Miss. "That means starve or go to Chicago. Well, we're not going to Chicago. We don't want the stamps unless it's a free stamp program."

The angry Negroes have some support. That faint thunder in the distance may develop into a real challenge. The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights has circulated a memo implying that Freeman has ignored his obvious powers to bring relief. The commission urges free food stamps for the penniless and both programs operating simultaneously in the poorest counties. The leaders of Reuther's Citizens Crusade want to strip Freeman of his role in distributing food and turn the whole job over to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare—which was in fact Senator John Kennedy's proposal in 1959. The Crusade is putting out some pretty snappish statements about the preeminence of nutrition over profits. And now Senator Javits has asked the Senate Executive Reorganization Subcommittee to consider the "strip Freeman" proposal.

If impoverished Southerners are judged strictly as an economic factor, more food to keep them alive can be viewed skeptically as merely a temporary solution to the problem of making them profitable. But for them temporariness has always been a relative matter, and they would probably just as soon be fed even on that basis—for, as one high Citizens Crusade official pointed out: "We've been keeping them alive on a temporary basis for 300 years." Something more permanent, he felt, is not wholly impossible and is "limited only by the amount of money that American capitalism, with its Dixiecrat-dominated agriculture committees in Congress, is willing to spend to create a 20th-century civilization in the South." The vagueness of the statement is important; here is a man who for a lifetime has been professionally concerned with labor and housing conditions of the Southern poor, and yet he has no specific plans to improve them, and the specific planners have not come much farther.

Many say that the salvation of the hungry Negro lies in modification of the agricultural South with industry. It is an old dream. Since the days of Gov. Hugh White's "Balance Agriculture With Industry" program a generation ago, Mississippi has been trying to bring in the smokestacks, and the same has been true for the South as a whole since the days of Henry Grady. Yet the skies over the South's vast boondocks are just about as blue and unsmudged as ever. Others, including such practical groups as the Southern Regional Council, are pushing for farm cooperatives to give the landed Negro independence from a repressive social structure. But this, too, though spottily successful, is something that has been tried off and on for years without more than denting the general poverty of the black farmer.

These efforts and failures are quite beside the point to the Negro who faces another one-meal, beans-only day. Very much to the point is the knowledge that his life can be changed, and immediately, by the simplest of Agriculture Department fiats.

If change does come, it will probably take some powerful motivating emotion to achieve it. But there is hope for that, too. When Robert Kennedy returned from his safari into Mississippi's shanty jungles, he told of seeing people who eat one meal every two days, but he described the results only as "extreme hunger." For politicians, "starvation" is a smut word. They don't like to come right out and say it exists in this country—so it becomes "hunger" or "malnutrition"—and even less do they like to see that which the taboo word describes; it embarrasses them. Testifying before a Senate group about swollen bellies and running sores and all the cottonpatch grotesqueries he had seen, Kennedy several times became so embarrassed he laughed. The last best hope of "extremely hungry" folks is that that discomfort will spread. ■

U.S. Cuts Food Stamp Costs 50 Pct. for Mississippi Poor

POVERTY AG 6/27/67

(Copyright 1967 by the New York Times)

GREENVILLE, Miss. — The federal government has drastically revamped its food aid program in Mississippi in an effort to reach more poor people.

The program, which will be extended eventually throughout the South and the rest of the country, was in response to demands of civil rights groups and findings of hunger approaching starvation among hundreds of Negro children. It also comes in the face of mounting criticism against the administration for failing to overcome the hunger problem in the South.

Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman had approved the program worked out with state and federal officials. It includes:

1. Reduction of the cost of federal food stamps, which are used by poor families, to obtain more food and upgrade diets. Starting July 1, the cost of food stamps will be cut more than one half.

2. Coupled with the cut in the cost of stamps, is a reduction in the required minimum purchase by families from $2 per person per month to 50 cents per person. The maximum payment for a family of six persons with the lowest income will be cut from $12 a month to a maximum of $3. For $12 a family of six has been getting $70 worth of tickets to buy food at their local outlets.

3. State and local officials will seek to attack the problem of families that have no income and thus cannot buy stamps by endeavoring to get county boards of supervisors to underwrite the cost of minimum purchases.

4. Federal agency personnel will be increased in the South with trained workers to handle the increased efforts and to recruit, hire and train new "program aides," including Negroes, to reach more poor people.

5. Five new federal commodity marketing and service offices will be established by Sept. 1 in Mississippi to make a total of 10 in that state.

South Puts Bread, Hope On Hungry Families' Tables

POVERTY

By WILLIAM B. WILLIAMS

The South is beginning to put bread and hope on the tables of the poor and hungry.

To do the job, Southern states have participated more than ever in a U.S. Department of Agriculture program which can fight malnutrition in America.

The programs are not without bugs. They are administered on a county level by county officials, and there have been instances reported, particularly in Mississippi, where county officials have misused the program for political power.

But despite the cases of misuse, the food is going to the poor in general, and increases in participation by counties in the South indicate better days are to come.

ALMOST TWO YEARS ago, a combined edition of The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution presented a bleak portrait of the South's attitude toward the poor.

Southern states, however gradually have increased participation in the USDA programs which allow counties to set up food distribution programs to the needy and food stamp programs to give poor people a balanced diet.

Criticisms of the program came during investigations in Mississippi where it was learned that some county officials were discriminating against Negroes who were sympathetic or active in civil rights activities.

Such discrimination, on the courthouse level, has been deplored by newspapers and persons working against poverty.

Under the rules of the two USDA programs, The Commod-

DEAR MISTER EDITOR:

Billy Graham is neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet. Yet a passel of sober-thinking Americans will credit him with foresight for his London statement that "Britain and the United States are headed for some type of dictatorship, whether to the right or to the left."

With our inflation spiraling; demands for even higher pay for less work; with those living on pensions or savings getting pinched; the poor demanding and getting more handouts with little accomplished to cure their plight; with morality fading as a virtue, who can doubt something must "give"?

In Russia the dictatorship of the left took over. Elsewhere the affluent right continues in power. Billy keeps close to the Almighty and he just might know something that many of us only suspect.

ities Distribution Program and the Food Stamp Program, counties must apply and administer the food plans for their poor. Sharp increases in the past two years have been noted in getting free food or food stamps to more people.

IN GEORGIA alone, participation by counties has increased more than 100 per cent since the summer of 1965. Other Southern states also have shown gains.

Under the Commodities Distribution Program, USDA supplies free food to counties that will pay the cost of distributing the food to the poor.

Many counties were eligible for almost total distribution cost through the Economic Opportunity program, but had refused to take advantage of the program.

In 1965, only 39 of Georgia's 159 counties had food stamp or food distribution programs. Today, a check with USDA shows, 88 counties are involved in the programs and nine more have been approved to come under the federal plan.

In Georgia today, there are 65 counties in the food distribution system. These counties set up food distribution centers where the surplus government food is stored.

Persons on welfare or those who would be eligible for welfare can go to the centers and get enough food to take the sting from their poverty.

THERE ARE 23 counties in the Peach State that have food stamp programs. Under this program, persons in need may purchase the stamps for token amounts and buy food with them in grocery stores.

The grocer redeems the stamps for cash at banks. The program is designed to increase the flow of farm goods through the free market. In food stamp pilot programs, retail sales increased an average of eight per cent.

In Georgia, 141,000 persons are participating in the free food distribution program and 18,000 in the food stamp plan.

In the other Southern states in the USDA region with headquarters here, 821,000 persons are in the food distribution program and 430,000 in the food stamp plan.

other states, is the formula states apply in determining who will get the food or the stamps.

In determining who will get under the program, welfare budgets are used. South Carolina's welfare budget is among the lowest in the nation, and other Southern states have low welfare budgets.

Seventy of Tennessee's 95 counties—74 per cent—are in the programs. In 19 counties, 27,000 persons get free food and 85,000 in 51 counties are in the food stamp plan.

This means that more than 1.2 million persons are under the programs in the nine Southern states.

ALTHOUGH COUNTIES can drop the total amounts of free food received by each case, the USDA allows these maximums per person:

A 29-ounce can of beef, 5 pounds cornmeal, 4½ pounds dry milk, 10 pounds flour, 2 pounds grits, 1 pound lard, a half pound of butter or margarine, two pounds split peas and 1½ pounds of cheese.

A State Department of Public Welfare official in 1965 said recent tests indicate that about 50 per cent of the cases of mental retardation are linked with malnutrition in mothers during pregnancy.

The figures indicate that about 50,000 persons in Georgia may have been condemned to a life with only half a mind are about 100,000 mentally retarded persons, some sources state.

TO PUT HOPE on the tables of the South, fear had to be overcome.

In 1965, Harold Parker, a welfare official, said some people had been afraid that poor people would not work unless hungry. Under both programs, however, extra income is needed to buy enough food.

Some county officials, he continued, had been afraid that if they passed out free food or food stamps, persons of low income would stampede into their counties.

None of these fears has panned out with the increase of participation in the programs, USDA officials said.

A USDA spokesman said that with 1.2 million persons in the program in the South, it is not unlikely that a handful of moochers have gotten free food. These cases are rare, he continued.

And state welfare workers, who certify the programs, are quick to bounce undeserving persons from the programs. State officials welcome information along this line from private citizens, for the last thing they want is a leech in the program, the official said.

GEORGIA COUNTIES not participating in either program but which will enter the plans soon are Appling, Bullock, Calhoun, Chatham, Dodge, Evans, Toombs, Treutlen and White, USDA records show.

Counties not in either program to feed the poor are:

Baldwin, Ben Hill, Carroll, Catoosa, Columbia, Crawford, Dawson, Decatur, Effingham, Elbert, Fayette, Forsyth, Franklin, Gilmer, Glascock, Gordon, Haralson, Harris, Hart, Heard, Irwin, Jasper, Jenkins, Johnson, Jones, Lamar, Lanier, Laurens, Lee and Lincoln.

Also, McDuffie, Madison, Meriwether, Montgomery, Morgan, Murray, Oconee, Oglethorpe, Paulding, Peach, Pickens, Pike, Polk, Putnam, Schley, Seminole, Sumter, Talbot, Tift, Towns, Troup, Turner, Twiggs, Union, Upson, Walton, Warren, Webster, Wheeler, Wilcox, Wilkes and Wilkinson.

them in grocery stores.

The grocer redeems the stamps for cash at banks. The program is designed to increase the flow of farm goods through the free market. In food stamp pilot programs, retail sales increased an average of eight per cent.

In Georgia, 141,000 persons are participating in the free food distribution program and 18,000 in the food stamp plan.

In the other Southern states in the USDA region with headquarters here, 821,000 persons are in the food distribution program and 430,000 in the food stamp plan.

States in the region, besides Georgia, are Alabama, Florida, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia.

VIRGINIA HAS the lowest participation in furnishing food for its poor. Of that state's 98 counties, only 12 are participating in the two USDA plans.

In Virginia, five counties are in food distribution and seven in food stamps. In food distribution, almost 8,000 persons received free food and 13,222 got food stamps.

It was announced this week that the cost of food stamps will be reduced 50 per cent. The maximum payment for a family of six persons that qualified for the program was $12 for $70 worth of stamps. The charge, under the new program, would be less than half.

The announcement stated the cost cut would go into effect in Mississippi, but it has been learned the cuts will extend throughout the South and eventually across the country.

Mississippi has more participation in the food programs than any Southern state. All 82 of the state's counties are under one of the other programs. In 47 Mississippi counties, 254,000 persons receive free food from distribution centers. In 35 more counties, food stamps are given for 141,000 persons.

In 1965, 64 of Mississippi's counties were under the programs. About 185,000 persons were reached.

IN ALABAMA, 33 of the state's 67 counties are in the programs. This is 49 per cent participation. In 27 counties, 98,000 persons received free food and 24,000 others got food stamps in six other counties.

In Florida, 121,000 get free food in 27 counties and nobody gets food stamps, because such a program does not exist there.

In Kentucky, 110 of the state's 120 counties are in the programs—56,000 persons get free food in 63 counties and 94,000 others in 52 counties are under the food stamp program.

In North Carolina, 59 counties gave free food to 114,000 people and food stamps went to 35,000 in 22 counties. A total of 81 of the state's 100 counties are in the program, representing an 81 per cent county participation.

ELEVEN OF South Carolina's 46 counties, for 24 per cent participation, are in the programs. None of the counties gives away free food, but 11 give food stamps for 20,000 people.

The rub in the South Carolina program, and well as in some fare official, said some people had been afraid that poor people would not work unless hungry. Under both programs, how-

178,500 Needy Get Food Aid

By CONNIE CRUNKLETON

Nearly 178,500 needy Georgians received food assistance during the fiscal year ended June 30 from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Consumer and Marketing Service.

The Consumer and Marketing Service's commodity distribution program aided almost 156,000 persons and its food stamp program helped approximately 22,500 persons. This was 59,900 persons more than the number that participated in these two programs during fiscal year 1966.

The incerased assistance to needy persons is attributed to the combined efforts of federal, state and county officials in administering these programs.

9 TO BEGIN

Ninety Georgia counties have either the commodity distribution or the food stamp program, and nine other counties are slated to begin one of the programs within the next few months.

Sixty-eight counties took part in the commodity distribution program during June, compared with 40 counties a year earlier. Twenty-two counties participated in the food stamp program, compared with 11 counties a year earlier.

Georgia's commodity distribution program is administered by the State Department of Agriculture, and the food stamp program is administered by the Department of Family and Children Services.

ANY COUNTY

Any county is eligible to receive food assistance from one of the Consumer and Marketing Service's food programs. Needy persons are informed of these programs through county extension or home agents, public health nurses, county welfare offices and school officials.

year earlier.

Georgia's commodity distribution program is administered by the State Department of Agriculture, and the food stamp program is administered by the Department of Family and Children Services.

ANY COUNTY

Any county is eligible to receive food assistance from one of the Consumer and Marketing Service's food programs. Needy persons are informed of these programs through county extension or home agents, public health nurses, county welfare offices and school officials.

The commodity distribution program ofers such foods as dry beans, margarine, corn meal, flour, lard or shortening, chopped meat, nonfat dry milk, peanut butter, rice, grits, raisins, rolled oats, rolled wheat and split peas.

USDA pays for these foods and costs of transporting them to state distribution points. During fiscal year 1967, nearly 36,374,600 pounds of food, valued at approximately $7,238,900 were distributed to needy Georgians.

OFFERS PAMPHLET

Each member of a household certified as needy received between 28 and 30 pounds of these commodities each month. As an aid to families receiving the commodities, C&MS has made available pamphlets suggesting ways to prepare these foods, and many home extension agents provide information on what additional foods are needed for a well-balanced diet.

The food stamp program operates through normal trade channels. Families who are certified eligible exchange the amount of money they would normally be expected to spend for food for coupons worth more. USDA pays for the difference between the amount each family pays and the total value of the coupons issued to the family. Families then spend the coupons at authorized food stores to buy any food produced in the United States for human consumption.

Besides helping low - income families improve their diets, the food stamp program acts as a boost to the local economy. During fiscal year 1967, approximately $850,000 was added to the economy of Georgia food stamp areas.

Javits and Freeman Trade Shouts at Hunger Inquiry

Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman and Senator Jacob K. Javits at hearing

By NAN ROBERTSON

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 12—Senators of both parties accused the Administration today of being so bogged down in bureaucracy that it could not get food quickly to the hungry people in Mississippi and elsewhere.

Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman and Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, shouted at each other during a hearing on hunger and were gaveled down by Senator Joseph S. Clark, Democrat of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Clark, chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Employment, Manpower and Poverty, which held the hearing, suggested that the two should either be "more mature about this" or settle their differences in the corridor.

But both Senator Clark and Senator Robert F. Kennedy, too, expressed belief that Mr. Freeman was not moving fast enough in Mississippi. The Senators and others have said they have personally seen hunger verging on starvation among poor Negroes there.

The Agriculture Secretary told Mr. Javits: "I resent the repeated use of the word bureaucracy as if we were sitting on our backsides doing nothing. I won't have it."

Mr. Freeman called Mr. Javits's demand that he declare a state of emergency in Mississippi "very intemperate, violent and emotional." He said the law inhibited him in distribution of surplus food without local authority.

"I don't apologize for my emotion," Mr. Javits said. "Perhaps a little more passion and a little less bureaucracy will help."

During the hearing Mr. Javits and two other Republicans on the subcommittee—George Murphy of California and Winston L. Prouty of Vermont—issued a statement charging that the Administration bureaucracy had "broken down." They said the United States shipped eight million metric tons of wheat to India last year at a cost of $520-million without adequately feeding all the American people.

Senator Kennedy demanded a Public Health Service inquiry into the number and condition of malnourished people in this country.

Dr. William H. Stewart, the surgeon general of the Public Health Service, acknowledged during testimony today that Americans knew much more about the hungry in other nations than about those in the United States.

"We don't know the extent of the problem or what needs to be done," he said.

Food Stamp Changes

Secretary Freeman discussed recent changes in the Government's food stamp program that will enable more poor people to eat better for their food dollar. But the real problem, he said, is that most poor people mistakenly believe the food stamp plan "will let them eat as poorly as they always have but for less money."

A "massive educational effort" will be required to get America's poor to improve their diets, now nutritionally unbalanced, Mr. Freeman said.

Among the food stamp changes was the reduction of the required minimum purchase by families from $2 a person a month to 50 cents. Most of the subcommittee wants the food stamps to be free.

Mr. Javits said it had taken Mr. Freeman "months to reach these decisions" to lower food stamp costs. The Secretary retorted that there were food programs in every one of Mississippi's 82 counties and "you can't say that about New York."

"Nobody's starving in New York," Mr. Javits snapped.

"Be careful. Be very careful. I'll find them for you," Mr. Freeman said heatedly.

The Secretary told the panel there were seven counties in New York where people were going hungry.

He said there were no food stamp programs or free distribution of surplus food in any of the seven counties.

A member of his staff said later that the counties were Dutchess, Putnam, Rockland, Orange and Sullivan in the Hudson Valley-Catskill region and Otsego and Chenango in central New York.

He said that an Agriculture Department survey last December had shown 35,000 people who would be eligible for food programs and that 10,000 heads of families were unemployed.

Both Mr. Freeman and Mr. Stewart praised Mississippi health and welfare officials for cooperation with Federal officials. Despite testimony on malnutrition described as "shocking" during two days of hearings, Mississippi leads the nation in number of counties participating in Federal food programs.

Guaranteed Annual Income Backed by 1,000 Economists

POVERTY

AC 5-28-68

By EDWIN L. DALE JR.

(Copyright 1968 by The New York Times)

WASHINGTON — More than 1,000 academic economists endorsed Monday "a national system of income guarantees and supplements."

The brief statement was sponsored by five well-known economists and was issued here and in Cambridge, Mass. It supported, by implication, the demand of the poor people's campaign here for a "guaranteed annual income."

The statement said the cost of an income guarantee or supplement plan would be "substantial but well within the nation's economic and fiscal capacity." It also said such a plan was "feasible and compatible with our economic system."

The five original sponsors were Prof. Paul A. Samuelson of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, John Kenneth Galbraith of Harvard, James Tobin of Yale and Harold Watts and Robert Lampman of the University of Wisconsin.

The signers were from 125 colleges and universities, with 10 universities having 15 or more signers.

The statement did not endorse any of the specific proposals for guaranteed income, such as a "negative income tax." But it said:

"A workable and equitable plan of income guarantees and supplements must have the following features:

1—Need, as objectively measured by income and family size should be the sole basis of determining payment to which an individual and/or family is entitled.

2—To provide incentive to work, save and train for better jobs, payments to families who earn income should be reduced by only a fraction of their earnings."

The statement said present public welfare programs "exclude millions who are in need and most inadequately the needs of millions more." These programs, it said, "all too often unnecessarily penalize work and thrift and discourage the building of stable families."

The economists specifically referred to the poor people's campaign, the report of the Kerner Commission on Civil Disorders, and a report by a group of 12 business leaders appointed by New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller. All have endorsed the idea of a universal guaranteed income plan.

CBS Epic On Hunger Denounced

POVERTY

AC 5-28-68

By BEN A. FRANKLIN

(Copyright 1968 by The New York Times)

WASHINGTON—Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman charged Monday that the Columbia Broadcasting System had aired a "biased, one-sided and dishonest presentation" of hunger in America and he formally demanded equal time on the network to refute it.

The secretary summoned newsmen to a second floor conference room at the Agriculture department to denounce for the better part of 45 angry minutes the CBS television documentary, "Hunger in America," shown on the network last Tuesday night.

'INDIGNATION'

In a letter expressing "my disappointment and indignation" to Dr. Frank Stanton, the CBS president, Freeman requested "equal network time to refute the errors of fact, the misinterpretations and the misinformation that were dispersed through 'Hunger in America' and to assure the hungry of this nation that the U.S. Department of Agriculture does care — that it is doing what it can for them — and that it wants to do a great deal more."

To reporters, Freeman declared that the broadcast had created disillusionment and restlessness and the general feeling that there is indifference and no one cares."

"The tube can get pretty careless," he said. "It can be a pretty miserable piece of business, and this program . . . was a pretty bad job, as bad as anything that I have ever seen in the time I have been in public life."

Broadcasting industry officials said they believe it was the first time a cabinet member had publicly demanded "equal time" to challenge a radio or television documentary. They also pointed out that Freeman's claim—if it were to be granted—would come under the "fairness doctrine" laid down by the Federal Communications Commission.

CBS STATEMENT

In a statement read Monday night on "The CBS Evening News with Walter Cronkite," Richard S. Salant, the network's president in charge of news, said:

"We have only heard of, and have not yet seen, Secretary Freeman's letter and so-called bill of particulars. They will obviously receive careful consideration when they arrive. Meanwhile, I have every confidence in the accuracy and responsibility of the CBS news personnel who worked over many months on 'Hunger in America,' of which we are all very proud."

Let a Man Dream

One of the nation's leading students of race relations once remarked that if you're going to discriminate against any race or group you'd better do a thorough job of it, or else eventually the repressed will revolt.

Thus slavery was more effective than mere segregation in keeping Negroes docile, and total segregation more effective than partial segregation. For once a downtrodden people catch the fever of equal rights, they become far harder to keep down. (Our forebears recognized this fact by passing laws in most Southern states making it a crime to teach slaves to read.)

Men can live in emotional and economic bondage as well as the statutory kind. If custom leads them to expect poverty and low status, it dulls their aspirations. They will come themselves to believe they are "shiftless" or "sorry."

The last few years' explosions in America's Negro ghettos, I am convinced, are directly traceable to expectations which rose more rapidly than real gains. Court decisions and congressional acts have broken the apathy of custom, and they indeed have resulted in tangible changes, particularly in the South. But they have not, instanter, led to vastly improved lives for the uneducated and poor. Thus frustrations erupt into senseless violence.

That this is not an uniquely Negro phenomenon is made eloquently clear in a survey by New York Timesman Ben A. Franklin, who reports white Appalachia on the edge of a "growing, rolling revolution."

An official of a citizens' group in the area contends that "the anger in the mountains comes from the process of the poor people learning their rights as citizens."

Appalachians are growing increasingly resentful, for example, of the absentee ownership of coal fields and the concentration of political power in a few hands. From VISTA and other volunteer workers, they are picking up and understanding such phrases as "the Establishment" and "the power structure."

People, said a crippled, pensioned coal miner before a Senate committee last week, "have made the mistake of looking at the poor as though they had some kind of sorriness." He might have added that until their hopes were kindled and their horizons broadened, many of the poor themselves accepted the epithet.

It is vital that comfortable, white America understand the phenomenon of hope o'erleaping reality. It is happening in the Negro ghettos. It is happening in rural white Appalachia. It is happening in the erstwhile colonies of Africa, Asia and Latin America.

The affluent may cluck that Negroes are rebels without specific causes, that Appalachians are ignorant and unskilled, that the new nations lack the know-how and resources to survive. There is some truth in the criticisms. But the momentary excesses are symptoms of a healthy fever that created this nation.

Let a man dream, and he's never the same again.—BRUCE GALPHIN.

State Hunger Counties Qualify for Federal Aid

POVERTY

Agency Says 68 Areas Eligible For Grants and Business Loans

By WAYNE KELLEY
Atlanta Journal Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON—Most of The Georgia counties denying a report of serious hunger problems among their poor citizens qualified Saturday for federal aid as economically distressed communities.

The Economic Development Administration said that 68 of Georgia's 159 counties would be eligible for public work grants and business loans in the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Only Kentucky placed as many counties on the EDA list. Georgia has more counties than most states, however, Puerto Rico, Guam, and American Samoa qualified in toto.

Three Georgia counties which had refused to establish federally financed food programs for the poor were on the list. They are Glascock, Schley and Webster.

A CITIZEN BOARD of inquiry April 22 issued a report pinpointing 256 "hunger counties" in the United States, including 47 in Georgia.

By last week health officials or their representatives from 22 of Georgia's "hunger" counties had written the House Agriculture Committee to complain that local starvation and diet problems had been exaggerated.

Nevertheless, 19 of the 22 complaining counties were listed by EDA Saturday as communities qualifying for federal grants because of "unemployment and low-income problems." They all qualified last year, too.

Ross Davis, chief of the EDA, said, "We are now getting to those places with the most unyielding problems and where solutions are several years off and will require sustained assistance over an extended period."

The letters to the agriculture committee and classification of the 16 counties as areas with "severe economic difficulties" were somewhat paradoxical in many instances.

"I DEFINITELY do not feel there is anyone in this county who is physically able to work who is suffering from hunger or starvation," said an official from Jasper County. "If there is its because they choose it."

The health director for a district including Morgan and Greene counties wrote that a high incidence of coronary heart diseases "suggest that a large part of our people are maybe over-eating."

Other counties disclaiming serious dietary problems but qualifying as economically distressed were Dooly, Irwin, Jefferson, Jones, Lincoln, Marion, Mitchell, Randolph, Screven, Seminole, Turner, Webster and Worth.

Since 1965 EDA has provided about $7 million in public works and business loan assistance to economically distressed areas, most of them in the rural South.

"WHAT MAKES IT urgent that we continue our efforts in these areas is that they are one of the major sources for the unemployed and unskilled workers who migrate into the central cities where the unemployment problem is already critical," Mr Davis stated.

The Georgia counties qualifying for EDA aid in the 1969 fiscal year are:

Atkinson, Bacon, Baker, Berrien, Brantley, Brooks, Bryan, Burke, Calhoun, Candler, Clay, Coffee, Crawford, (public works), Dooly, Douglas, Early, Echols, Fannin, Floyd, Glascock, Greene, Hancock, Heard, Irwin, Jasper, Jefferson, and Jenkins.

Also Jones, Lanier, Lee, Lincoln, Macon, Marion, McDuffie, Meriwether, Miller, Mitchell, Montgomery, Morgan, Murray, Oglethorpe, Paulding, Pierce, Pike, Quitman, Rabun, Randolph, Rockdale, Schley, and Screven.

OTHERS ARE Seminole, Stewart, Taliaferro, Taylor, Telfair, Terrell, Towns, Treutlen, Turner, Union, Walker, Warren, Washington, Webster, Wheeler, White, Wilcox and Worth.

Counties on the eligibility list for the first time are Meriwether, Walker, White and Crawford.

Those eligible this year but improved enough to be dropped next year are Banks, Dawson, Grady, Liberty, Long, Madison and Talbot.

WIFE HELD IN HUSBAND'S TORCH DEATH

NEW YORK (UPI) — A woman has burned her husband to death during an argument by pouring lighter fluid on him and setting him afire, police said.

Police said Tillman Wheeler, 54, ran from the couple's apartment building, his clothing in flames, and collapsed 300 feet away. His wife Leslie, 51, told police she set her husband afire because he had been "bothering" her. She was charged with murder.

Goldwater Lands Crippled Plane

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Former Sen. Barry Goldwater's twin-engine Cessna 310 landed without incident with one engine disabled Saturday as fire department units lined the runway at Sky Harbor Airport.

Goldwater, who had an unidentified passenger aboard, was returning from Melbourne, Fla., where he delivered an address Friday to the graduating class of an academy.

Challenge

As this report is published, the Planned Parenthood movement nears completion of its first half-century of service: Margaret Sanger founded this nation's first birth control clinic in Brooklyn in 1916. Since then the cause of family planning has grown from the brave hope of a valiant woman into a deep-rooted tradition shared by most of our countrymen.

The pages that follow record the events and achievements of 1965. At the outset, I would like to set them in a perspective, as it were, not of the past but the future—of the task still to be done. The stark fact is that at least five million impoverished U.S. women need effective birth control help. The programs of Planned Parenthood Affiliates in 153 localities, now aided by the welcome growth of tax-supported family planning services in some places, still reach fewer than one out of nine of the medically indigent.

Field surveys and experience also show that a great majority of these Americans would like to have families as small or smaller than their more fortunate neighbors—and that they will indeed curb their fertility when offered the knowledge and the means.

During 1965 there was an exhilarating shift in U.S. public policy at all levels—federal, state and local—toward full affirmation of the right of access of all Americans who wish it to family planning guidance and help, in accord with their needs and beliefs. Likewise there was a continuing swing toward full acceptance of government responsibility for providing this health service to all citizens who lack private medical care. Yet only about one out of five local health departments had even begun to provide service of this kind.

Planned Parenthood – World Population

In government, certainly the foremost spokesman for the family planning cause in 1965 was President Lyndon B. Johnson himself. He forthrightly called the growth of world population a "transcendent problem . . . second only to the search for peace." His administration moved with unprecedented boldness to define a broader governmental role for family planning assistance at home and abroad. But, the light dewfall of tax funds invested in fertility control research and services—less than $7,000,000 federal, state and local—seems hardly commensurate with the President's statement about the magnitude of the problem—especially when compared with the 9 billion dollars now being spent by all levels of government on health programs.

It is patently unwise and impractical to expect—or urge—that governments accept the full burden of responsibility, at home or abroad, for providing family planning help. A true partnership of effort is required—among Planned Parenthood, governmental agencies, and other research and action institutions. Indeed it is beginning to emerge already, as this report shows. Increasingly Planned Parenthood in this nation, and so many others, is being called on to organize professional leadership, to mobilize corporate and civic support, to furnish expert guidance, to expand its own medical service facilities, and to greatly accelerate programs of education about the values of family planning practice and the availability of family planning help.

This is the challenge for the balance of the Sixties, drawn from the experience of 1965. A.F.G.

Achievement

With so much immediately ahead to be done, it is especially gratifying that the pace of accomplishment notably quickened in 1965 throughout the whole field of family planning. Here are a few of the highlights:

» The number of couples who received fertility control help from U.S. Planned Parenthood centers increased 14 per cent over 1964.

» Over the past half decade, the number receiving family planning service from these centers grew more than 150 per cent.

» In 1965, the number of local Planned Parenthood committees in the U.S. affiliated with PPWP grew from 138 to 153.

» Meanwhile, contraceptive pills and intrauterine devices (IUDs) increasingly were found safe and effective—and were increasingly prescribed.

» Acting on a test case brought by the Planned Parenthood League of Connecticut, the U.S. Supreme Court declared that state's birth control law unconstitutional and established a new "right of marital privacy."

» Eleven other states, with Planned Parenthood help, removed restrictions on birth control programs, or aided such programs with affirmative legislation.

» At least some localities offered tax-supported birth control services in 42 states—double the number in this category two years before.

» Sixteen War on Poverty projects, almost all initiated by Planned Parenthood, were approved with an investment of nearly $1 million in U.S. funds.

- The U.N. carried out its first mission on birth control, sending to India a team of experts headed by International Planned Parenthood's chief executive.
- The national family planning organizations of six more countries met the affiliation requirements of the International Planned Parenthood Federation—bringing total membership up to 42.
- In Rome, the Ecumenical Council took a great stride toward liberalizing Roman Catholic beliefs on birth control by elevating conjugal love to equal status with procreation as a purpose of marriage.

In all its work during the year, Planned Parenthood sought especially to emphasize and apply the individual and moral values of family planning. By Medical Committee and Board action, PPWP reaffirmed its goal of helping all couples, freely and intelligently, to make their own decision about family size and spacing. It was pointed out that family planning programs should not be measured in tax economies, however great they may be, but achieve their most fundamental and traditional goals through what they give to families in terms of lasting health, happiness and individual opportunity. Planned Parenthood also underscored its policy of providing a variety of family planning methods so that each couple can choose the one most suited to its personal needs and religious faith.

Population Pressures

While progress was impressive, needs remained vast and danger still acute—especially in the lands of "rising expectations"—the developing nations where population growth is greatest and fertility control least accessible. There the tragedy of human multiplication continued to cripple efforts for social and economic improvement. The continued advance of modern medicine reduced infant mortality and kept people alive longer. But the resultant expanding census of human numbers brought the threat of famine to much of the earth.

In the U.S., the delay in offering adequate family planning to the poor, coupled with continuing high fertility by choice among the more affluent who already practice birth control, contributed to the problems besetting urban-suburban areas: crowded schools, festering slums, water shortages, pollution, traffic and housing shortages.

But the year saw one important change. Fatalism over impending catastrophe due to population increases began to yield to hope as programs of fertility control produced evidence of success.

In 1965, as never before, demographers gave high priority to weighing the impact of contraception on population trends. Many delegates to the United Nations World Population Conference in Yugoslavia, among them leaders of PPWP and the International Planned Parenthood Federation, brought direct field reports that energetic programs of voluntary family planning are curbing birth rates substantially in several countries.

President Johnson addressed a U.S. government pledge to the Conference of "wholehearted support" of efforts to "achieve a better world through bringing into balance the world's resources and the world's population." Earlier, addressing the U.N. 20th anniversary observance at San Francisco, the President urged all lands to "face forthrightly the multiplying problems of our multiplying populations." He added:

"Let us act on the fact that less than five dollars invested in population control is worth a hundred dollars invested in economic growth."

"I have four kids and I love all of 'em. The oldest is five and I've never been to a doctor. It's hard when you don't have the money."

PPWP Service Record

In this favorable setting, 1965 was another record year for U.S. Planned Parenthood. The national contraceptive caseload increased to 320,709—38,749 higher than 1964.

The number of new contraceptive patients recorded continued at very high levels, although this figure dropped slightly below the record levels achieved in 1964. The most striking gain was recorded among continuing contraceptive patients, with an increase of 36 per cent over 1964. Thus the rate of retention of patients at affiliated Planned Parenthood centers, increased substantially, due in large measure to heavy reliance on oral contraceptives.

Of every

From available data on methods chosen by patients, it appears that approximately 60 per cent of Affiliate patients chose the pill while the diaphragm, for decades the first choice of American women, was the method preferred by only 15 per cent. The intra-uterine devices (IUDs), offered in 1965 for the first time by many Planned Parenthood centers, were chosen by about 10 per cent of the patients.

With such a large percentage of patients on oral contraception, requiring more frequent check-up, patient visits swelled to a record 1,163,683—a gain of 16 per cent over 1964.

Partnership in the Communities

Experience in several communities suggested what may become a typical pattern of evolution between complementary tax-supported and voluntary birth control services. During the initial period of tax-supported service, it appears that both tax-supported and Planned Parenthood facilities add patients rapidly. Their educational efforts support each other and the spread of successful family planning practice in poverty areas evokes cumulative interest.

Public facilities usually establish eligibility requirements; by the same token they define ineligibility. The ineligible are referred to Planned Parenthood or come on their own initiative. Meanwhile PPWP affiliated centers for a variety of reasons are the first choice of many women who could use either service.

As tax-supported birth control services expand into major programs as they have in several cities, Planned Parenthood centers still appear to maintain the bulk of their patient load, and sometimes increase it while they also accelerate their educational efforts to stimulate patient use of both their own and tax-supported family planning facilities.

In New York, by the end of 1965, all 15 municipal hospitals with obstetrical services, plus nine Public Health Clinics and 25 private hospitals offered birth control help. The Washington, D.C., Public Health program expanded substantially. In Baltimore, eight private and public hospitals operated contraceptive clinics. In all three cities, Planned Parenthood centers continued to serve heavy caseloads.

In Chicago, where Public Health Department clinics began birth control service for the first time in 1965, Planned Parenthood achieved a striking 46.7 per cent increase in patients. From 23,689 in 1964, the citywide PP caseload rose to 34,422. Of these 7,000 were new patients.

Rising caseloads were also reported in other cities with tax-supported services. Indianapolis' PP roster rose to 4,592, compared to 4,046 a year ago, and Denver PP's patient rolls rose from 4,954 to 7,502, a rise of over 50 per cent.

Announcing the findings at PPWP's Annual Meeting in October, Dr. Tietze commented: "This is an impressively high retention rate and should answer once and for all the question as to whether disadvantaged mothers will take the pill regularly and use it effectively."

Social Research

Planned Parenthood's Research Department during 1965 developed a simplified method of calculating the minimum potential caseload for subsidized family planning services for any community. Thus, tax and community-supported birth control clinics were provided with a yardstick to measure the extent to which their programs helped meet community requirements. During the year, this formula was used widely as more publicly financed family planning services were established in health departments and hospitals.

As part of its research program, PPWP in co-sponsorship with its New York City Affiliates, began a mobile service demonstration. Clinics served by the unit were established in six low-income neighborhoods to determine whether and to what extent low-income couples would use birth control if it is convenient and in a familiar setting. Many experimental patient recruitment methods were initiated.

A household survey, conducted for PPWP by the National Opinion Research Center in connection with the demonstration project, disclosed that even in New York where 67 tax-supported and private facilities now offer family planning, 32.6 per cent of women who need and want birth control help still practice it ineffectively or not at all. This research survey was financed by the New York City Health Research Council.

Federal support of research in the area of reproduction and fertility control increased in 1965, but not to an adequate level. Despite the critical need for improved methods, the National Institutes of Health was supporting only 33 studies of various aspects of reproduction with total funds of under $6 million. Of this amount, only about $1 million was being spent for research "directly related to fertility control problems."

The Advisory Council to the National Institute on Child Health and Human Development (NICHD) strongly recommended expansion of these studies. Its proposal constituted the first acknowledgment by the government's official research establishment of an obligation to take the same kind of initiative in stimulating research in family planning as it has in the study of cancer and heart disease.

Under a $377,238 National Institutes of Health grant, a research team, headed by Dr. Charles Westoff, Princeton sociologist and chairman of Planned Parenthood's Social Science Committee, began to examine family planning practices of a national sample of more than 6,000 American married women aged 18-54. The study, the third in a series, will add to the Growth of American Families (GAF) research made in 1955 and 1960. This third installment will assess the impact of new contraceptive methods introduced since 1960.

Georgia Gets $1.8 Million To Aid Poor

By MARGARET SHANNON
Atlanta Journal Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25—The Johnson Administration's war on poverty will begin in Georgia in a big way with four projects costing $1,829,200. The two biggest ones are in Atlanta.

The $600,000 work experience phase of the program will be administered by the Fulton County Department of Family and Children Services and will be designed to train people who are on the relief roles for work.

Welborn Ellis, director of the department, said it will be financed entirely by federal funds. No local or state matching funds are required as in the other projects.

HE SAID he hopes about 600 people—400 women and 200 men—can be trained during the first year, 150 each quarter.

Mr. Ellis also said it is possible the amount of money will be higher than the announced $600,000 for the first year. The department had just finished preparing its application for the funds when the announcement came Tuesday and they had expected to get $730,000.

Mr. Ellis said he hopes some of the persons trained under the program will be able to work in various departments of the county government while getting their on-the-job training. "If we're going to give them assistance," he said, "we should use them in some government activity." He said he plans to confer with County Manager Alan Kiepper about this.

Antipoverty chief Sargent Shriver announced the opening assault — a $35 million drive—late Wednesday in Texas after meeting with President Johnson at the LBJ Ranch.

OF THE 119 projects around the country, here are Georgia's four:

—A grant of $1,080,000 to the Atlanta-Fulton County Economic Authority, the agency that outgoing DeKalb Commission Chairman C. O. Emmerich is to head. The emphasis will be on neighborhood action to combat poverty.

—A grant of $600,000 to Atlanta for a work-experience project, where unemployed persons will perform needed work that would not otherwise be done while training for regular employment. This is one of four such projects in the nation.

—A technical assistance grant of $132,500 to the State of Georgia to help communities plan local antipoverty campaigns.

—A grant of $16,700 to the Georgia Mountains Planning and Development Commission to plan antipoverty programs in 12 northeastern counties.

THE ANTIPOVERTY program stems from legislation passed by Congress this year. Ninth District Rep. Phil M. Landrum of Jasper sponsored the legislation in the House.

The Atlanta - Fulton County Economic Authority will get $200,000 of the $1,080,000 grant immediately to get started on the neighborhood service centers.

One already operating on the west side will be expanded, and others will be opened around Washington High School, Carver High School and East Point. Seven centers are planned.

THE ATLANTA agency also plans to develop an educational improvement program, vocational training for young people and adults. Long-range aims include health services, legal aid, welfare services, personnel counseling, homemaking and home management.

The $600,000 work-experience project in Atlanta will cover all of Fulton County and will employ about 600 parents. They will work under the auspices of public or other nonprofit agencies.

Men will be trained in building and ground maintenance, including carpentry, masonry, painting, landscaping and nursery work. Women will be trained to fill jobs as homemakers in families where help is needed because of illness or other reasons.

MAYOR ALLEN, in a statement issued to coincide with announcement of the Atlanta grant, expressed pride that "our community is one of the first in the nation" to receive such a grant.

The grant, he said, "will enable us to marshall all agencies and efforts, both public and private, in an all-out attack on poverty and its local causes."

He noted that while a majority of Atlantans "now enjoy unparalleled prosperity," there are many "deprived and disadvantaged citizens" who are held "in the grip of economic hopelessness."

The aim of the Atlanta Community Action Program, he said, is to provide disadvantaged families "with realistic opportunities for self - improvement and financial independence."

THE STATE will get $25,000 immediately of its $132,000 grant to get a start on planning and coordinating local antipoverty programs.

Mrs. Bruce Schaefer, state welfare director, also will head the Georgia Office of Economic Opportunity, which will administer the program.

Under the community action phase of the antipoverty program, both financial and technical aid for local communities are authorized in the areas of employment, job training, counseling, health vocational rehabilitation, housing, home management, welfare, remedial education and other measures.

The 12 counties that will benefit from the $16,700 grant to the mountains commission are Union, Towns, Rabun, Lumpkin, White, Habersham, Dawson, Forsyth, Hall, Banks, Franklin and Stephens. All are in Rep. Landrum's congressional district.

IN EIGHT of the 13 counties, 50 per cent of the employed males earn less than $2,000 a year. Only one-fourth of the adults over 25 are high school graduates, and 25 per cent of the 16 and 17 year olds are out of high school

On a tour of the depressed Appalachian region last spring, President Johnson visited Gainesville.

The antipoverty program also includes a job corps, a work-study program for college students, a sort of domestic peace corps known as Vista Volunteers and neighborhood youth corps to help young people stay in school. Georgia has no projects of these kinds now.

MR. SHRIVER said that all antipoverty projects will operate "in complete conformity with the letter and the spirit of the Civil Rights Act—in the Deep South as well as elsewhere."

All announcements about Georgia projects carried the notation that Gov. Sanders has been notified of them and has, under the law, 30 days to disapprove a local program.

MEANWHILE, in Atlanta, Boisfeuillet Jones, chairman of the Atlanta - Fulton County Economic Opportunity Authority, said:

"The authority is greatly pleased that its successful program proposal places Atlanta and Fulton County among the first communities to receive support through the Office of Economic Opportunity.

"We shall now have substantial additional resources to augment our community effort toward elimination of dependency. We are determined that people in the Atlanta area now bypassed in our relative prosperity be provided such services as they want and need to become independent and productive members of our economy.

"More than 200 agencies, public and private, in the Atlanta area will be encouraged and expected to join forces in this drive toward economic opportunity for all. The grant of funds just announced for the first phase of our program will spur this effort.

Report on Anti-Poverty Program

By DREW PEARSON

Washington.

WHEN SARGENT Shriver reported to President Johnson on the new anti-poverty program he told the President how Barry Goldwater's No. 1 supporter, Gov. Paul Fannin of Arizona, had walked into Shriver's office last week and handed him a letter.

Fannin is now senator-elect from Arizona, had been critical of the anti-poverty program. And since Goldwater had ridiculed it in speech after speech, Shriver figured he was in for a stormy conversation.

But the letter turned out to be an endorsement of the new anti - poverty program, and Arizona's acceptance of participation.

APPLICATIONS

Shriver gave the President a factual summary of progress during the 45 days since the anti-poverty bill received its congressional appropriation. Among other things, he told how in strife-torn Mississippi the town of Corinth had applied for a job training program on the basis of racial equality.

During the first 45 days of operation, 256 applications have come in from towns and cities ranging from Detroit to Los Angeles, New Haven, Conn., to Lafayette, La. Gov. Mark Hatfield of Oregon, a Republican, was one of the first to come in. Gov. John McKeithen of Louisiana, an unreconstructed opponent of Lyndon Johnson, also signed up.

But one of the most interesting applications came from a Catholic priest, Father Arcenaux, who flew to Washington on behalf of several southwest Louisiana parishes centered around Lafayette and wanted to start a school for drop-outs, together with an adult literacy training program.

Father Arcenaux was told by Shriver, himself a Catholic, that the anti-poverty program must include Protestants as well as Catholics, Negroes as well as whites.

Father Arcenaux went back, got the support of all those groups, as well as Mayor Ray Bertrand of Lafayette, and the Community Activities Program is now going strong in southwest Louisiana.

The way the anti-poverty program works out is briefly as follows: Name of the new bureau is the "Office of Economic Opportunity." Top man is Sargent Shriver, who doubles in brass as head of the Peace Corps.

Immediately under Shriver is the Job Corps, which in turn is under Otis Singletary, on leave as chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Another division of the Office of Economic Opportunity is the Community Activities Program under Jack Conway, an experienced executive of the AFL-CIO.

A third division is lumped under "Related Programs," which includes programs allocated to other government agencies. The Neighborhood Youth Centers, for instance, are under the Labor Department; educational jobs in universities are under HEW; while business loans are under the Small Business Administration.

EXECUTIVES

One reason Shriver has got off to a fast start is that he didn't follow the usual bureaucratic technique of trying to hog the whole show. His strategy has been to farm out as many activities as possible to other agencies, with the states and local communities deciding what they need most.

Another reason for Shriver's speed has been his ability to persuade live-wire executives to give up high-paying jobs and work for him.

Several of these men gave up salaries of around $60,000 a year to work for the government.

Shriver also reported that he had 50 camp directors screened, processed, and ready on Jan. 1 to open camps similar to the Civilian Conservation Corps of Roosevelt's day. The new anti - poverty camps, however, will go beyond teaching woodcraft and taking boys off the city streets. They will conduct night classes in everything from history to English to mechanics.—(c1964.)

U.S. Lists Georgia Among 10 Poorest

By MARGARET SHANNON
Atlanta Journal Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—A federal report issued Tuesday pictured Georgia as one of the 10 poorest states in the nation, with almost half of its counties classified as poverty-stricken.

The definition of poverty used in the report is a family income of less than $3,000 a year. The report is based on 1959 figures.

Georgia, according to the report, had 338,100 families with incomes less than $3,000. That was 35.6 per cent of the families in the state.

The median income for all families in Georgia was $4,208.

COUNTIES in which more than half of the families had incomes of under $3,000 were classed as poverty-stricken.

On that basis, 75 of Georgia's 159 counties rated the poverty label. Most of them are rural, and most of them are in South Georgia.

At the bottom of the list, according to the report is Webster County, where the median family income in 1959 was $1,612, and where 88 per cent of the families had incomes less than $3,000.

MISSISSIPPI headed the list of the 10 states with the highest percentage of low-income families. Georgia was ninth. The other states are Arkansas, South Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, North Carolina, Louisiana, and South Dakota.

THE REPORT was issued by the Welfare Administration of the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

According to the report, statistics show that the chances of being poor are "closely related to where one lives or whether one is white or nonwhite."

"The nonwhite family falls at the bottom of the income distribution pattern," the report said. "The urban nonwhite family has about the same chances for being very poor as does the rural white family."

The report warns that rural poverty is a problem likely not to get proper attention because of the clamor of cities for help and action.

"There is no one program which could be devised which would meet the need of these withering county units with their low gross population and low income," the report said.

BUT IT WARNS: "If the goal of abolishing poverty is to be realized, the planning called for in the anti-Poverty Program must encompass which will reach the poor in remote rural areas as well as in urban centers."

The Georgia counties classified as poverty-stricken were as follows:

Appling, Atkinson, Bacon, Berrien, Brooks, Bryan, Burke, Baker, Calhoun, Candler, Clay, Clinch, Coffee, Cook, Crawford, Crisp, Dawson, Dooly, Early, Echols.

Emanuel, Evans, Franklin, Greene, Hancock, Harris, Heard, Irwin, Jasper, Jefferson, Jenkins, Johnson, Lanier, Lee, Lincoln, Long, McIntosh, Macon, Madison, Marion.

Meriwether, Miller, Mitchell, Montgomery, Morgan, Oglethorpe, Pierce, Pike, Quitman, Randolph, Schley, Screven, Seminole, Stewart, Talbot, Taliaferro, Tattnall, Taylor, Telfair, Terrell, Towns, Treutlen, Turner, Twiggs, Union, Warren, Washington, Webster, Wheeler, Wilcox, Wilkes, Worth.

Poverty Lesson

IT IS going to take more than federally-subsidized industry to win any war against poverty in the Appalachian region. This is the first lesson learned the hard way in Varner, W.Va.

National Seating and Dimension Co., Inc., a federally-assisted effort to diversify industry has closed its doors. The 100 jobs it created have vanished. And now company officials are searching for a buyer who will get a built-in $675,000 tax write-off.

The company was organized to give employment to former coal miners. The product was finished parts for the wood furniture industry. Some $1.8 million was poured into the firm, primarily in the form of federal loans.

But there were problems.

Coal miners had to be retrained, for there was no similarity between mining coal and producing furniture parts. This was accomplished, but it proved expensive.

Coal miners, even unemployed ones, were not accustomed to working for a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour. They were not enthusiastic over this sort of return, even though wages in the furniture industry are not high.

There were virtually no profits from the endeavor, and after two years of effort the company has had to close down just ahead of creditors taking over.

This does not mean, of course, that the war on poverty in Appalachia has been lost. Far from it. But it is a significant development. The case here should be carefully studied by those who are responsible for pouring out federal loans aimed at reviving industry which, in turn, is supposed to revive a region.

The type of industry and its location; the type of labor available and its attitude; the potential market and its location; the type of men available for management — all of these are vital increments to any new company which is established as a blow against poverty.

There is a lesson to be learned in West Virginia.

New Yardstick Made for Poverty

Size of Families, Urban Or Rural Locale Considered

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Leaders of the federal government's war on poverty announced a new yardstick Sunday for determining just which U.S. families are really poor.

Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, announced the change while the U.S. Chamber of Commerce was challenging the government's present standard which says that any family earning less than $3,000 a year is poverty stricken.

Shriver said the new gauge will take into consideration the respective size of families and whether they live in urban or rural areas. It is based on the Agriculture Department's "economy level food plan" which figures a basic cost of 23 cents per person per meal per day.

A family of four with an annual income under $3,130 and an individual with income under $1,540 now would be classed as poor. Previously, the figures were $3,000 and $1,500. For families of two the poverty level would be $1,990, and for families of three it would be $2,440.

Shriver said the original $3,000 yardstick for all was set by the Council of Economic Advisers as a "rough rule for initial purposes and not intended for long-term planning of the anti-poverty program."

He said the new definition takes into account food, rent, other costs and the size and geographical location of poor families.

The big difference between the two standards, he said, is that the new method includes a larger number of children than the old—15 million instead of 11 million.

He said it applied to 34.6 million persons in the United States, 70 per cent of them white.

The Chamber of Commerce based its criticism of the old gauge on the fact that a small family living in a warm climate and growing most of its own food could live comfortably on $3,000 a year.

The chamber called on the government to replace its income measure of poverty with a "market-basket" standard that would gauge what it costs to live a decent life in different parts of the country and under different circumstances.

The recommendation is part of a report by the chamber's task force on economic growth and opportunity, a group of more than 100 business leaders, headed by Erwin D. Canham of Boston.

vine city: an experiment in self-help the program

Experiments in Self-Help is for people in poverty-stricken communities. It aims to help them mobilize their forces in order to better control their lives and environment.

the policy
Experiments in Self-Help will go into any community whose people want assistance in mobilizing themselves for self-help action.

the project
The Vine City Project is our first; we proceed in the belief that outsiders can only help the community to articulate its problems and then to take action to remedy them.

the plan
Our plan is to help Vine City residents find ways to improve the conditions in which they live. Once mobilized, community residents can then select their own projects.

the promoters
Vine City residents and student volunteers staff the Vine City Project and an advisory committee of community leaders and students determines policy. Leaders in civil rights and human relations specialists comprise a resource committee.

the people
A man, his pregnant wife, and their six children all live in two rooms; he works for a downtown motel for less than $200 a month.

Six people live in three badly leaking rooms. A retarded child in the apartment has been turned away from a public school because it is over-crowded.

A family of eight has no income, yet they pay $70.50 a month for three rooms with holes in the floor. The family faces eviction for overdue rent.

the postscript
These are our neighbors, but we do not see them. They are real people, Atlantans, living in the shadow of Five Points, the heart of Atlanta. Because of foul housing, poor schools, no jobs or underpaid jobs, they cannot share and enjoy the protection and opportunities of affluent Atlanta. Why doesn't someone do something about it? Vine City residents and student friends intend to.

how you can help

- Inform your friends and recruit volunteers for Experiments in Self-Help.
- Give a Saturday afternoon to the Project; help clear a lot for a children's playground.
- Raise money for Experiments in Self-Help.
- Help at home—type, telephone, file.
- Join the Experiment's Summer Project and help with voter registration, neighborhood beautification, tutorials, and work, play and study clubs. We will arrange housing for summer volunteers.

ARKANSAS HOUSES TO HEAR SHRIVER

Faubus Requested Address Today on Poverty Fight

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 7—Sargent Shriver will explain the nation's antipoverty program tomorrow to a joint session of the Arkansas State Legislature.

This unusual action by a Federal official comes at a time when a neighboring state, Louisiana, is involved in a conflict with the Federal Government over the antipoverty program.

The Office of Economic Opportunity, which Mr. Shriver directs, is holding up a $132,000 antipoverty planning grant to Louisiana because of complaints over the racial stands of some state officials who would administer the program there.

Officials of the Office of Economic Opportunity said last week that the delay in processing the funds had been prompted by complaints that "at least two" of Gov. John J. McKeithen's appointments to the antipoverty posts in Louisiana were "segregationists" or "extremists."

Mr. Shriver's office is investigating the complaints. No decision has been announced.

This is the first time any antipoverty funds have been withheld because of the racial issue. Under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Federal agencies are prohibited from making grants or loans to state or local projects that discriminate on the grounds of race, creed or color.

It is believed that Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas, in asking Mr. Shriver to address the joint session of the Legislature, may be trying to head off trouble in the southern part of his state, which borders on Louisiana.

So far, there has been no conflict in Arkansas over the antipoverty program. The state has received a number of Federal grants.

A Federal Job Corps camp for the training of youths between the ages of 16 and 22 opened recently in Garland County, Ark. The camp, the second in the nation to be opened, is integrated.

Another Job Corps camp is scheduled to open later this year in Franklin County.

Among the Federal antipoverty grants to Arkansas are the following:

Adult basic education, $312,060; training of unemployed parents on relief, $15,300; community action program for Yell County, $49,980; training of men and women on relief in Yell County, $100,000.

ON 4 CITY FRONTS

Poverty War Tightens

By HARRY MURPHY

Atlanta's poverty fighters are attempting to bring health, education, welfare and employment services right down to the neighborhood level through four community centers.

The city's war on poverty gained momentum this week as the Atlanta-Fulton County Economic Opportunity Authority took over one community project and found temporary headquarters for another.

The authority took over the West End neighborhood center, which had been in operation under private sponsorship for about one and a half years.

THE PROJECT for the Nash Area, which is bounded by Northside Drive and Ashby, Simpson and Hunter Streets, will be temporarily headquartered in the Bethlehem Community Center. It will be headed by William Fowlkes, former managing editor of the Atlanta Daily World.

Other community centers will be located in the Price High School and South Fulton High School areas and headquarters for them are now being sought.

The community centers are designed to bring down to the community level services for health, employment, welfare, education and other things.

An attack on the causes and consequences of poverty in these four areas will be made, said Dan Sweat, authority associate director. He said $900,000 in federal money was received by the authority this week for this purpose.

C. O. EMMERICH, former DeKalb County commission chairman, is executive director of the authority. Mr. Sweat, formerly executive assistant to Mr. Emmerich in DeKalb, is one of three associate directors.

He handles administrative duties and the Job Corps. Dr. Tilman Cothran, former Atlanta University professor, is associate director for resources and

C. O. EMMERICH
Executive Director

will handle research and some education programs.

Dave Beecher, formerly with the Atlanta Area Community Council and director of the West End project, is the associate director for neighborhood services.

THE WEST END project contributed greatly to the development of the community centers, Mr. Sweat said.

This project evidenced the need for "restructuring" the delivery of existing services to meet the needs of the dependent family.

Under this restructuring, the offices of agencies aiding these people would be decentralized and branches placed in the communities they served.

The West End project determined that many of the residents had moved recently from a rural area to city and did not know community services for low-income people existed.

A LACK of knowledge of the operations and methods of urban life often confused them. Many did not know of state employment services. When they did learn of them, they often didn't have transportation or couldn't effectively communicate their skills and past work experience to interviewers.

If they got a job, it paid only about $50 a week. Parents weren't aware of the value of education.

An employment counselor from the State Labor Department was assigned to the neighborhood and overcame the accessibility problem.

The West End project might never help some adults, said Mr. Beecher, "but maybe with their children or grandchildren we can make some impact."

He said, "More funds will have to be spent to help disadvantaged people as well as build courthouses, stadiums, auditoriums, swimming pools and provide 'nice' services for our middle and upper socio-economic groups if the extent of poverty is to be controlled."

In all, 14 of the eventual 25 persons to be attached to the central staff in the 101 Marietta Street Building have been hired. Searches are now being made for the remainder. Each of the four neighborhood centers will have about 30 persons attached to it, including aides.

These aides will be people who reside in the neighborhoods where poverty is being attacked. They will be trained to assist in public health, welfare and other programs.

"We hope to start the neighborhood aide training program soon," Mr. Sweat said. The poverty "war" officially got started Jan. 1.

The Job Corps program is now well under way, he added "We've sent 32 boys in the last two weeks to camps in six states and we expect to send an additional 33 within three weeks.

"Our quota is now 65, but we expect it to be upped soon to 115."

The authority screens Job Corps applicants from the five Metropolitan Area counties, plus Fayette, Rockdale and Douglas counties. State offices screen applicants from the remaining counties.

THE ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT

JOINT FEDERAL-STATE-LOCAL PROGRAMS:

* The Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO), an Executive agency headed by a director reporting directly to the President, will have overall administrative responsibility for programs under the Economic Opportunity Act.
* However, participation at the local level in planning and operating the projects will be encouraged in all programs, required in most.
* Each governor will have 30 days in which to veto proposed Youth Programs and Community Action Programs in his state.
* Governor, by not acting within 30 days, may permit a project to begin.
* Governor may expedite project by giving his approval before the 30 day period is over.

YOUTH PROGRAMS:

 The Job Corps:

* Will enroll, in 1965 and 1966, up to 140,000 young men and women, ages 16 to 22, for up to two years service in conservation camps and training centers.
* Camps and centers will emphasize basic education, skill training, and work experience.
* Job Corpsmen will be recruited through U. S. Employment Service Offices, schools, churches, settlement houses, public and private welfare agencies, boys' clubs, selective service boards.
* Corpsmen will receive room, board, and travel allowances while in the Corps.
* Upon completion of their terms, they will be paid $50 for each month of satisfactory service.
* OR, Corpsmen may contribute to their dependents $25 per month (to which Government will add another $25), and receive $25 for each month of satisfactory service when separated from the Job Corps.

 The Neighborhood Youth Corps:

* A work training program for unemployed young men and women, ages 16 to 22, in public service projects such as at parks, playgrounds, hospitals, and libraries.
* Examples of work training include nurses', librarians', and teachers' aides; nursery school and playground attendants; hospital orderlies; assistant dietitians; mechanics' helpers; landscape assistants.

* Projects will be developed by state and local governments, and by private, non-profit service and welfare organizations.
* The agency developing the work training project will be responsible for recruiting the young people to work in it.
* Up to 200,000 young people will be enrolled in NYC each year.
* Enrollees will work and live in their own communities.
* They will be paid wages based on local rates for beginners in similar work.
* They will be encouraged to continue or resume their schooling.

 Work Study Programs:

* Will operate through, and be administered by, colleges and universities.
* Will provide on-campus and off-campus part-time work for deserving students selected by participating schools.

URBAN AND RURAL COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAMS:

* Locally planned, locally administered direct attacks on any poverty-promoting community problem.
* Will require comprehensive community action plans, developed by local community action organizations which may be formed by government agencies, private non-profit agencies such as volunteer or civic groups, or a combination of public and private agencies.
* Will emphasize programs designed to produce "a permanent increase in the ability of persons to deal with their problems without further aid."
* Examples of such programs include job-training, counseling, vocational rehabilitation, remedial education, home management, health improvement, family planning.
* Federal government will bear up to 90% of the cost during the first two years, 50% thereafter.
* Communities' contributions may be in cash, facilities, and services.
* Participants in the Job Corps, Neighborhood Youth Corps, and Work Study programs will be available for work on community action projects.

OTHER ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT PROGRAMS:

 Grants and Loans to Combat Rural Poverty:

* Will aid low-income rural families and migrant workers.
* Will loan up to $2,500 to such families, payable within 15 years, for certain home and farm improvements, if they cannot obtain funds elsewhere.
* Will provide similar loans for local marketing and purchasing cooperatives.

 Voluntary Assistance Programs for Needy Children:

* Federal government will locate needy children, supply their names to persons who volunteer to give them financial help.

* No direct federal financial assistance to the children under this program.

 Adult Basic Education Programs:

* For persons with six years or less of schooling.

* Will teach adults basic reading, writing, and arithmetic, helping them to find and to keep jobs.

* Will be conducted at local level, under guidance of state department of Education.

* Federal government will pay 90% of cost during first two years, 50% thereafter.

 Volunteers in Service to America -- VISTA:

* A "domestic Peace Corps" whose purpose will be to improve the health, education, and welfare needs of the ppor in the United States and its territories.

* Will place special emphasis on aiding the mentally ill and the mentally retarded.

* Volunteers will receive allowances for living, housing, and travel expenses, and pay not to exceed $50 monthly.

THE MANPOWER DEVELOPMENT AND TRAINING ACT--MDTA

The Office of Manpower, Automation and Training--OMAT:

* An agency of the Manpower Administration, U. S. Department of Labor.
* Plans and evaluates training programs; programs are administered by state employment service offices and state departments of vocational education.

MDTA training and retraining programs:

* Are conducted only for skills which are in demand within the labor market area.
* Vary in length according to the skill being taught; maximum length is 72 weeks, or 52 weeks if no basic education is included in the trainees' programs.
* Are conducted at no cost to the trainees.
* Include on-the-job training, operating through the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training with the cooperation of employers and labor unions.

To receive MDTA training:

* A person must be unemployed.
* OR, he may be working less than full time in a skill that is becoming, or will become, obsolete.
* OR, he may be working below his skill capacity, that is, a job lower than his potential skills would qualify him for, if trained.
* OR, he may be a member of a farm family with less than $1200 annual net family income.
* OR, he may be over 16 years old but not yet 22 and in need of further schooling or occupational training.

Prospective trainees qualify for MDTA programs by:

* First, visiting their local State Employment Service Office.
* Next, being interviewed, tested, and counseled by the local SES to determine interest in, and suitability and aptitude for, job training.

Persons selected for MDTA training:

* Will be assigned to a specific training course.
* Will be expected to maintain satisfactory attendance, and to make satisfactory progress, in the course being taken.
* Will be assisted in finding jobs by the State Employment Service office upon completion of their course.

Trainees are eligible for training allowances:

* If they are the head of a household, and have at least two years experience in gainful employment.

* OR, if they are between 17 and 22 and are enrolled in a specialized youth training program.
* If they are employed while in training, they may receive a reduced allowance.
* AND, if training facility is not within commuting distance of their residences, they may also receive subsistence and transportation allowances.

THE AREA REDEVELOPMENT ACT

The Area Redevelopment Administration---ARA:

* An agency of the U. S. Department of Commerce.
* Makes long-term, low interest loans to properly organized community groups establishing or expanding industry.
* Makes grants to communities for up to half the cost of building public facilities needed to attract and to aid new industries. Examples are roads, railroad spurs, dams, reservoirs, waterworks, sewerage systems, navigation channels, libraries.
* Retrains jobless workers and provides them with subsistance allowances during their training.
* Gives technical assistance to communities, helping them to survey, catalog, and assess the potential of their resources.
* Authority expires June 30, 1965, unless renewed by Congress.

To qualify for ARA aid:

* An URBAN area must have high unemployment--a current unemployment rate of 6% or more; OR, an annual average unemployment rate of 50% greater than the national average rate in three of the preceding four years; OR, 75% greater than the national average in two of the previous three years; OR, double the national rate during the preceding calendar year.
* A RURAL area must be one of low income and/or high unemployment--an area where farm-family incomes average $1170 or less annually; OR, where all family incomes average $1500 or less annually; OR, an area with a labor force of 15,000 or fewer where there has been persistent unemployment; OR, an area of "low production farming."

To receive ARA aid:

* A community must have been designated by the ARA as a "redevelopment area"--i.e., as meeting the above qualifications.
* A community must organize a local redevelopment committee, bbroadly representative of local groups, such as commerce, industry, agriculture, labor, education, local government, and ethnic groups.
* An Overall Economic Development Program--OEDP--must be drawn up, and submitted to ARA for approval and financial aid.

The OEDP:

* Describes the community redevelopment organization.
* Details and assesses the community's existing resources and facilities.
* Outlines the plans for improving the community's economy.

* Explains why ARA aid is necessary; that is, why the community cannot accomplish the proposed plan without ARA assistance.

ARA Loans:

* Can finance as much as 65% of the total cost of an ARA approved project.
* Require, in addition, a minimum of 10% investment from public sources and a minimum of 5% from private sources.
* Commercial and industrial loans carry an annual interest rate of 4% and can run as long as 25 years.
* Public facility improvement loans are made at 3½% annually for up to 40 years.

ARA job retraining programs:

* Are intended to attract new industry to labor surplus areas by providing a supply of skilled workers.
* Have included training for semiskilled factory workers, office workers, nurses aides, farm and construction equipment operators and maintenance men.
* Are similar to programs offered under the Manpower Development and Training Act (see page 6); maximum training period is 16 weeks.

THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF PRIVATE AGENCIES AND CITIZENS

For political as well as practical reasons, provisions requiring LOCAL INITIATIVE, LOCAL ACTION, AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION of "anti-poverty" programs were written into the laws.

This creates many community-service opportunities for private agencies in the welfare, health, housing, education, and employment fields, as well as for public-spirited private citizens. The first responsibility of every private agency and every concerned citizen is to be a source of information and publicity for the anti-poverty campaign. Agencies and individuals should learn about the various programs, should function as ready sources of general information to anyone who might inquire about "the war on poverty," should study all programs carefully to determine which ones are applicable to their own communities, and should know whom to approach for complete information. In short, they ought to serve as go-betweens for persons or groups who might give help and persons or groups who might need such help.

Civic, fraternal, and even religious organizations, if they are non-partisan and (in most cases)non-profit, are eligible for initiating and participating in most anti-poverty projects. The Office of Economic Opportunity, for example, requires only that the agency be "broadly representative of the interests of the community" and that the project be non-discriminatory as to race, color and religion.

The Economic Opportunity Act invites private agencies to participate in Community Action programs. Such agencies, either singly or in cooperation with other interested persons and groups, can receive federal help in developing remedial education classes, after-school tutoring and study centers, programs for pre-school children, rehabilitation programs for the mentally and physically handicapped, and even in setting up new industries to provide jobs for the unemployed. Private agencies can be especially helpful in assembling the income, unemployment, education level, drop-out, migrant family, health, housing, and other community data which must be gathered before any anti-poverty program can be developed or approved.

The county Rural Areas Development committees are good examples of local initiative groups. Any existing local private agency, or any group of community-minded citizens, with the cooperation of the County Agent, can establish a local RAD committee where none exists. (Most counties already have them.) Local private agencies should try to work with existing RAD committees in the interests of those whom the agencies represent.

Area Redevelopment Administration programs require local initiative and local community action. Any private, non-partisan organization is potentially the agency through which the community redevelopment program can be initiated and carried out. If the program sets up a new industry, or expands an existing one, these may be operated for private profit. Although there are no provisions in the Act requiring equal employment opportunities in industries set up with ARA funds, such industries will be covered by Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, either initially or eventually, if they employ as many as 25 persons.

The concerned individual can be invaluable, not only in his own efforts, but in stimulating group action. The private citizen, living in a community where there is not now in existence either a private or public agency qualified to receive anti-poverty aid which may be provided to communities, can initiate an effort to have the necessary agency organized. He can approach local government officials and inform them of the aid available under anti-poverty programs, and work with them to secure such benefits for the community.

Working through existing agencies--and every community has some--he can seek the cooperation of school officials, parent-teacher associations, and religious, fraternal, civic, and social organizations, in order to secure the involvement of the total citizenry in planning and accomplishing community improvement projects. Together with other public-spirited individuals, the private citizens can secure appointments, at the policy-making and administrative levels, of qualified persons who represent all elements of the community. Further, he can monitor the actual performance of federally aided community improvement projects, seeking to assure that all elements of his community are properly benefited.

Job Corps Recruiting Drive Set

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18 (AP)—Shortly after Thanksgiving, the government will blitz slums in Baltimore and coal towns in Appalachia with posters, flyers and radio and television advertisements.

Thus will begin an appeal to young people to enlist in the job corps.

From this early effort in the Maryland metropolis and in depressed coal mining areas of Wise County, Va., and Letcher County, Ky., the U.S. Office of Economic Opportunity hopes to find the proper means to recruit both urban and rural youths.

Hopefully, the analysis can be completed by the end of the year, for at the start of 1965 officials hope to launch a full-scale recruitment drive for about 30,000 youths.

The goal: To raise those who are deprived, illiterate or semi-literate to the point where they have the skills to be employed.

LAS VEGAS'S POOR GETTING U.S. HELP

VISTA Volunteers to Work in Resort City in Spring

Poverty Prog

By MARJORIE HUNTER

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24 — Next spring, eight men and women will begin working quietly among the poor in a city noted for its big money. money.

Las Vegas is one of 28 cities and communities to which the first contingent of 99 VISTA volunteers will be sent under the Government's antipoverty program.

VISTA, meaning Volunteers in Service to America, is the domestic counterpart of the Peace Corps. Volunteers enlist for one year and receive subsistence and medical care. At the end of the year, they will receive $50 for each month of service.

The volunteers, who must be at least 19 years old, will begin training next month and will be in service by early spring.

They will be sent only to places seeking their services. To date, 231 cities, states, hospitals and various groups have applied for 3,080 volunteers. More than 4,000 persons have applied to become volunteers.

The eight assigned to Las Vegas will be working on a local program called Operation Independence. The volunteers will operate day-care centers for children, work with young people having difficulties in school and organize community centers.

Despite its glittering array of gambling casinos and resort hotels, Las Vegas has its poor, 20,000 of them, according to VISTA officials.

Group for California

A team of 23 VISTA volunteers will also be assigned to 10 migrant worker communities in the Central Valley and the Santa Maria and Santa Clara Counties of California.

There, they will give preschool English training to Spanish-speaking children, plan and organize the building of community centers, and initiate self-help housing projects.

Nine other volunteers will work with families of retarded children in San Francisco.

Three volunteers will spend a year working in poor neighborhoods in Hartford, Conn. Ten volunteers will be assigned to New Haven, Conn. to provide vocational training and counseling to teen-agers, operate a community school, organize civil and recreation groups and help students find jobs.

Four volunteers will go to Mountainous Yell County, Ark., to work with slow learners and school dropouts.

A preschool for children in Hayter's Gap, Va., will be established by ~~two~~ other volunteers. There is no kindergarten grade in Virginia's schools.

Fourteen volunteers will be sent to eight Kentucky mountain communities to stimulate interest in health, sanitation and modern homemaking. Three other volunteers will go to Knox County, Ky., to organize community councils in isolated communities.

Three volunteers will be sent to Ripley County, Mo., to teach crafts, job skills and physical fitness to children from poor neighborhoods.

Ten volunteers will be assigned to community centers in eight of Pittsburgh's poorest neighborhoods.

A program of vocational training in crafts and simple job skills will be conducted by 10 volunteers assigned to the Clover Bottom State Hospital and School for the Mentally Retarded at Donelson, Tenn.

Title II of the Act relates to Community Actions programs.

Local citizens in states, counties, cities and villages throughout America will be able to effectively wage a battle against poverty. The planning and administrations of the programs is up to the citizens of the local community.

This community action program seeks to strike at the basic causes of poverty at the local level and to involve the maximum number of local residents and organizations in the fight. These Community action programs will involve activities in such fields as employment, job training, and counseling, health vocational rehabilitation, housing, home management, welfare, and special remedial and other educational assistance for the benefit of low-income individuals and families.

Adult education program grants will be made to states to help them initiate programs of instruction for persons age 18 and over whose inability to read and write is an employment handicap.

The voluntary assistance program for needy Children will allow individual Americans to participate in a personal way, by voluntarily assisting in the support of one or more needy children, in a program coordinated with city or county social welfare agencies.

Thirty five million dollars has been authorized to combat poverty in rural areas. It will be possible for the "poorest" rural families to make loans for the purchase of farm equipment — The improvement of land, — The purchase of livestock, etc.

Assistance to migrant workers will include housing, sanitation, education, day care for children.

Diverse programs readied for colleges and universities. The need for a sound education at the higher level is well recognized, and students and institutions will benefit from plans such as the Work-Study Program which will permit many students to continue their education despite financial problems.

Teenagers prepared to play active role in poverty war may apply for several of the programs if they meet other qualifications. The Job Corps, VISTA, Work-Training and Work-Study Programs all accept enrollees as young as 16.

Welfare agencies provide essential local programs. Funds will be provided by the Office of Economic Opportunity to local organizations to assist in furthering existing successful programs and to encourage local groups to develop new ones.

The public's role is the key to a successful poverty war, and not only will the public be able to help in a real sense in the War on Poverty, but it stands to benefit so much from it. Public works, conservation and badly needed recreation area work that might not otherwise have been undertaken will be started by Job Corps enrollees.

The public will indirectly benefit from the effect of opportunity extended to 140,000 impoverished youth in Job Corps camps and centers, and 200,000 others in Work-Training programs. The immediate effect will be felt by local welfare and health service organizations throughout the nation.

The ultimate goal of this sweeping program is to assist millions of people in breaking the bonds of poverty, with particular emphasis on the nation's youth where and when they may face a lifetime of economic blight.

Trade unionists are the public and a big segment of it. Therefore, it behooves all members of organized labor to concern themselves with this act - which will in no small measure instill in thousands of unfortunate citizens of our country and our community a respectable degree of human dignity.

Appalachia bill priority urged for new session of congress

Washington—The Appalachia bill, caught in the logjam of unfinished business at the end of the last Congress, should be a priority subject for action when Congress convenes in January, two House members asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program, heard on more than 700 stations.

"This shall certainly be my objective," declared Rep. Pat Jennings (D-Va.). "I think it will be one of the first 'musts' since the governors of the 10 states (in the area) asked the government to act in this region as in the Tennessee Valley Area."

"We ought to get at this bill promptly after we come back in January," Rep. Robert J. Corbett (R-Pa.) said. "Resources of all kinds—human and natural—meanwhile are lying there going to waste in the midst of misery and poverty."

Jennings said that a special measure to cover Appalachia is necessary, in addition to the Economic Opportunities or Anti-Poverty Act, because specific activities are needed in this bypassed region between the prosperous East and Middle West. Roads are necessary, he said, to get goods and people in and out. Without them industry will not move in, although there is a huge labor surplus and agricultural goods cannot be taken to markets.

Unemployment in the area is highest in the nation, Corbett reported, because of the automation of coal mines and abandonment of timber and other farming. Housing and health conditions, as a result, he added, "are about the worst you can find anywhere."

Perhaps as many as three-fourths of the houses lack plumbing or have very inadequate plumbing," he said.

"To make matters worse, there is a shortage of doctors and dentists. Tuberculosis is widespread, communicable diseases of all kinds are well above the national average."

Jennings said the area has "some of the most beautiful scenery in the world, but there are no roads to get to it."

"Tourism could in itself be a profitable operation if we had arterial roads to bring visitors in, he maintained. "We're within one day's drive of the prosperous East and West."

Corbett said the rainfall in the area is the highest in the nation, but there is a need of dams, reservoirs and artificial lakes to store the winter fall. These, he believed, would add to the tourist attraction.

The town of Appalachia is located in Jennings' Congressional district, although the program is named after the mountain range that runs through the ten-state area.

MUST LEGISLATION before the 89th Congress should include the Appalachia bill to aid the 10-state area along the Appalchian range, Rep. Pat Jennings (D-Va.), left, and Rep. Robert J. Corbett (R-Pa.) declared on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

COMMUNITY ACTION MEANS OPPORTUNITY

What is Community Action?

The Community Action Program will provide technical and financial assistance for urban and rural communities to fight poverty. Individual communities will decide how to do the job with private and public resources that will be augmented by this new Federal assistance.

The problems of poverty are network of social ills like illiteracy, unemployment, poor health and dilapidated housing. To alleviate them will require a network of anti-poverty attacks that are varied while they are coordinated. This combination--fashioned by local talent and leadership-- is the major aim of the Community Action Programs.

Specifically, remedial reading, literacy courses, job training, employment counseling, homemaker services, job development and training, vocational rehabilitation, health services are only some of the individual programs that can be supported and coordinated with a detailed local anti-poverty program.

In the past, many of these separate programs have been scattered and uncoordinated. A remedial reading program, for example, has limited effect if there is no literacy course to permit the parent to guide and help his child. Both programs have limited effect if the parents have no marketable skills and live in squalor. A program that addresses all of these difficulties in a systematic fashion will truly help that child and his family to remove the shackles of poverty. And this is the intent of Community Action.

The Federal Government will help local communities to develop and support these anti-poverty programs. However, Federal assistance will depend on the community's determination to:

1. Mobilize its own public and private resources for this attack

2. Develop programs of sufficient scope and size that give promise of eliminating a cause or causes of poverty.

3. Involve the poor themselves in developing and operating the anti-poverty programs.

4. Administer and coordinate the Community Action Programs through public or private non-profit agencies or a combination of these.

In smaller communities and in those with more limited resources local leaders can begin a Community Action Program in stages. For example, a community might start with a pre-school coupled with a health service clinic for these youngsters. These would be followed by other specific programs all linked to each other in a coordinated campaign.

All local programs should use the talents of persons living in and affected by the poverty striken neighborhoods in planning and operating programs. As workers in projects, they could be used as aides to professionals, as recreational and day care assistants and as helpers in homemaker and health services. Some other examples are community research aides, library aides, tutoring assistants, probation aides and family service workers.

Further, Community Action Programs should see that existing local, State and Federal programs are linked to each other in a concentrated drive against poverty. Assistance now available to States and local communities under the Manpower Development and Training Act, the 1962 Public Welfare Amendments, vocational education and the various programs under the Housing and Home Finance Agency all should be joined with any total community anti-poverty effort.

Community Action Programs, in short, will fuse the old, scattered programs which providing the technical and financial assistance to initiate the new attack against the varied problems that have ensnared the poor.

What Kind of Programs Might be Developed?

Community Action Programs will vary as the needs of the people vary in different parts of the nation. They must be part of a total effort to help people escape poverty, not to make it more bearable. Here are some illustrations that might be part of a Community Action Program:

1. Service and activities to develop new employment opportunities;

2. Providing a special and remedial education, with particular emphasis on reading, writing, and mathematics;*

3. Providing comprehensive academic counseling and guidance services and school social work services;

4. Providing after-school study centers, after-school tutoring, and summer, week-end and after-school academic classes;

5. Establishing programs for the benefit of pre-school children;

6. Reducing adult illiteracy;

7. Developing and carrying out special education or other programs for migrant or transient families;

8. Improving the living conditions of the elderly;

9. Arranging for or providing health examinations and health education for school children;

10. Rehabilitation and retraining of physically or mentally handicapped persons;

11. Providing health, rehabilitation, employment, educational and related services to young men not qualified for military services;

12. Providing community child-care centers and youth activity centers;

13. Improving housing and living facilities and home management skills;

14. Providing services to enable families from rural areas to meet problems of urban living;

15. Providing recreation and physical fitness services and facilities.

*General aid to elementary or secondary education in any school or school system is prohibited by the legislation, and thus funds could not be provided for general reduction in class size, school construction, general teachers' salaries (as opposed to those of special remedial reading instructors), textbook acquisition, religious instruction, or the established curriculum.

How Do You Tell What Is Needed In Your Community?

The problems of the poor must be assessed in more than money terms. Simply enumerating the low income families will not permit you to select a priority list of projects. Here are some of the factors you should sort out:

1. The number of low-income families, particularly those with children.

2. The extent of persistent unemployment and under employment.

3. The number and proportion of people receiving cash or other assistance on a needs basis from public agencies or private organizations.

4. The number of migrant or transient low-income families.

5. School dropout rates, military service rejection rates and other evidences of low educational attainment.

6. The incidence of disease, disability, and infant mortality.

7. Housing conditions.

8. Adequacy of community facilities and services.

9. The incidence of crime and juvenile delinquency.

Who Will Pay For The Programs?

Federal money will be available (1) to help establish Community Action Groups, (2) to assist in developing programs, (3) to support those programs, and (4) for specialized technical aid.

The Federal Government will pay up to 90% of the cost of Community Action Programs in the first two years. The balance, to be furnished by local Community Action groups, can be in cash or in kind such as services and facilities, to support local programs.

How Do You Begin?

1. Bring together the appropriate voluntary and government agencies in welfare, health, housing, education and employment as participants in developing a Community Action program. Include leaders from the areas in which the program will operate.

2. Assemble all available information on the poverty problem. Identify the extent of poverty in the community and begin to determine major characteristics. List the problems in order of priority.

3. Development of a set of proposals to attack the causes of poverty. Determine what local resources are available to support such programs.

4. Decide on a specific geographical area for the program.

5. Form a local Community Action organization that includes not only government and voluntary organizations, but business, labor and other key civic organizations as well.

6. If technical help is needed in developing programs, ask for it from Community Action Programs, Office of Economic Opportunity.

7. Contact the State Government to determine how its agencies and programs can help and can be integrated into the total local antipoverty effort.

8. Develop projects in order of importance and ability to carry them through.

9. Apply to the Community Action Programs, Office of Economic Opportunity, for the detailed forms to submit you application.

A Time for Tolerance

by KATE SMITH

America's beloved radio star

IT'S easy to be calm and collected when all goes well—quite another matter to remain calm in the midst of general panic. By the same token, it's easy to be tolerant in a quiet, easygoing period—quite another matter to remain tolerant in a time like the present, when storms of hatred and prejudice are sweeping through the world.

But it is precisely now that the challenge to our human decency is greatest. This is the time of the supreme test. If there is to be a future for civilized people on earth, we must remain immune to those storms. We must remember that they blow from the blood-mad land of the Nazis. We must remind ourselves that victory will mean nothing if we are infected by the germs of race hatred and group discrimination let loose by the enemy.

I wish it were as fashionable to practice tolerance as it is to talk it. The subject will be brought up at some social gathering, or at a luncheon meeting. Everyone will say the proper thing. Everyone will agree that tolerance is a noble virtue.

Then the meeting breaks up and some good ladies proceed to discuss "that awful foreign family" that just moved into the neighborhood. Were you to tell the muddled ladies that they are being intolerant and bigoted—that they are, indeed, a threat to American freedoms—they would deny it indignantly.

Unfortunately the fact that they are not aware of their intolerance does not improve the picture. On the contrary, it means that they have unconsciously become victims of the race and group propaganda to which all of us are exposed in a period like the present. The only safety lies in conscious opposition to every preachment of intolerance, whether it is garden-variety prejudice or disguised as super-patriotism.

Christ was "a foreigner" and His people were Jews. Except for the Indians, all of us are immigrants or the children of immigrants. No country and no people have a monopoly on virtue or culture or decency. These are truisms—but today, more than ever, it is well to keep simple truths alive in our minds and hearts.

Tolerance is a way of life. It is the American way. We cannot violate it without insulting America's past and poisoning its future.

If you think you're entitled to more than your neighbor you are intolerant.

If you have ever said of other human beings, "They're all right in their place," you are intolerant.

If you will not permit another human being to find a home in your community, you are intolerant.

If you will not permit other people to live their lives in their own way, so long as they do not interfere with your rights, you are intolerant.

I go further than that. I say that if you are content to remain passive and indifferent when others around you are intolerant, then you share their guilt. Intolerance, like smallpox, has a way of spreading. Unless you act to quarantine the evil, it will soon overtake you.

Ask yourself, in the still of the night: "Am I contributing to the fight against intolerance?" If the answer is in the negative, if you are one of the sympathetic but passive onlookers, the blood and the suffering that result from intolerance will be on your conscience as much as on those of the actively guilty.

I THINK I understand the heart of our America. I know it to be good and generous. That is evident in the songs Americans love. It is evident in the way they respond to every tug at their heartstrings. If they allow intolerance to make headway notwithstanding, it is largely through neglect and indifference.

Let's be intolerant—of intolerance. Apply yourself to a better understanding of your neighbor. Teach your children to respect other human beings, whatever their race or religion or national origin. If they repeat the clichés of intolerance, set them right at once, before prejudice takes root in another young mind.

All of us who have our eyes open know that intolerance is rife now in these United States. The hardships of wartime, the sacrifices and losses and discomforts, are always helpful to the salesman of divisive ideas. The more reason, therefore, for raising your sales resistance to propaganda of group hatred.

I don't call intolerance "un-American" because that is not a strong enough term. I call it inhuman. It cannot be fought with laws. It cannot be dealt with at conference tables. The place in which to combat intolerance is your own home, your own club, your own church, your own mind.

It's a challenge to you and to me, to every father and mother, to every teacher, to every community leader.

If we are to have lasting peace in the world, if we are to conserve those traditional freedoms we proudly call American, tolerance must prevail.

Of what use will it be for the lights to go on again all over the world—if they do not go on in our hearts?

If the hate movement is revived, symbols of intolerance like this cross set afire by Tennessee Ku Klux Klansmen some years ago will soon blaze again in America.

Prejudice: Our Postwar Battle

When the overseas conflict ends, we face an internal war—unless racial and religious tensions are removed.

The architects of peace, gathering in San Francisco this month to blueprint a better world, probably have never heard the story of the Negro girl who was asked by her teacher to name a suitable punishment for Hitler. "Paint him black," was her bitter suggestion, "and bring him to America."

This has been a war of liberation for oppressed peoples all over the globe. Yet within the borders of our own nation, one third of the people—the minorities who constitute our second-class citizens—are still behind the barbed-wire fence of prejudice.

Hatred and suspicion divide America. On one side, generally, is the white, Protestant majority. On the other are the 17,000,000 "sub-Americans" of different races and colors—Negroes, Mexicans, American Indians, Japanese, Chinese, Filipinos—plus the 23,000,000 Catholics and 4,500,000 Jews who, because of religion, are sometimes shut out from main currents of national life.

The powder keg of prejudice awaits the spark that may detonate conflict. When restraints of war are off and demobilization, reconversion and lay-offs disrupt the nation, trouble is expected. Minorities will not easily accept "discriminatory discharges." Merchants of hate will exploit the friction.

Can the United States, dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal, ward off postwar catastrophe? An important, timely book—One Nation, by Wallace Stegner and the Editors of LOOK, to be published this fall by Houghton Mifflin—astutely analyzes the state of our prejudices. In the pages that follow, based mainly on One Nation, LOOK diagnoses this insidious illness which afflicts all America, and suggests some possible cures.

Underlying our prejudices, whether racial, religious or cultural, is fear—the fear of being overrun, changed or diluted, done out of our jobs or social positions. Thus prejudice is a defense of our particular status quo, our "pure" race, our "right" faith. Too many Americans who should know better shy away from people who appear to be "different" and deliberately or unconsciously wall them off.

Segregation—Shame of Democracy

Probably the most common symptom of our malady is segregation. The South's Jim Crow caste system, at odds with all democratic principles, separates the Negro on trains and buses, excludes him from parks, hotels, restaurants, beaches and schools frequented by whites, seats him in a "nigger heaven" balcony at the theater. Even in our armed forces, Negro enlisted men are often kept apart.

To a lesser extent, Filipinos and Mexicans on the West Coast are barred from "white" restaurants, segregated in theatres. Chinese are apt to be confined to "Chinatowns."

Advertisements for resorts or for the sale or rent of property often stipulate "Protestant Only" or "White Only" or "Gentile Only." Restrictive clauses in property deeds, agreements among neighborhood associations and real-estate agents set up the equivalent of a "No Dogs Allowed" ban against the unaccepted. Even wartime-housing projects are likely to discriminate. In Northern cities, colored ghettos have become worse, rather than better.

By-products: Disease, Poverty, Crime

One effect of physical segregation in slums and "shacktowns" is overcrowding, which in turn produces poverty, squalor, disease, crime and ignorance. Here, even such elementary needs as garbage disposal and fire prevention are generally inadequate.

Illness of almost every kind is pronounced in the Black Belts of virtually every city where Negroes have settled. Pneumonia and scarlet fever, for instance, hit their highest peak there. Infant mortality among Negroes in Chicago is twice as high as it is in the rest of the city. Among the Hispanos (Spanish-Americans) of New

Prejudice in its ultimate form means violence—last resort of vigilante action and terror against our "second-class citizens." This Negro being assisted by two white men was stoned in a race riot by other white Americans demanding segregation at a Detroit housing project. In general, the process of intolerance may start with comparatively harmless social snobbery, give way to active denunciation of a minority group, and lead to serious street fights and riots.

THESE ARE THE EVILS: Segregation . . . Poverty . . .

Mexico, the tuberculosis death rate is about three times the national rate; in San Francisco's Chinatown, it is three times the city's average.

In supporting segregation, as One Nation points out, America is subsidizing social evils. When diseases in slums break away and become epidemic, when anti-social behavior created by slum living turns into a crime wave, or when race tensions explode into riots and bloodshed, the entire population pays the bill.

Wanted: Equal Opportunities

Reinforcing the fencing-in process, economic discrimination resists the efforts of our sub-citizens to rise out of their "class." A number of business firms will not employ Catholics or Jews. The South recognizes "white men's jobs" and "nigger jobs," the latter being the servile, the low-paid and the unpleasant. Thirty-two labor unions either exclude Negroes or shunt them into Jim Crow locals. Hate strikes have broken out against hiring and upgrading of Negroes, in the North as well as the South.

Highly trained Chinese and Japanese have been forced into menial jobs. Mexicans and Filipinos generally have been confined to back-breaking migrant labor. Although the manpower shortage and the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee have recently tended to even up work opportunities, widespread discrimination persists.

Schools Are Hand-me-downs

As with jobs and homes, education is offered to some minority groups only on inferior or separate terms. Certain colleges and professional schools have "quotas" for Jews and the colored races. The system of separate schools for colored children, prevalent in the South, shows signs of spreading to the North. Southern schools for Negroes are crowded, inadequately equipped; colored teachers draw salaries lower than those of white teachers. Mexicans in Los Angeles and other Southwest communities have similar educational hand-me-downs.

The Law, Too, Is Prejudiced

Inevitably, legal discrimination has become part of the pattern of keeping the sub-American "in his place." Police protection for minorities is frequently a farce. "Law and order" too often is applied according to the ruling caste, class, color and faith. When hoodlums attack a minority group, victims rather than aggressors are jailed—"for protection." Voting procedures like the poll tax in seven Southern states, or direct intimidation at balloting or registration

Loyal Japanese-Americans may now return to the West Coast states, but during their absence in relocation camps anti-Japanese feeling—as this sign shows—has grown worse. Jingoistic groups foment much of this hatred.

Hoodlumism may take the form of knocking over tombstones in a Catholic cemetery—like this one in New Jersey—or vandalism in synagogues and churches. Disagreement with any religious belief never justifies such action.

A Negro teacher in a classroom of predominantly white children, as in this New York school, should not be a rarity. Equal opportunity will lift the blight from the lives of minorities, give them a chance to develop as citizens. Not lack of ability but prejudice blocks them from economic, educational and social progress. Even under handicaps, Negroes, Jews, Catholics, other groups contribute much to American life——in science, business, education, medicine, arts.

Violence . . . Job Discrimination . . . Hate Propaganda places, rob Negroes and others of their franchise.

The ultimate stage of the sickness known as prejudice is violence. It may take the form of hoodlumism, vigilante action or terror. Recent incidents directed at Negroes, Jews, Japanese, Mexicans and Filipinos have a clear relationship with the Nazi philosophy of hate; the difference is only in degree.

Hate Mongers Use Nazi Methods

Feeding these fires of discord is the slimy propaganda shoveled out by the demagogues who spread their lies via whispers, chain-letters, mass meetings, pamphlets and periodicals. Their poison infects all sorts of people. A decent, well-meaning American is likely to swallow the most whiskered myths and generalizations —canards about Catholic "opposition to scientific progress," Jewish "monopoly," Negro and Mexican "shiftlessness," the Filipino "threat to young American womanhood," unfair Chinese "competition with white labor."

The task of checking group tensions, before they break out into a postwar battle, is America's challenge. How can we meet it?

At no time in recent history have the American people been so conscious of racial and religious prejudice as they are today. Under the impact of war and its democratic aims, more has been done to combat discrimination in the past few years than in decades before. Over 200 interracial committees, created by public or private agencies, are tackling local issues. But the outcome of our civil war against intolerance must eventually rest with you, as a voting citizen, and with your community.

You can help bulwark your democracy against the enemy within. Here are some specific things you can do about it:

Facts Refute the Myths

1. Nail the lies. Refute the moth-eaten labels, libels and worn-out club-car jokes about members of minority groups. Generalizations about any racial or religious group are absurd. The Negro's achievements in the arts and science, in industry and on the fighting front, blast the myth that he "can't do skilled work," that he is "a child, with a child's emotional equipment and dependence." If the Catholic Church "in politics" scares some people, you can point out that Catholics in America are of virtually every political persuasion.

There Is No Composite "Character"

The Jews are neither a race nor a nation; they are so mixed that generalizing about them is impossible. There is a higher percentage of Jews in the armed services than

Anti-Jewish feeling in America is not often violent, but prejudice in Nazi coloring crops out in such signs as this on a railroad underpass in New York City. They indicate youthful gangs have been infected by rabble-rousers.

Bad housing retards families such as these Mexican migrant farm workers. Segregation from "white" residential areas prevents the underprivileged from escaping the slum evils of disease, crime, ignorance, vice, delinquency.

God Bless America is sung by these children of 24 nationalities in a Los Angeles school. Youth holds the brightest hope for eradication of intolerance. Studies show children have no natural aversion to other races; they learn it, from parents and others. Education alone will not banish suspicions and fears; but it can bring home to American people the pressing need to improve our democracy on all fronts and help remove the threat to the future of our country.

WHAT YOU CAN DO: Expose the Lies . . . Legislation . . . Equal Opportunity . . . Education . . . Know Your Neighbor in the general population. Election statistics prove the Jew is not a Communist. Nor does a study of bank directorates indicate that he is an "international banker." The composite Negro or Catholic or Jew does not exist.

2. Support legislation, both local and national, outlawing the evils of intolerance. Legislative firmness not only can curb prejudice; it can help break down that prejudice by making people learn that the thing they have feared is no more than an inflated bogey.

New York State has just enacted a law designed to prevent discrimination in employment. There is need for a permanent federal Fair Employment Practices Committee, a federal anti-lynching law, repeal of poll-tax statutes, a ban on discrimination in our armed forces, schools, trade unions, housing projects, medical care.

Give the Minorities a Chance

3. Help open up equal employment opportunity, in private industry and government. This can be a real contribution to economic security of minorities and to better harmony.

During this war, our second-class citizens have demonstrated their ability to handle any and all jobs, skilled or unskilled, if they are only given the chance of training and experience. If you're an employer, give them the same kind of chance in peacetime, too.

4. Participate, wherever possible, in educational campaigns to combat prejudice. Through our schools and churches, young and old must be made to see prejudice not as white versus black, or Protestant versus Jew and Catholic, but as democracy versus fascism.

Schools should become a social pilot plant for the understanding of races, cultures, heredity. In most young people, merely going to school together breaks down the worst prejudices, unless they are subjected outside to propaganda fomenting distrust, snobbery and hatred.

Needed: More Springfield Plans

Schools can actively educate for racial and religious democracy. An outstanding example is the Springfield (Mass.) Plan. A few years ago, this city found that soon its schools would be attended mostly by children of foreign stock, rather than by Yankees. In a decade, these "across-the-tracks" children, grown up, would run Springfield. Rather than look down on the "minorities," Springfield decided to make them full and equal Americans. So the school board revised the curriculum, launched an experimental program to meet the problem.

Under the plan, students are given practical experience in working together. Pride in their backgrounds is encouraged. The Negro, Jewish or Polish child gets a chance to learn, write and talk about the contributions his group have made to America. Parents get the same chance through forums and adult classes. The many kinds of people in Springfield have been welded into a community.

Other cities are studying and copying the Springfield Plan. You should try to interest your town in adopting it.

They, Too, Are Fellow-Americans

5. Know your neighbor. Nobody knows so little about a minority group as the average American who has lived near it for years. Since prejudice feeds on ignorance, any sort of contact, any breakdown of the segregation wall tends to weaken or destroy it. Take part in church, school and community-center get-togethers with people of varied cultural, racial and religious backgrounds.

6. Help marshal public opinion against intolerance. Get behind one of the many interfaith and interracial organizations, support your mayor's or governor's committee planning and promoting internal harmony.

Prejudice Endangers Your Own Welfare

You have a personal stake in a working democracy. Prejudice, through the evils it creates, undermines public health, public safety, religion, the home, business.

There is no magic formula to end intolerance in America. We can start with education, better jobs, better housing, more social freedom, more political freedom. Progress in one field advances others. But our basic, important mission is to guide the potential good-will of Americans into channels of working and living together as a nation united.

We agree with the editors of Look.

YOU CAN "help open up equal employment opportunity"! Write your Representative in Congress to vote for H. R. 2232 and your Senators to vote for S. 101—the bill to establish a permanent FEPC. Ask your friends to write, too!

Prejudice!—Roadblock To Progress

PRACTICALLY everyone of us has prejudices. Some of us may shudder at the idea of eating frogs and other foods we've never tasted but which other people enjoy. Or we may be prejudiced against bow ties or purple shirts. But these are meaningless prejudices which don't hurt us. There are other prejudices, however, which affect our lives very much. A prejudice against a necktie because of its color is harmless—but a prejudice against a person because of his color, race, nationality, or religion can do plenty of damage.

A prejudice is an opinion or emotional feeling which isn't based on fact or on reason. It is an attitude in a closed mind. Prejudice has been used by the Germans and the Japanese to split nations wide open with hate and confusion. Recognizing how powerful is this weapon in the Axis arsenal, ASF Manual M 5, issued October 1944, declares:

"Enemy attempts to cause confusion in the U. S. through the spread of racial doctrines have made it particularly necessary that there be frank and objective discussion of this subject during the present War. The doctrine of 'Aryan' superiority has become one of the dominant factors in the present world struggle. Hitler has made this doctrine the 'reason' for untold aggression and devastation.

"Likewise, on the other side of the world," the Manual continues, "the Japanese have been trying to demonstrate their inherent superiority. . . ."

The magic of race prejudice, the Japanese discovered, had performed miracles in Europe. It had enabled the Nazis to get away with murder. If Hitler could seize Germany and disrupt Europe with the help of race hate, the Japanese saw no reason why they couldn't do the same thing in Asia.

About a week after Pearl Harbor, the Japanese were broadcasting: "How can America be fighting for racial equality when it does not exist in America?" During the 1943 race riots in Detroit, the Japanese propagandists had a field day broadcasting the news to hundreds of millions of non-whites in Asia and throughout the world.

Japan's "championing" of the Negroes in the United States has only one purpose—to divide us. Negroes, forming as they do about one-tenth of the American population, are an important minority, and Hitler has shown how minority problems can be exploited to the advantage of fascism.

"The man who spreads rumors," ASF Manual M 5 declares, "particularly race rumors, about any group —racial, religious, or national is doing Hitler's or Tojo's work. The Nazis assumed that in this country they would find antagonistic groups who would spend their time fighting each other instead of the German armies. Goebbels said to one of his confidants: 'Nothing will be easier than to produce a bloody revolution in America. No other country has so many social and racial tensions. We shall be able to play on many strings there'."

Any American who "plays on these strings" by spreading prejudices against minorities—Catholics, Jews, Negroes, foreign-born, and others—is, whether he knows it or not, playing the Axis game.

(The foregoing will help you to plan a brief introductory talk in your own words.)

Note For This Week's Discussion:

Points to stress in this week's ARMY TALK are: (1) Racial and religious prejudices are not only unchristian and un-American but are deadly weapons used by the Germans and the Japanese in their war against democracy; (2) All of us are members of minority groups which have been scapegoated at one time or another; (3) Once prejudice is used against any group it spreads to other groups; (4) Prejudice makes all of us poorer economically and robs us of the potential contributions of minorities; (5) Prejudice diverts attention from the real issues and prevents us from finding solutions to our problems; (6) Prejudice means disunity which postpones victory and endangers world peace.

How Prejudices Develop

1. How do we get our prejudices?

All of us inherit certain characteristics such as the color of our skin and the shape of our head. But we do not inherit our prejudices. When we are born we have only the capacity to develop love and hate and the other human emotions.

Whom we learn to like or dislike, love or hate, depends on our experiences—in our home, in our school, in our neighborhood—and the effect these experiences have upon us. The language we learn, our religion, ideas, feelings, and atttitudes, our manners and prejudices—all these come from our environment.

As children, we imitate not only activities of those around us, especially our parents, but also feelings, attitudes, and opinions. Prejudices, too, are absorbed unconsciously from our parents and other people in our environment.

By the time we have grown up we already have "pictures in our mind" of many people with whom we've had little or no contact. We may have a stereotyped picture of Negroes as lazy, stupid, happy-go-lucky; of Jews or Scots as stingy and money-mad; of Irishmen as hot-tempered, brawling, whiskey-loving. These stereotypes are being constantly reinforced through newspapers, movies, conversations and jokes, books and radio. A single story, comic strip, or movie may not make too deep an impression. However, when time after time the Negro is presented as a crap-shooting, shiftless character; the Latin as a gangster or racketeer; the oriental as a slinking, mysterious, and crafty person—then deep and lasting impressions are made which go to form attitudes and prejudices.

Errors Of Generalizing

There is another way that we get false ideas about whole groups of people. As youngsters we may have played games with boys in the neighborhood, and one of them, perhaps a Pole or an Italian, may have cheated. We then conclude that all Poles or all Italians cheat, and we carry this idea with us all through life. We conclude that because one member of a group acted in a certain way, all members of that racial, religious, or national group will act the same way. We usually make these false generalizations about any group but our own. If we're Protestant and a member of our group lies, we don't condemn all Protestants. If we're Catholic and one of our members steals, we don't say all Catholics are thieves. If we're Jewish and one of our group commits a crime, we don't say all Jews are criminals.

It is only natural and human to be curious about things or people about whom we know very little. Curiosity is wholesome, and when it leads a man to investigate honestly the thing that arouses his curiosity, he often finds something new and interesting. However, when he does not make the effort to look honestly into the thing that first called forth curiosity —when, instead, he lets the matter dwell and go unanswered—he closes his mind to healthy thinking, and trouble begins: Curiosity gives way to suspicion—suspicion quickly converts itself to fear—and fear grows into hate! One fears the thing he suspects, and hates that which makes him afraid. This fear of the strange and unfamiliar is called by a high-sounding name—Xenophobia. Primitive tribes usually feared and therefore hated a neighboring tribe because they didn't know them. Unenlightened people today have that same fear and suspicion of the unknown. Only when we've lived and worked with people of different races, cultures, and backgrounds, and learned to know them, can we really overcome these primitive fears.

Insecurity Breeds Prejudice

Prejudices develop, too, from a feeling of insecurity or frustration. We may feel uncertain about our ability or prestige. We may feel insecure in our job or our social position. To strengthen our own confidence and feeling of self-importance, we often search for someone to look down upon as "inferior" or some group to blame for our failure and misfortune. That is why there is more prejudice in times of social stress and economic depression. Depression brings insecurity—and insecure people begin looking around for someone or some group on whom they can pin the blame.

Prejudices are often deliberately exploited by some people to further their own purposes. The Germans used the "hate" technique to divide opposition, to confuse the real issues, to blame national or international ills on innocent scapegoats, and to gain a following by a common hate. "Hate the Jews!" they yelled. "Hate the Poles!" "Hate the Russians!" "Hate the Negroes!" "Hate the Catholics!" Hate them for their color—their religion—their politics—their nationality. Hate them for any reason—or for no reason—but hate them. For hate meant power—to the Nazis!

What Is A Minority?

2. What do we mean by a minority?

The dictionary defines a minority as less than half. But that doesn't quite explain the kind of minorities to which you and I and everyone in America belongs. If you're a Catholic, you're part of a minority, because Catholics don't number more than half of the people in this country. If you're a Negro, a foreign-born, a Jew, you're a member of a minority.

Now, if you're a Protestant, you're a member of a

Four Army Chaplains

Four Army chaplains—a Catholic priest, a Jewish rabbi, and two Protestant ministers—stood hand in hand on the deck of the sinking transport SS Dorchester in the North Atlantic one bitter winter morning. Struck by a U-boat torpedo, the ship was doomed.

Most of the men were rescued—but not the four khaki-clad chaplains. With utter disregard for their own lives, these four had stripped off their own life-jackets and given them to soldiers who had none of their own. Then, praying to God for the safety of the men abandoning the sinking ship, they remained steadfast on its deck until it plunged to the bottom.

Surviviors later told of having seen the four chaplains, Lt. Washington, priest; Lt. Goode, rabbi; Lt. Poling and Lt. Fox, ministers—praying together as the ship carried them to their death.

majority group in America—but Protestants include Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and scores of other minorities. And while a Protestant may be part of a majority group in one locality in the United States, he may be in a numerical minority in another locality.

America, like the rest of the world, is made up of minorities—religious, racial, and national. Let us remember that a minority group, like the Poles or the Negroes in America, may be a majority group elsewhere (say in Poland or Africa), and that a majority group today may become a minority group tomorrow—or vice versa.

All Have Been "Scapegoats"

In ancient days many people believed that their guilt and sins could be transferred to some other person, animal, or object. During rituals performed by a leader of the tribe, a goat was often chosen by lot and the sins of the tribe passed on to the animal. The goat was then driven into the wilderness or destroyed.

Today, when people blame their troubles or woes on innocent people, we call this unjust persecution "scapegoating."

3. Have all minority groups been "scapegoated?"

At one time or another, every minority group has been used as a scapegoat and has suffered from prejudice and persecution. If we go back deep into history, we find powerful leaders who covered up their own selfish motives by inciting people's emotions against "troublemaking" minorities. In the days of the Romans, Christians were blamed for all the troubles of the Roman Empire—including the burning of Rome—and for years they were persecuted.

Christians, in turn, have persecuted Jews. During the "Black Death" in the Middle Ages, when bubonic plague killed off one-fourth of Europe's population, responsibility was laid to the Jews who were tortured and oppressed, even though Jews were dying off as rapidly as Christians. In Spain, monarchists rode to power against the Jews. The autocratic empire of the Czars blamed the Jews for the abuses of the Russian feudal regime and massacred thousands of them.

In the eighteenth century, a large colony of French Hugenots lived in England. They were accused of being dirty, of reducing the standard of living, of depriving Englishmen of the jobs, and of reducing their wages. A flood of pamphlets issued against these Hugenots was reprinted a hundred years later with the word "Jew" substituted for "Hugenot."

In Hitler's Germany the Nazis began by persecuting the Jews, but eventually they turned upon Catholics, Protestants, Czechs, Poles—and the entire world.

Persecution In America

4. How about America? Has our own history been free of scapegoating?

America, too, has its shameful pages of persecution of minorities. Many of our early settlers who came here to escape religious prejudices and persecution denied religious freedom to others. Massachusetts expelled dissenters like Roger Williams, while in Salem hysterical witch hunts were pursued. In one colony or another, Catholics, Quakers, Jews, Lutherans, Moravians, Presbyterians, Baptists, deists, atheists, were deprived of political and religious rights.

In the nineteenth century, earlier immigrant groups began to discriminate against the "newer" immigrants. Feeling ran high against the "invasion" of the Irish who arrived in large numbers after Ireland's potato famine of 1846. Riots broke out against them in Philadelphia, Boston, and New York. They were accused of introducing slums, crime, and of depriving Americans of jobs.

In 1850, the "Know Nothing" Party was formed to fight the Irish and Catholic immigrants, and the party remained a political force until the Civil War. They and their prejudiced successors yelled about "the flood of immigration sweeping its millions of foreign Roman Catholics over the land."

Eventually, most of this discrimination was turned against later immigrant groups—the Poles, Italians, Slavs, Jews, and Russians. When immigration was restricted to annual quotas for each nationality after World War I, preference was given to earlier immigrant groups. (Quotas were based on the census of 1910, then of 1890, then on the national origin of the white population of 1920.)

What many seem to forget is that we are all immigrants or the children of immigrants. No one has a right to complain about "foreigners" unless it be the American Indian. "Americanism," said our late President Roosevelt, "is not and never was a matter of race and ancestry. Americanism is a matter of the mind and heart."

True Democracy Gaining

5. Are there any signs that prejudices and discrimination are decreasing in America?

While the democratic ideals expressed by the Founding Fathers, the Declaration of Independence, and the Constitution have not always been practiced, nevertheless, the liberties and freedoms which we share and which bind this nation together, are one of the glorious chapters in human history. We have gone further in the direction of equality of opportunities than have the people of most other countries, and we are continuing our progress in that direction. Through the years there has been a sustained effort to abolish discriminations and prejudices which deny a person his fundamental rights as a citizen in a democracy. Discriminations and prejudices are not products of—but rather challenges to—the American way of life. And each of us has a personal responsibility to see to it that the American way of life prevails.

From the time of Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation to the present time, laws have been passed to carry forward the democratic principle "that all men are created equal."

When the Negroes were freed, 90 percent of them could neither read nor write. In 1940, according to the Federal Census, 18 of every 20 Negroes could read and write. Many states have already moved far toward equalization of educational opportunity for Negroes and whites. In a 25-year period, the registration of Negro college students showed an increase of 2,400 percent.

A great advance was made in June 1941 when President Roosevelt issued Executive Order 8802 and declared: "It is the policy of the United States to encourage full participation in the national defense program by all citizens of the United States regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin." The order requires that in all war contracts there is no discrimination "because of race, creed, or national origin" and sets up the Fair Employment Practice Committee to enforce this provision.

At the same time, many Americans are beginning to realize that racial and religious prejudices menace our war effort and our hopes for world peace. More and more Americans are becoming convinced that every person, regardless of his race, religion, or national origin, should be judged on the basis of his own merit. They are beginning to see that much straight thinking is needed on the problems of minorities and that the solution of these problems has a great deal to do with the welfare of our nation as well as our own and our children's welfare. Many are learning that democracy cannot work for some unless it works for all.

Six Dangers Of Prejudice

6. Why is religious and racial prejudice a threat to all of us?

(Suggestion: Write on the board or read to your group the topic heads in bold-face below. Then get as many of the answers as possible from the group.)

A. Prejudice Is Contagious. History has taught us that when we discriminate against one segment of the people, we set a pattern that may be used against other groups. Hitler's persecution of the Jews, trade unionists, communists, and socialists was later directed against Catholics, Protestants, liberals and eventually the people of the world.

In 1855 Abraham Lincoln understood this when he said: "As a nation we began by declaring all men are created equal. We now read it 'All men are created equal except Negroes.' When the Know Nothings get control it will read 'All men are created equal except Negroes, and foreigners, and Catholics'."

Consideration for the Negro, the Jew, the Catholic, the foreign born, or for any other minority group, rests not merely on the grounds of humanity and justice; it rests on the solid base of self-interest.

B. Prejudice Makes All Of Us Poorer. We can't have an enlightened democracy with minority groups living in ignorance. We can't have a prosperous democracy with minority groups so poor that they can't afford to buy the goods America produces.

If a minority is kept at a low wage scale in the same field or area in which we work, eventually our own wages will be reduced because of a smaller demand for consumer goods and the competition of cheap labor. Conversely, a higher standard of living for any group increases the demands for consumer goods and makes for a more prosperous country. Aside from the fact that it is Christian and democratic, it is also to our own selfish interest to help secure better housing, clothing, and nutrition for ALL our people.

As Eric A. Johnston, president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, recently declared: "Whenever we erect barriers on the grounds of race or religion, or of occupational or professional status, we hamper the fullest expansion of our economic security. Prejudice doesn't pay. Discrimination is destructive."

C. Prejudice Robs Us Of Minority Talents. Prejudice often prevents minority groups from developing their abilities and skills. It limits their achievements and deprives the nation of their genius. We are all poorer in America today because discrimination prevents members of some minorities from rising to their greatest possible achievements, thus lessening their potential contributions to the general wealth and welfare of America.

D. Prejudice Blinds Us To Real Situation. Prejudice makes impossible any real solution of economic, social, or personal difficulties. When we blame war or social and economic troubles on some innocent minority group, we are diverting our attention from the real causes. By blaming and hating some scapegoat for our misfortunes, we intensify rather than remove the difficulties. Social ills can only be remedied by all members of society accepting their share of responsibility and cooperating through democratic means to solve their common problems.

E. Prejudice Endangers Victory. Prejudice means disunity, and disunity plays into the hands of the enemies of democracy. National unity is just as essential to victory as battleships and flying fortresses. America can't give its maximum to the war effort unless we conquer the disrupting effects of prejudice on the fighting front and the production front.

The War Department (in ASF Manual M 5) recognizes that "discrimination on the basis of race or color . . ." is "fatal to military efficiency." And War Department pamphlet 20-3 states: "To contribute by act or word toward the increase of misunderstanding, suspicion and tension between peoples of different racial or national origin in this country or among our Allies is to help the enemy!"

The Detroit race riot of June 1943 and the Philadelphia transport strike of August 1944 offer two isolated but dramatic instances of the disruptive effects of discrimination on the production front.

The walk-out of 6,000 employees of the Philadelphia Transportation Company, precipitated by the assignment of eight Negroes to jobs as street-car operators, paralysed the city's vast transportation system. The six-day traffic tie-up kept thousands of war workers from their jobs, and four million man hours of vital war production were lost.

The two-day Detroit race riot cut war production 15 to 50 percent in some plants, and absenteeism ranged from 20 to 90 percent. A million hours of labor were lost.

F. Prejudice Endangers World Peace. Even more disastrous is the effect which news of race riots and discrimination against minorities has upon the morale of our fighting men abroad, and on the millions of people throughout the world, white and colored, whose loyalty and help are so vital to the allied cause. It has been powerful ammunition for the propagandists of the Axis in Europe, Africa, the Near East, and particularly the Far East.

Three-fourths of the people of the world are what we call "colored." These people naturally look to the treatment of our American Negroes to see what we really mean when we speak of democracy. Racial and religious prejudice alienates the confidence of the vast non-white populations as well as other peoples, thwarts their hopes and our hopes of peace and freedom, and ultimately creates the conditions from which future global wars can develop.

How we treat minorities is, therefore, more than a matter of mere domestic concern. Almost 13 million people in the U. S. were born in Europe, and 27 million have parents born in Europe. The mistreatment of some Mexicans in the U. S. echoes throughout North and South America; a race riot provokes discussions and resentments in Africa, the Philippines, and among the 800 million non-white people in China and India.

Throughout the world there are millions of people convinced that this is a total war against fascism and fascist ideas. Their concept of peace includes the hope—even the determination—that when this War is won, there will be no such thing as "superior" and "inferior" peoples anywhere in the world.

Story Of America Proves It

The story of America is proof that there are no "superior" or "inferior" people. Our country has been made great by people who came from every land under the sun—people with names like Carnegie, Sikorsky, Toscanini, Einstein, Osler—and thousands more. But it isn't only the big names, the Hall of Fame names, who have made America—any more than it is only the big names who are winning the War. We know that the biggest part of this War is being fought and won by the little names, by the millions of Joe Doakes who may never make tomorrow's headlines.

The men who built and are building America—who clear her forests, span her rivers, dig her coal, plough her fields, work her machines—the men who made America strong and free—and are fighting and dying to preserve that freedom on battlefields all over the world—are men of every race, color, religion, and nationality. Listen to their names at roll call. Read their names in casualty lists—like these from the New York Times of 29 March 1945:

Agostinello . . . Cohen . . . Curran . . . Grunwald . . . Hrubec . . . Ivanoski . . . Kuzian . . . Marshall . . . Thomas . . . Warblanski . . .

Were any of these "inferior?"

AIDS FOR DISCUSSION LEADERS

The following points of information are offered with the thought that they may be helpful to you during the discussion. They have no immediate place in the discussion proper, but they may prove useful should additional questions be raised by any members of your group.

Modern science has revealed that all human blood is the same whether it be the blood of an Eskimo, Frenchman, German, Englishman, or an African pygmy—except for one basic difference. If you look at the dog tags of the men in your unit you'll notice that there are four types of blood—O, A, B, AB—and it all has to do with the matter of blood transfusions. While blood type O can be mixed successfully with the other three, none of the other three can be mixed with one another without clotting.

Whites, Negroes, Mongolians—ALL races, religions, nationalities have every one of these blood types.

The "blood and race" theories of the Nazis have never been accepted by scientists and have more than been disproved by the War. It is true that years ago Germans were in the forefront in many fields of science. But today, the U. S.—a melting pot of all nationalities—leads the world in science. In the mid-nineteenth century it was the British, while in the seventeenth century it was the Dutch who were the most scientifically inclined.

Under future historical or cultural influences, the Chinese may again be among the most advanced technological people as they were at an earlier period in world history.

In the ninth century, Scandanavians were the feared, warlike Vikings; today they are a peaceful, non-aggressive people and chief advocates of co-operatives. For centuries the Japanese had a record of uninterrupted peace and non-aggression while today Japan is one of the most warlike of nations.

Immigrant groups coming to America have carried with them the special traditions, skills, and attitudes of the economic group into which they were forced. In feudal agricultural societies, the Jews, excluded from agriculture, were compelled to become the merchants and craftsmen. Thus Jews in America most commonly entered commerce and certain of the skilled crafts and professions. Italians are vine growers in California for obvious geographical and historical reasons. Poles entered the coal fields because many of the first and most enterprising immigrants from Poland were miners from Silesia who established centers of Polish population in America's mining regions.

The special skills which members of a group possess and the occupations in which they engage are the result of historical conditioning and not the result of any inherent traits.

The following excerpts are from ASF Manual M 5:

"Competent scholars in the field of racial differences are almost unanimous in the opinion that race 'superiority' and 'inferiority' have not been demonstrated despite the existence of clearly defined and tested differences between individuals within every race."

"Scientific knowledge does not support the idea of the inherent superiority of any one race over another. Students of history, psychology, biology, and anthropology are in general agreement that the progress of civilization has had little or no relation to alleged inborn, biological characteristics of particular races or nationalities."

"It is agreed also that most of the differences revealed by intelligence tests and other devices can be accounted for in terms of differences in opportunity and background. The important consideration at this time, then, is how to offer increased opportunities —both physical and cultural—to all handicapped groups, regardless of race, since these variables account in large part for poor performance and achievement in every group."

"Character and personality traits unsuitable in the soldier which may exist among your men are principally the result of environment, not of race."

"The Army cannot function efficiently on the basis of theories that individual capacities are definitely fixed by a man's race."

"The Army accepts no theories of racial inferiority or superiority for American troops but considers that its task is to utilize its men on their individual merits in the achievement of final victory. A realistic and impartial examination of the evidence on racial difference in ability supports this position."

The following are unofficial figures, compiled under the supervision of Louis I. Dublin, vice-president and chief statistician of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company:

"Jews comprise approximately 3.5 percent of the population of the U. S. As of 1 March 1945, more than 500,000 Jews were in the armed forces. They constitute a little over 4 percent of the men and women in the service. It is estimated that on 1 March 1945 there were 35,000 Jewish casualties, approximately 7 percent of the Jews in service. Up to 1 March 1945, total casualties in the armed forces were 840,000 or approximately 7 percent."

For the past 100 years organizations like the "Know Nothing" Party have been asserting that a good Roman Catholic can't be, at the same time, a loyal American citizen. The Vatican, they maintain, claims absolute and unquestioning obedience in all things, and as an American citizen, a Catholic must support the Church against the State.

This slander assumes the existence of a Catholic political party in the United States. Of course, there is no such thing. Catholics, like every other group, are found in all political parties.

Religious bigotry reached shameful heights in the election campaign of 1928 when the late Alfred E. Smith, a devout Catholic, was nominated for President. Anti-Catholics maintained that in the event of Smith's election, the Pope would dictate to the President, and that the interests of the United States would be subordinated to those of the Church.

Alfred E. Smith stated his position clearly and unequivocally. He declared that no power in the Catholic Church could interfere with the operations of the U. S. Constitution or the enforcement of the laws of the land. He believed in absolute freedom of conscience for all men, and in equality of all churches, sects, and beliefs. He believed in the absolute separation of Church and State, and in the enforcement of the Constitution's provisions prohibiting Congress from enacting any law concerning an establishment of religion or preventing religion's free exercise. He believed in the common brotherhood of man and he fervently hoped that "never again in this land will any public servant be challenged because of the faith in which he has tried to walk humbly with his God."

According to an intensive study made by Fortune magazine, "there is no basis whatever for the suggestion that Jews monopolize U. S. business and industry. . . . The great mass of the 4,500,000 American Jews, like the great mass of American non-Jews, is made up of workers, employed and non-employed."

"First of all and very definitely," continues the Fortune survey, "they do not run banking. They play little or no part in great commercial houses like J. P. Morgan, National City Bank, Chase National Bank, Guaranty Trust Co., etc.

"Among the 93,000 bankers in the U. S., the Jews constitute six-tenths of one percent whereas the Jewish population comprises about 3.5 percent of the total number of inhabitants. . . .

"They have an even more inconspicuous place in basic industry . . . steel, rubber, automobiles, chemicals, coal, shipping, transportation, aviation, light and power, telephone and telegraph, engineering, lumber, mining, etc.

"In brief, Jews are so far from controlling the most characteristic of present day American activities that they are hardly represented in them at all.

"There is much Jewish participation in the textile industry as agents and jobbers, silk and cotton converters and in the manufacture of clothing. . . ."

The Fortune study concludes: "Jews do not dominate the American scene. They do not even dominate major sections of the American scene."

America The Hope Of Oppressed

"Evil doctrines of discrimination frequently imported from gangster nations plague certain areas in America. Racial and religious intolerance is being preached and practiced here by agents of our enemies, as well as by innocent victims of their propaganda. With relentless determination, our deadly opponents still seek to apply the ancient doctrine of 'divide and rule' in their drive for world domination.

"Unfortunately, propaganda poison is exceedingly difficult to remove from our national bloodstream. The after-effects of this poison may be felt for years to come, especially if we do not recognize its danger and actively combat its spread. No nation on earth is more vulnerable to intolerance and bigotry than America, for no nation is composed of more diverse races and differing creeds than this land of the free. America became great by being a secure haven for freedom of thought and action.

"We prove conclusively that people of every race and of every creed can dwell together in harmony. In fact, America has become the hope and inspiration of all oppressed people throughout the civilized world."

—President Harry S. Truman, 17 March 1945.

"The Mainspring Of American Life"

"The Founding Fathers of the United States drew up a Declaration of Independence proclaiming that all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights. Among these rights are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Once independence had been won, the framers of the Constitution secured these rights in law by incorporating them into a Bill of Rights guaranteeing freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of the press, and equality before the law.

"This, the mainspring of American life, is what our enemies would have us destroy even while our armies are winning victories overseas. They would have us forget our belief in the equality of man and adopt their own false standards of race supremacy. They would see us divided against ourselves, our national strength consumed in racial and religious hatreds. The America our troops sought to preserve would then have been destroyed by our own hands.

"This attempt to bring about civil strife has met with more success than many of us care to admit. Propaganda aimed at setting one group against another has found its mark in many instances, and we have seen the sorry spectacle of religious bigotry and racial hatred rise where none had existed before. Or, where misunderstandings already existed, we have seen these misunderstandings somehow turned into animosities bitter enough to involve an entire city. And largely because a few hate-spreaders have accomplished their assignments."

Scapegoat Concept Violates Christian Code

"In truly civilized societies, where the rights and dignity of the individual are respected and economic opportunity is open to all according to their ability—in short, in a working democracy—these fears and hatreds have little to feed upon. They are dissolved by the forces of political freedom, universal education, and social welfare. Nothing is more undemocratic than hatred of other groups merely because they are somewhat different from our own. To condemn a whole class for the faults of one or two individuals is a sign of stupidity—or of knavery.

"Likewise, when the religion of the people is spiritually vital, prejudices against minorities do not easily take root. The concept of a scapegoat selected from weak and defenseless groups for cruel and unjust treatment violates the whole ethical code of Christianity: 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' A religion whose foundation stones are the universal fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man must inevitably contradict any scheme of things that divides mankind into permanently 'superior' groups, mutually hostile. The greatest religious leaders of all faiths have, in fact, opposed these tendencies to set one race or class against another. Pope Pius XII, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the heads of the Protestant communions in America, and the chief rabbis of Judaism have all condemned racial and religious prejudices in outspoken and strikingly similar language.

"The scapegoats of history have suffered tragic injustice, but persecution has never destroyed them. But the bad effects of intolerance upon the intolerant themselves have been evident from Nero to Hitler. Mental specialists who have studied these subjects have found that extreme intolerance has a destructive effect on the mind, and often results in a condition similar to some forms of insanity. It undermines the personality and even physical health; it weakens the ability to enjoy normal life. In the long run, the hater is more to be pitied than the hated."

—Kenneth M. Gould: They Got The Blame.

Test Of Democratic Faith

"The peace, to which we now look, will further test our democratic faith. It will not be enough to stamp out anti-democratic practices in the lands of our enemies. The conditions which created fascism there must not pass unnoticed here. Their first, and most dangerous symptom, is always the same everywhere—an abandonment of equal justice to all—the placing of some groups in a preferred class of citizenship at the expense of other groups. True democracy must continue the war on all such beliefs.

"Like most of the great values of life, the ideals of democracy and peace can be won or maintained only by constant struggle. For democracy is a fighting faith. No man with a conscience can be so far removed from that struggle as not to feel the compulsion of joining in it. Each of us in our own way has a job to do. The principles of fascism, and all that fascism stands for with its barbaric denial of human values, must be obliterated and destroyed. To accomplish this there must be an emphatic reassertion of democratic values and a resurgence of democratic faith at home and throughout the world. And there will be."

Prejudice

Doing Something About Prejudice

JULIUS SCHREIBER, M.D.

"No, I'm not prejudiced. It's just that I prefer a white stenographer. And that's all there is to it!"

But is that all there is to it?

What is a prejudice? It is an emotional blind-spot, an opinion or attitude which is actually a prejudgment, a conclusion formed without careful examination of the facts, an idea uncritically or inaccurately checked against reality.

In dealing with the problem of prejudice one often hears the word, "preference." A "preference" means a choice of one thing or person rather than another. Now a choice may be rationally or irrationally motivated. But all too often one finds an attempt to mask a prejudice by resort to semantic double-talk. "Preference" sounds so much better than "prejudice."

When I prefer to make friends with "white, Protestant, 100 percent Americans" only, my "preference" stems from irrational roots — just as any other prejudice does. For here we have a judgment which implies that a man's color or faith or birthplace or ancestry determines his actual worth as a human being. And that is neither sensible nor scientific.

Well, suppose it is a prejudice—what harm?

Let me try to be very explicit: Prejudicial attitudes and actions usually reveal a personality disturbance within the prejudiced individual. So long as the prejudice is not acted upon or does not lead others to follow in similar irrational behavior patterns (an optimistic and unreal hope), the tragedy and its consequences are a problem of the individual. But when prejudice is implemented—translated into some form of unfair discriminatory practice—it is no longer an individual problem: it becomes a social problem calling for social concern and social action.

If the selection of a "social companion" is based solely on the color of a man's skin, we have an act of prejudice which is admittedly between "me and him." Even this does not mean that prejudice so expressed is harmless.

But suppose we carry our blind-spots beyond the realm of social companionship, into the area of bread and butter, and refuse to hire someone who is clearly qualified for a job solely because we dislike his religion or color—what then? Here, there is a projection of our own emotional disturbances into the area of social relations to do violence to the rights of another individual. This is dangerous business.

Make no mistake about it. Prejudice undermines the mental health of all men—aggressor and victim.

Today, man holds a ticking atom bomb in one hand and a dim lamp of hope in the other. And while the seconds pass he must make what may be the last of his fundamental decisions.

Can he successfully cut through his blinding prejudices, his paralyzing greed, his irrational hates? Can he fully recognize the terrible implications of uncontrolled human hostility? Can he withstand this assault on his mental health?

Any answer less than a swift, world-shaking "Yes!" means the disappearance of the human race in an atomic puff.

Although we know more about prejudice today than we did know ten years ago, we are still in the simple arithmetic state. But of this much we are sure: no babe is born with a set of prejudices engraved upon his cortex. He has merely the capacity to develop them—or not to develop them. Later, he will become aware of some psychological insecurity. And his feelings of anxiety, frustration, hostility, guilt, and other expressions of intrapsychic conflict will be eased, at least temporarily, by a battery of irrational attitudes projected upon others. In the absence of some radical changes in the way man relates himself to his fellow men, that is what happens to people in our culture.

Very early in his life, a child becomes aware of "we" and "us" as opposed to "they" and "them." What "we" ("our family," "our group") say, do, and approve, is all right; what "they" do is open to challenge. "They," the "others," are not like us. They are strangers, outsiders, foreigners. And being different, they are, therefore, in some way inferior.

By the time we get into grammar school, the foundations have been laid for our general attitudes toward life and toward particular individuals and groups among our fellow men.

The feelings and conduct of our parents and of our relatives, friends, teachers, clergymen, neighbors influence our own feelings and conduct. All these people contribute to our stereotypes and generalizations about our fellow human beings. As we go through life, our stereotypes are reinforced by writers of fiction, by the movies, radio, theater, comic strips, and so on. And we use these stereotypes and generalizations to our own great disservice. We walk about with false mental images of what a Jew or a Catholic or a Negro "really is." Why bother to look upon each person as an individual when it is so much easier to lump all members of a group together and say, "They are all alike?"

We note discrepancies between what we hear in church, what we learn in school, what we read in our civics textbooks, and what actually goes on all about us. We listen to socially sanctioned double-talk. We see brazen hypocrisy condoned by a way of life which is shot through with ethical ambivalence.

We grow up prating highly patriotic and ethical phrases—"All men are created equal," "Love thy neighbor." Should someone take us too seriously, however, we are quick to add the handy phrase, ". . . but we have to be practical!" Our need to conform to the dominant mores of our particular group or society insures our uncritical acceptance of local prejudices.

But having been told that racial superiority is a myth and that an individual's intrinsic worth has no relation to the color of skin, to religion, sex, place of birth, or ancestry—having been given the facts, why do so many of us retain our prejudices?

HERE IS THE ANSWER: THE PREJUdiced individual needs his prejudices. He derives satisfaction from his expression of hostility. The prejudice itself is only a symptom of an underlying personality disturbance (ranging from very mild to very severe). The prejudice is used by the individual in his attempt to meet and solve his emotional problems.

The individual cannot relinquish his prejudices by virtue of having been told the "truth" because he is blind to the very facts presented. Having a need for his attitudes and actions, he "selects" from what he is told whatever suits his preconceived notions and rejects everything else as "propaganda" or "bunk." That is why he is easy prey for the hate mongers.

He is impervious to "appeals to reason" or "appeals to ethical values" because the need of his disturbed personality for a defense or outlet has compelled him to rationalize his prejudices and discriminatory acts. To him, these feelings and actions are both "reasonable" and "moral." He has to place laudable values upon them, for, in spite of his rationalizations, he is, as a rule, dimly aware of his self-deceit. Being even less able than others to control his feelings and actions by "reason," attacks upon his personality defenses in the form of "rational appeals" serve merely to accentuate the conflicts which gave rise to the prejudices in the first place.

Facts alone, then, cannot accomplish much, since prejudices arise from and are maintained by irrational sources. Facts, however, do have an extremely important part to play in an overall attack upon prejudice and discrimination, as we shall see later.

Let us return to the prejudiced individual. In some instances, his anxiety, frustration, resentment, and aggression result primarily from failure to cope with the distressing external pressures of our highly competitive society: he is unable to achieve the security and gratification which all human beings seek. Sometimes these emotional disturbances are primarily the result of inner personality conflicts. Usually, however, both processes are at work simultaneously.

The individual feels himself peculiarly vulnerable to unfriendly people or enemies that he believes are threatening him. From anxiety and frustration, there develops a series of mutually reinforcing and yet often conflicting feelings of inadequacy, superiority, hostility, aggression, submissiveness, self-hate, guilt, and other highly disturbing emotions. And if there is to be even a semblance of inner peace, the disturbance must be displaced, thrown out, projected from the disordered personality and fastened (blamed) upon some thing or process or individual or group that can be made the scapegoat for the individual's own difficulties. In order to make the projection stick, the rationalization mechanism works zealously and overtime.

The intensity and quality of prejudicial feelings and actions seem to have no relationship to the degree of personality disturbance. It should be remembered also that prejudice serves different individuals differently. For some, it is nothing more than a device to gain social acceptance; for others, it serves as a disguised outlet for primitive impulses or drives which society prohibits in their more open manifestations; for still others it serves to compensate for marked feelings of inadequacy, loneliness, or inferiority; or it may be a less subtle aggression against imagined sources of difficulties when in truth the source is within himself or his environment; and so on. While prejudice, therefore, is a symptom of a sick personality, it is, in the final analysis, a social problem.

IT SEEMS UNNECESSARY TO POINT OUT some of the tragic consequences of prejudicial actions. Millions of human beings, in each generation, suffer gnawing anxiety, shame, resentment. They see their legitimate aspirations and even modest hopes smashed by the deadly weight of prejudice.

In every land—including our own—millions of unfortunates have been made to suffer for the shortcomings and misfortunes of others. At one time or another, practically every group has been used as a scapegoat and in turn has fixed its prejudices on others.

Man has within him the talent and power to remodel the earth. He can perform miracles. He has moved himself forward and upward from the caves to the stars, from splitting rocks to smashing atoms, from beating message-drums to radio, radar, and television. And these man-made miracles came from the hearts and heads and hands of Jew and Gentile, black and white, Protestant and Catholic, native and foreign born.

A MAN'S WORTH, HIS SKILLS AND TALents, his thoughts and his feelings, his behavior toward his fellow men are not matters of "race" but of something else — the chance that society gives him to develop and flower. And when men choke off other men, when out of prejudice they condemn and destroy their victims, clearly they condemn and rob society itself.

What does all this do to the feeling, thinking, and actions of the victim? He may try to pretend that the problem does not exist. But this attempt to deny reality by flight into fantasy is unwholesome and dangerous. He may submit to the degradation which the prejudice imposes. He may say that "this world doesn't count, anyhow"—looking forward to the "next" as the place where "all men are brothers." He may identify himself more completely with his own group. He may develop a measure of self-hate and try to "escape" by agreeing with (or even joining) those who hate him. He may behave so unnaturally as to generate even more tension. He may try a little scapegoating himself—blaming his troubles on some other minority group. Perhaps best of all, he may decide to strike back at his tormentors and the environmental factors which feed their prejudices.

And that is an excellent idea. For while it is true that we need more information about prejudice and discrimination, what we need even more urgently is action — concerted, courageous, wise, honest action.

Millions of dollars are spent annually by hundreds of organizations to combat prejudice. From public platforms and from street car ads, from newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and books, over the radio and on the screen, from billboards, comic strips, blotters, and match covers — from wherever the eyes and ears of demagogue, aggressor, victim, and innocent bystander can be reached—the messages of "tolerance" and "good will" pour forth. And what does all this accomplish?

In mapping an action program to counteract prejudice and discrimination, it is well to bear in mind three things:

HOW IT STARTS — Many (perhaps most) of our prejudices are acquired in childhood; they are reinforced by local mores; they are kept alive (often started) by frustration-aggression deriving from external pressures or inner personality conflicts, or both.

WHO IS INVOLVED — The significant people in a prejudice-discrimination situation are the demagogue, the prejudiced individual (who may or does follow the demagogue and whose prejudices may be strongly or weakly held), the victim, the non-prejudiced individual (not yet prejudiced, but potentially so), the anti-prejudice individual (concerned about prejudice and trying to fight it), and the growing child.

WHAT MIGHT BE DONE — Here are the major possibilities: Research (getting the facts); education (transmitting the facts); legislation (enforcing existing laws and seeking to establish new ones); action against demagogues and hate groups, modification of community mores; joint participation (common undertakings between members of various "racial" and cultural groups); action on social issues (housing, health, full employment, minimum wage, education and so on).

And what might be accomplished through these lines of action?

Research—

An anti-prejudice action program is worthless unless it is guided by facts and theories discovered and developed by scientific research. Typical of the hundreds of questions being studied today are these:

Why is the particular minority group selected as the target by the prejudiced individual?

What (if anything) is there about the selected victim that evokes or stimulates the prejudice?

What kinds of information and experiences cause or change prejudices?

What is the relative effectiveness of the various media of communication and methods of education in the reduction of prejudice?

How may an understanding of the dynamics of prejudice be applied to an understanding of international tensions?

Education—

Education is an extremely important weapon.

But what will presentation of the facts do to the demagogue? Not much—except, perhaps, enrage him. It may, however, inhibit him somewhat, since the spread of factual information can create serious obstacles for his propaganda steamroller.

As to the prejudiced individual, we have already pointed out that he has a need for his prejudices. However, the strength with which a prejudice is held varies considerably. Prejudiced individuals do relinquish their prejudices—it happens every day! In the majority of such instances, this is not due to the presentation of the facts, alone, but rather to developments deriving from such education — improved local mores, progressive legislation, alleviation of social, economic, and political pressures, participation on a positive basis with individuals against whom prejudices exist, attainment of a more satisfactory way of discharging frustration-aggression.

Needless to say, education is of prime importance in the prevention of prejudice in children and in non-prejudiced adults. Here the excellent programs of intercultural education play a significant role. But all such education should include "what to do about it"—an action program. Further, intercultural education in our schools requires non-prejudiced teachers, professionally competent to give such training. It must be a natural part of the over-all curriculum and not a special course stuck into the catalogue. Nor should such education be limited to the school. It is a task for the entire community, in which parents, clergymen, press, radio, theater, movies must all play their parts.

What does education do for the victims of prejudice and for the anti-prejudice individuals? It provides them with factual information and thereby enriches their armament for counterattack. Education can also help the victim to accept himself and identify himself with his group. Self-esteem and self-respect are essential to counteract the self-pity and self-hate which so many victims develop.

Legislation—

When considering legislation, one should think not only of desirable new laws, but also of the enforcement of existing laws; many communities and states already have laws which, if enforced, would prevent many unfair discriminatory acts on the part of prejudiced people.

It is often argued that proposed legislation such as the bill for a federal FEPC will not work because "You can't legislate mores!" This is easy to say, and it sounds profound. But no one contends that the passing of a law on Monday will change the mores of the people by Tuesday—assuming that the new legislation goes contrary to the dominant folkways. Yet customs do change. And many such changes were stimulated, or even started, by the educational process resulting from the passage of highly controversial legislation.

This author has stated elsewhere:

> If we are proposing legislation that seeks to make a practical application of a democratic principle, and if that legislation is a down-to-earth proposal that can actually work out in everyday life, and finally if it meets the needs of objective social conditions — there is no other course but to get behind it and push for it.

The purpose of such legislation is to alleviate the unhappiness of innocent victims of prejudice, but it is sure to make some people unhappy in the process. It must be recognized that if it is to work, it must have adequate administrative machinery; that while it may be backed up by punitive measures, it should operate, primarily, on an educational level; that it should not be limited to fair employment practices. Other problems calling for legislative remedy are: the poll tax, lynching, unfair discrimination in educational institutions, segregation.

Action Against the Demagogue—

Here is a place where we must walk warily. Occasionally, in our zeal to fight the demagogue, we violate the very civil liberties which we declare he is out to destroy.

To deny a scoundrel his right to speak is to controvene the basic concepts of a free America. Further, many an obscure and utterly ineffective hate monger has been catapulted into notoriety by the attacks of outraged good citizens. Their efforts publicize him, build him up, give him unmerited prestige and a role all out of proportion to his real stature.

Occasionally such attacks upon the demagogue spread his lies much further than he can hope to do through his own efforts. That is why many a small-time rabble rouser welcomes (sometimes even stimulates) noisy brawls and attempts to deny him the right to speak.

Well then, when do we attack the demagogue? Each case is a law unto itself, but here are some useful guides: When it is clear that to leave him unanswered is to strengthen his case and spread his influence, then "throw the book at him"; particularly so, when he violates the law. If the demagogue is merely a loud mouthed puppet responding to hidden strings, he can be silenced most effectively by discovering and exposing his backers.

Local Mores—

Many prejudiced individuals are merely conforming to local mores. This calls for change in such community patterns. Non-prejudicial behavior on the part of community leaders is exceedingly important. When public officials, civic leaders, business, labor, church, school, press, and radio take the position that prejudicial behavior is un-American in spirit, that it is not the thing to do, there is enough twitching of guilt to cause many of the more mildly prejudiced individuals to reexamine their prejudices, or at least hesitate to implement them. Children growing up in a community where prejudicial feelings and actions are not part of dominant patterns are more likely to develop wholesome personalities.

Joint Participation—

Here is a tremendously important weapon. But mere physical contact with people of other groups is not enough. Prejudices are not diminished by the "rubbing of shoulders" on street cars or in crowded stores. The question is: What kind of contacts and under what conditions?

Special efforts to "get acquainted" usually have an air of artificiality about them, they are often marred by a "do-good" or patronizing attitude on the part of the comfortable majority toward members of the unhappy minority. Get acquainted by all means—but under the normal conditions of everyday life. The contact should provide a positive experience in a setting which is real.

A good start is made when we study our mutual problems together, make plans to solve them together, and actively work together, to carry out the solutions agreed upon. Small group discussion, properly conducted, is a major key to success here.

In such a face-to-face situation, important things take place. Many a prejudiced individual is drawn out of his isolation, his loneliness. In sharing the experiences of others, attempting to evaluate problems together, strong bonds of identification with the group are established. Participation in group discussion requires critical examination of long-held attitudes and opinions.

Group discussion gives everyone a chance to air his doubts, complaints and opinions. It provides a safety valve and opens up new and varied sources of information.

In group discussion, one learns to listen attentively to the other fellow, and one learns to respect his right to hold an opposing point of view.

But discussion is meaningless unless it is preliminary to constructive social action.

Cracking the Walls of Segregation—

Prejudiced people and non-prejudiced, but timid, souls behave as if anything from wholesale rape to atomic destruction must inevitably occur when white and black, for example, are permitted to work together in the same office or factory—or live together in the same apartment building or neighborhood. Yet the facts are that when people of different races work together or live together, and no one deliberately seeks to stir up artificial difficulties, there is no friction; on the contrary, inter-group understanding and cooperation ensue.

Experience suggests that the way to break down segregation is not to ask, in advance, "Will we have trouble?," but to declare there will be no difficulties, and none will be tolerated.

Action on Social Issues—

One of the great sources of frustration and aggression lies in the failure of the individual to cope with many of the pressing problems of a highly competitive society. Often these problems constitute a major threat to mental health. Elsewhere, the author has stated:

> Man—tossing about in the sea of his social environment—finds that his mental health is very much at the mercy of what goes on about him. Unemployment, discrimination, failure to share in the civil liberties guaranteed all citizens, price control, medical care, delinquency, housing, the threat of atomic war and world destruction—these are very real everyday problems. . . .
> For the social factors which gnaw at emotional equilibrium, which torment and frustrate even modest aspirations, which set man against man, which oppress, limit, stultify and crush—these are all of man's own making. They are born out of the struggle of conflicting interests, out of ignorance, and often out of shameless greed. But—they can be changed. It remains but to try. . . .
> Mental health needs an environment where the Four Freedoms are a reality and not merely four phrases. . . . Democracy in our textbooks merely raises questions. Democracy in practice—gives the answers!

To the extent that social problems are favorably solved, to that extent we lift a burden off the shoulders of many an individual who in his frustration has developed or found it necessary to retain prejudicial outlets.

And when young people cease to see glaring discrepancies between what is preached and what is practiced they will have their first real opportunity to see and say that democracy is sound and that it works.

There is no excuse for time consuming double-talk. Much remains to be learned about prejudice. But today we know enough to warrant a carefully planned all-out attack upon this destructive social illness.

WHO WILL CARRY THE FIGHT? IT IS not one man's struggle; it is a fight summoning men and women, young and old, of all creeds and colors.

Too many "respectable" folk brand as "radical" or "crazy" any serious attempt to change the way man relates himself to his fellow men.

It demands integrity and courage to combat this. Otherwise there are ideological seduction, flight, surrender.

We are challenged to an uncompromising fight for enlightened social change. In that victory lies much of the cure for man's problems—among them the crippling disease of prejudice and discrimination.

COMMENTARY

April 29, 1949

In "Good Stocks and Lesser Breeds" from the May issue of Commentary, Edward N. Saveth examines several of the textbooks designed for elementary and secondary school courses in American history, and finds in them a persistent tendency to disparage immigrants from South and South Eastern European descent as unassimilable, unpleasant and sometimes even racially inferior.

Dr. Saveth's charges are serious and merit serious consideration. We should like very much to have your opinions on this question for possible publication in our Letters From Readers section.

The Immigrant in American Textbooks

EDWARD N. SAVETH

RECEIVED MAY 13 1949 Unesco Relations Counsel

IT IS scarcely in the nature of an exposé to point out that American legislation on immigration in the past quarter-century, up to and including the recent displaced-persons act, has pandered to the myth of "Nordic superiority." The wellsprings of mind and spirit which feed this myth we know to be as deep as they are dubious—economic competition, social exclusiveness, anti-Semitism, suspicion of the stranger, brute selfishness—and it is difficult to measure accurately the role of any single factor in fixing the myth in the public and legislative mind. Yet complex events may be the result of the coming together of simple forces. A textbook, for instance, of the kind used in an elementary or high school—what could be more simple?

Textbooks have recently been attracting a remarkable share of national and international attention. At the Unesco General Conference in Paris in 1946, a program was adopted for the improvement of textbooks as aids in overcoming international misunderstanding. Last year, the United States National Commission for Unesco sponsored a study by I. James Quillen which reviewed the history of textbook analysis and its influence on the evolution of the curriculum in American schools, and which set forth a plan for an international revision of textbooks. On March 15, the American Council on Education published Intergroup Relations in Teaching Materials, a report of a special committee under the chairmanship of Dr. Howard E. Wilson, which scrutinized 266 textbooks used in American schools (but, alas, refrained from mentioning titles and authors), in addition to other teaching materials, for their attitudes toward minority groups.

Immigration comes up for classroom discussion in the teaching of American history, economics, and civics. This is a large subject, with much ground to cover; the classes are overcrowded; the teacher is busy. More often than educators care to admit, both teacher and student become, without resistance, prisoners of the textbook. And these textbooks, in the great majority, proclaim the innate superiority of the "racial stocks" of Northwest Europe. Racism may be forbidden doctrine in our large newspapers and magazines, on the radio and in the movies. But in the public school—prime mover of the nation's mind—it is still rather comfortably at home.

IN 1930, Bessie L. Pierce published a study of textbooks "most frequently found in the schools," called Civic Attitudes in American School Textbooks. She discovered that the prevailing attitudes toward immigrants were, to put it politely, uncivic, uncivil, and untrue.

Waddy Thompson's The First Book in United States History (1923) asserts: "Immigrants that came from the Northern countries

EDWARD N. SAVETH here examines the treatment of American ethnic groups in history and social science textbooks—many in common use in American elementary and high schools—and finds some unhappy facts. Dr. Saveth is the author of American Historians and European Immigrants, recently published by Columbia University Press. He has taught history at New Mexico Highlands University and now works for the American Jewish Committee, dealing with problems in the field of education. He was born in 1915 and earned his doctorate at Columbia University. Next fall he will teach a course in American historical writing at the New School.

of Europe are of a class that make good citizens, and as long as most of the immigrants were of that class all went well. But since the War of Secession most of the immigrants coming to this country have been from the lower classes of Eastern and Southeastern Europe, and they give much trouble. They are for the most part very ignorant, and, having been downtrodden in their homes, they have no respect for law or government. In fact, many of them would like to see the government of the United States destroyed." Many textbooks, in a dizzy flight into political propaganda, even took it upon themselves to urge the restriction of immigration from Southern and Eastern Europe.

THIS rough handling of the "new" immigrants was in sharp contrast to the gentle treatment of those from the North and West of Europe who came to the United States mainly before the Civil War. Miss Pierce finds the Puritans variously described as "a God-fearing and industrious people," gentle, kind, possessed of good will toward all men, "even toward the cruel king from whom they had fled, and toward the savages of the forests. They valued so highly the freedom to worship God in their own way that they would not refuse the same freedom to others." The French Huguenots were "a particularly desirable class of settlers," and added "a very great contribution to the making of our country." The Dutch are noted for their "usual firmness," enterprise, and industry, and the Scotch-Irish are characterized by the author of one popular textbook as "that sterling, hardy race of men," the best of pioneers, who gave us "some of the most distinguished names in our history." The industry of the early German settlers is also emphasized.

The Irish, who came to American shores in large numbers only in the 40's and 50's of the 19th century, fared not at all well at the hands of textbook writers. Susan P. Lee, in her Advanced School History of the United States (1896), found them "wicked and worthless immigrants" who "often sought a hiding place in the large cities where they swelled the ranks of idleness and vice. . . . Their ignorance of all things American, their inability to distinguish between one state and another, and their want of interest or sympathy for the traditions of the past made them undesirable neighbors to men who loved their own states with a passionate devotion." But after the end of the 19th century, textbook writers ceased to accord the Irish special treatment in order to consider immigrants more simply under two headings: "old immigrants" and "new immigrants."

Cornish and Hughes, in their History of the United States (1929), characterize the early immigrants as "Good types of immigrants" but found it necessary to head one section: "The new type of immigrant creates alarm." Burch and Patterson, in American Social Problems (1929), instruct their readers that Northern Europe is, with the exception of France and Ireland, "Protestant and, generally speaking, accustomed to freedom," while "the southern area is Catholic in religion, and, as yet, not altogether accustomed to free institutions."

Blough and McClure, in Fundamentals of Citizenship (1939), decided that a clear-cut tabular presentation would be the most pedagogically efficient manner in which to establish the relative virtues of the two waves of immigration. Their table follow:

IMMIGRANTS	EARLY OR "OLD"	LATER OR "NEW"
Birthplace	Northern and Northwestern Europe.	Southern and Southeastern Europe.
Education	Mostly well educated, intelligent.	Not well educated; frequently unable to read and write.
Occupation	Merchants, farmers, skilled workmen, professional men.	Unskilled laborers, few merchants.
Location in which they settled	Rural communities and small towns.	Cities in slum areas.
Purpose in coming	To establish a permanent home; to escape religious persecution or harsh government control.	To gather wealth; to escape training in the army; to return later to Europe.
Kinds of groups	Entire families.	Unmarried individuals; few families at first.
Number becoming citizens	Nearly all.	Small part.

A final ironical accusation: discussing the new immigration from the South and East of Europe after 1880, Morehouse and Graham in their American Problems (1923) complain that one of its most deplorable aspects was the way in which it foisted race prejudice on the beautifully innocent native-born: "The races have brought over race antagonisms with them that introduce new discord into our national life."

IMMIGRANTS from the South and East of Europe do not lack for company as they run the gauntlet through the textbooks. A study of The Treatment of the Negro in American History School Textbooks by Marie E. Carpenter (1941) reveals attitudes toward the Negro, in books for Northern children, not markedly different from those L. D. Reddick* had found in Southern textbooks. The average history textbook of 1939 contends that the Negroes were generally well-satisfied as slaves, despite all the careful research which has revealed tremendous dissatisfaction on the part of the enslaved Negro population and a great number of slave revolts; they omit all mention of the half-million free Negroes in the United States before the Civil War; and, despite the mountain of research into the history of the Reconstruction period that proves the contrary, they continue to blame Reconstruction corruption upon the Negro's ignorance, unfitness to vote, and credulousness.

The Chinese, according to Timothy T. Lew ("China in American School Text-Books," Special Supplement to Chinese Social and Political Science Review, VI-VII, July 1923), are also treated as a "problem." "The Chinese were willing to live in cheap houses and amid poor surroundings," stated the late and venerable Charles A. Beard and co-author W. C. Bagley in History of the American People (1923). "This competition by workers who were willing to accept a lower standard of living was resented by American laborers." [My italics.]

This last statement by one of our foremost historians is a concession to that logic by which the evils of a young, expanding industrial capitalism are laid at the door of those who suffer from them. The immigrant, it would seem, came to America with the single-minded purpose of acquiring low wages, slums, poverty, corrupt urban political machines, class conflicts, and other embellishments of the "promised land." The Greeks and Syrians were reported to have very strong and morbid predispositions in this direction: M. K. Berry and S. B. Howe, in Actual Democracy (1923), told how, upon their arrival in America, "they go at once to the quarters of their fellow countrymen where congestion, disease, and poverty abound."

Thomas Nixon Carver and G. M. Adams, in Our Economic Life (1932), thought it obvious that the immigrant "does not require many of the comforts of life." Muzzey's popular History of the American People (1929), writes of the new immigrants as "content to work long hours for low wages, debasing the standards of the American laborer." The new immigrants, assert Beard and Bagley in The History of the American People (1928), "were willing to endure slums, long hours, and other conditions bad for their own health and morals and full of danger to the Americans about them." And if they were not willing to endure them?

TO FIND out where these strange notions come from, and their ultimate effect upon pupils reading these texts, would be an ambitious and long-term (and worthwhile) enterprise, in which a perceptive student might come up with some startling findings. But even a cursory glance at the Zeitgeist reveals some of the impelling factors at work.

It was during the 1920's and early 1930's that pseudo-learned books on the "race peril" by Madison Grant and Lothrop Stoddard, extolling the virtues of the "Nordic immigrants" from the North and West of Europe and assailing the "Alpines" and "Mediterraneans" from Central, Eastern, and Southern Europe, as inherently inferior, had their vogue. At this same time, it will be remembered, powerful pressure groups such as the American Legion and the Ku Klux Klan were pushing their own ideas as to how American history should be written and as to the relative worth of the constituent ethnic groups of the American population. C. F. Horne, author of The Story of Our American People, published in 1926 and sponsored by the American Legion and thirty-three other patriotic societies, including the Daughters of the American Revolution, wrote of the new immigrants as learning "little of their debt to our government" and finding "little cause to love it." He continued: "We thought we were Americanizing the anarchists who came here; we began to realize that they continued hating us."

* "Racial Attitudes in American History Textbooks of the South," Journal of Negro History, XIX (July 1934), pages 225-65.

While the Ku Klux Klan never actually sponsored a textbook (that at least was spared us), it had explicit and strong views on how American history should be taught: "When America became rich through commercial and industrial life . . . " we read in the "Educational Study for the Junior Citizen's Club of the Ku Klux Klan" (Kourier Magazine, January 1927), "it very naturally attracted to our shores a flood of immigration from the lands where poverty, tyranny, and ecclesiastical despotism hold sway. . . . This land of Liberty was to them a land of license. They were given the ballot almost before they got rid of the vermin they brought over in their steerage passage."

The role of sheer human ignorance, stupidity, and lethargy in promoting ethnic bias can hardly be overestimated. Textbook authors themselves are generally not scholars and are frequently unaware of the latest scholarly findings. It was as far back as 1909 that John Bates Clark, in his cogent introduction to the Documentary History of American Industrial Society, stated: "Americanizing goes on effectively when the economic conditions of this country are such as to ensure it. Conditions take precedence of racial qualities because the change in prevailing conditions is far greater than the changes of race. . . . It is an error to attribute the origin of the difficulty to the races represented by the immigrants or the conditions that prevail in the countries from which they come."

But many of the textbook writers of the following decades paid little or no attention to Clark, or to scholars of similar stature.

One can understand, then, how bias came to be "respectable" in America in the 1920's, and we know that its influence was spurred by depression and Hitler in the 30's. But in the 40's, after the war in which racist doctrines played such a crucial and disastrous role, one would expect a shift, especially in view of the striking change in broad public sentiment manifested among all classes of Americans in the postwar period. And one would certainly expect that in the larger metropolitan centers, like New York and Chicago, where a sizable part of the population is made up of later immigrants and their children, some concession might be made to their sensibilities—and to the truth.

By this time, too, such scholars in the field of immigration as Marcus L. Hansen, Carl Wittke, T. C. Blegen, Oscar Handlin, and G. M. Stephenson had demonstrated at length how primitive and uninformed the textbook writers were. The concept of the new immigrant as a purely "economic man" in contrast to the "idealism" of the older immigrants from the North and West of Europe was shattered by their findings, which pointed out that the economic factor has always been dominant in immigration, that the ebb and flow of the immigrant tide has always been considerably influenced by the trend of the American business cycle, that the Irish and German immigrants of the early 19th century were in their time also accused of being paupers, radicals, slum-dwellers, and of being difficult to Americanize, that the great mass of immigrants were not radical but conservative in outlook.

In order to obtain some idea of what the situation is today, this writer read through textbooks that have been approved for use in 1947 by the Board of Education of New York City for the day and evening high schools and vocational and trade schools of New York.

On the whole it must be said that the textbooks now in use in the New York schools are not quite so objectionable as those used countrywide a decade ago. Also these books devote less space to the subject of immigration in general than did the books published a decade or more ago—reflecting the fact that immigration, except in the past year or two, has not been a subject of vital public concern. However, the difference is of degree rather than of kind; by and large, this means only that the sharp edge of some of the more biting remarks has been removed. As far as the basic attitudes are concerned, there is no remarkable deviation from older patterns.

For example, James Truslow Adams and Charles G. Vannest, in Record of America, published in 1935 and used in schools in Brooklyn and the Bronx, reward immigrants from the North and West of Europe with the caption: "Our early immigrants come to find homes," while another caption goes on to say: "Our later immigrants come to find work." An unsuspecting outsider might be led to the belief that the "homes" first referred to were prefabricated.

Vannest and Adams believe that there are important "racial" differences between the people who came to the United States from the North and West of Europe and those who came from the South and East of Europe. Is it only a quibble to demand today that textbooks use the term "race" correctly and in keeping with modern anthropological findings? No competent anthropologist would grant for a moment what the authors of this book would have high school students learn: that "in Europe the population of each nation is largely of one race." There is further confusion in the matter of race in Ralph Volney Harlow's Story of America (1943), where the author refers to the Italians, Hungarians, and Poles as "racial groups."

Louis Ray Wells's Industrial History of the United States, though published in 1922, is still on the list of books approved for classroom use by New York's Board of Education. It justifies the movement towards the restriction of immigration in the following terms: "We have now ceased to measure greatness by mere numbers, and have begun to examine into the qualifications of those who would seek our hospitality. There has dawned upon many a tardy recognition of the necessity of conserving our human resources with a view to the founding of a better and abler type of man." Not a superman, surely. . . .

Canfield and Wilder's The United States in the Making portrays the new immigrants as "willing to work long hours for low wages," and makes the further assertion that immigrants "who settled in cities tended to concentrate in wretched tenements and shanties, thus creating new slum areas." Finally, they quote Chauncey M. Depew as saying: "The ranks of anarchy and riot number no Americans. The [immigrant] leaders boldly claim they came here not to enjoy the blessings of liberty, but to destroy our government and cut our throats, and divide our property." Technically, of course, they are merely quoting "a point of view." One might expect, however, that they give some indication that the "point of view" is a rather wraped one.

It is easy to point an indignant finger at a board of education and a board of superintendents for permitting use of these texts. There is also the publisher's responsibility for the subject matter of the text, and the factor of the climate of opinion (or state of apathy) in the general community. But beyond this, however, there is the simple fact that well-meaning authors of textbooks (to give them the benefit of the doubt) seem to shed their professional competence when dealing with immigration. The writings of Turner on the frontier and Beard on the economic interpretation of history are, for some reason, more familiar to the man who writes a textbook than the no less significant findings of Marcus L. Hansen in the field of immigration. While this situation remains, the textbook writer will inevitably tend to substitute easy prejudice for the sober truth.

The social psychologist Otto Klineberg has written that to change group prejudices in children, "the only hope is to reach them early, and to give [them] habits of favourable reactions to other races which will stay with them through life." Our schools even today, by tolerating the kind of history and social science textbooks they do, seem to be doing just the opposite. It is less important to fix the blame for this situation than to work out ways of improving it. Certainly there is no excuse for complacency about this "mis-education by insult," whereby American children are systematically exposed to a racist evaluation of—in so many cases—their own parents and grandparents.

MAN AND HIS PREJUDICES

MUCH has been written about the threat of prejudice in undermining our democratic institutions. Specific instances can be cited in regard to the growth and magnitude of man's antipathy to man. It seems worth while, therefore, to analyze carefully the fundamental nature of these antipathies in order more sanely to comprehend these savage undercurrents in our daily lives and so attack the problem at its most vulnerable point.

The universality of men's aversion for one another is shocking in its implications. Negativism, once a problem relegated to the confines of early childhood, has become the order of the day among the adults of every nation. Group is pitted against group: the Protestant attacks the Catholic, the Catholic attacks the Jew, the Jew mistrusts the Gentile, the white persecutes the Negro, the Negro turns on his white enemy. Whatever the manifestation of these antagonisms—whether it be racial, ethnic, religious, or class—a common thread runs through the entire web of intergroup relations.

There are many general types of prejudices, but two loom largest on the horizon, dwarfing all others. The first of these is easily recognizable. It is the kind that expresses itself in overt forms of group opposition. It is the type of prejudice that keeps certain groups from living in designated areas of a city, bars them from schools, deprives them of voting privileges, and excludes them from hotels, clubs, theaters, and so on.

This sort of prejudice is vicious from the standpoint of democratic principles, but it is in a relative sense capable of being handled, since it expresses itself in tangible forms—usually in terms of ordinances and statutes. Given enough people who desire a change, the laws can be repealed. It would appear that there is an ever-growing number of people who are sincerely interested in effecting such a change.

Even if this overt form of prejudice does not express itself in law but in the form of a "gentlemen's agreement" to keep members of various minority groups from obtaining their rights of citizenship—in gaining admittance to hotels, schools, and stores—it is still concrete enough to allow for direct treatment. It involves specific persons who are principally responsible for this form of discrimination, and these, skillfully approached through influential community leaders who are truly desirous of mitigating the problem, can be made to modify their rulings.

Thus, by group action to change the law, or through the pressure of public opinion, some of these discriminatory practices may be obviated.

There is another type of prejudice, however, which is more basic and more insidious, difficult to rout from its hidden recesses, and almost impervious to any form of concrete action. It is subtle, covert, and noninstitutionalized. An illustration will serve to indicate the nature of this form of prejudice.

> I once boarded a city bus and chanced to sit next to two women, residents of a southern city. One lady was telling the other that she had just visited Mrs. R—— at the hospital.
> The other lady said, "Oh yes, I know who she is. She is your neighbor, isn't she?" "Yes," was the reply. "And she is a Catholic, isn't she?" "Yes," was the reply again. "And on the other side of you lives Mrs. S——, doesn't she? And I think she is a Catholic, too?"
> "Yes, she is," the first lady replied. And then, with a sigh of resignation and suffering, she revealed her attitude by adding, "and you know what it feels like to be hemmed in by two Catholics."

No objective listener could deny that here at least was one prejudiced individual. It is true that this type of prejudice is unlike the first. The "hemmed-in" woman would probably not attempt to have instituted laws, ordinances, or even agreements that would keep her Catholic neighbor from visiting any hospital she might please. Their children probably play with one another; they may attend the same school. And one would not imagine that she would be ready to institute, or formally banish, the Catholic children from the neighborhood or theaters.

The revealed prejudice had not reached the form of outright discrimination, true. But prejudice was there. It was not formalized, but rather it existed as a kind of folkway prejudice, a kind of "general feeling of againstness." It reflects the general folk atmosphere.

Although it is unlike the first type, sometimes, if not quite frequently, it may lead into the first type, given an economic or political crisis, when the general negativism might easily turn to outright discrimination, scapegoating, or persecution.

Nazi Germany has given us our best case in point. In the days of the Weimar Republic the Jews enjoyed legal freedom and political tolerance. Laws forbade educational, economic, and legal discrimination. Legal guarantees, however, were not safeguards against folk feeling. A preponderance of evidence exists to prove that many Germans continued to feel differently toward the Jew than they did toward the non-Jew. When a crisis situation arose and a skillful demagogue appeared on the scene who played on this submerged feeling of againstness, organized scapegoating and massacre were easily achieved. In other words, this type of folkway prejudice, which ordinarily appears merely silly, rude, unfair, unkind, or antidemocratic, holds within it a submerged threat for the future as well as unpleasantness—or worse—for the present.

Interestingly enough, it is the nature of folkway prejudice to be almost universal. Members of primitive tribes manifest a general feeling of againstness toward the "outsiders," those who are not members of their own group. The Caribs believe that they "alone are people." The Lapps call themselves "human beings," implying that non-Lapps are not. Literally translated, Kiowa is "real, or principal, people." The Greenland Eskimo believes that Europeans have been sent to Greenland to learn virtue and good manners from him. The highest form of praise that the Eskimo can extend to a European is that he is, or soon will be, as good as a Greenlander.

This feeling of superiority that people feel toward their own way of life and their own group is not limited to the primitives. The ancient Greeks referred to the non-Greeks as barbarians. It is of course true that the Greek word barbaros did not have the identical meaning that our own word "barbarian" has, but it definitely attributed strangeness, rudeness, and inferiority to the non-Greeks.

Nor is this feeling of superiority, or "ethnocentrism," the term coined by Graham Sumner, limited to ancient peoples. To the query "Who was the first man?" a youthful patriot answered "Washington." "No," said the teacher, "the first man was Adam." "Oh, I suppose he was," conceded this small isolationist, "if you are going to include foreigners." Among Western "civilized" peoples we hear the constant use of such terms as "chocolate drop," "du-donk," "nigger," "Dutchy," "flip," "greaser," "dogs," "wop," "kike," "coon," "chee-chee," and others too distasteful to record.

Commenting on the story of Jesus, the Jew, told to a Sunday-School class of ten-year-olds, a pupil declared that she had never known that Jesus was a Jew. After further elucidation by the teacher, this youngster declared that she had always known "that God was a Presbyterian, but not that Jesus was a Jew."

Thus it goes, from one end of the world to the other, even filtering down to the jingles of children at play. A Dutch nursery rhyme tells us that:

The children in Holland take pleasure in making
What the children in England take pleasure in breaking.

This strongly rooted attachment to one's own way of life and one's own people has been observed through the ages by poet and scientist, the widely traveled diplomat and the secluded scholar. As Oliver Wendell Holmes so aptly remarked, "The people in every town feel that the axis of the earth passes through its Main Street."

I

It is this very group consciousness, or ethnocentrism, which lays the foundation of group prejudice. If there were no strong feeling for one's own group, there would not be strong consciousness of other groups. An awareness of one's own group as an in-group and of the others as out-groups is fundamental in group relationships. Group tensions are manifested by a sense of distrust or dislike, not to an individual as such, but to an individual as a symbol of an out-group. It does not always follow that a consciousness of one's own group leads to distrust and disharmony with all other groups. The friendly rivalry that exists between athletic teams, or the competition between rival garden clubs, for instance, points to the fact that not all group relations give rise to group tensions.

There appears to be present in all types of group prejudice some degree, whether real or imagined, of struggle or threat. So much of group prejudice, however, is linked up with imagined threat rather than real that a challenge is offered in attempting to understand it. The very universality of group antagonism has led many laymen to accept the inherent, innate, organic nature of these prejudices. So strong was this belief that up to thirty-five years ago it was a valid fact to the psychologists. Psychologically speaking, it was regarded as but one more instinct, along with mother love, pug-nacity, curiosity, gregariousness, self-preservation, and fear, to name but a few.

The doctrine of the instinctivists has been pretty well discarded in the light of further and keener psychological research. No longer can the student of human nature accept the thesis that any human attitudes are inborn. No aspect of man's human social nature is inborn. His wishes, his beliefs, his knowledge, and his values all come as a result of his association with other men. They are developmental, not congenital. Attitudes are nurtured, not natured. Prejudice is fostered, not fathered.

We inherit biological traits such as the shape of the skull, the color of eyes and hair, the potentialities of tallness, all of which are carried through the germ plasm. Prejudices—indeed all our attitudes, habits, and emotions—are not carried in the germ plasm. They are developed by the culture that surrounds us: in early years, chiefly through the family groups; in later years, through other institutions—the church, the school, business.

The first few years are the most impressionable ones of our lives. The young child learns primarily from his parents. Children repeat what they find about them rather than invent their own forms of behavior. Thus the child acquires early in life those collective, specific attitudes of prejudice that exist in the family. These tend to remain with him and are often deep-rooted and unconscious.

When these prejudices in the family become further re-enforced by the community, society in general, and later associates, it is easy to see how ingrained and well established one's prejudices can become. And the tendency for prejudices to persist thus becomes comprehensible. For those with prejudices give them to those without them and, once acquired, they become further indelibly stamped. It becomes apparent, too, why it is that for generation after generation prejudices toward certain groups and persons are perpetuated.

This tendency toward perpetuation of group prejudices becomes understandable if we are aware that it is the nature of these prejudices, as well as of most attitudes, to be emotionally loaded. Prejudice consists of a pre-existing emotional tendency to act negatively toward a particular group, idea, or value. The very nature of prejudice presupposes feelings about things. Usually this emotional core is primary in these prejudice tendencies. Often reason supplies the rationalizations for existing prejudices. Emotions lead; reason apologizes and defends the prejudice.

Because attitudes of prejudice are full of emotion, it becomes clear not only why they persist, but also why it is difficult to be emancipated from them. Many instances exist that show how difficult it is to overcome prejudices, even though one is aware of the lack of basis in fact for his prejudice. For example, an intelligent and educated woman in the late fifties, who was born in the South, told the writer that although she was aware that the antiquated notions about the innate inferiority of the Negro are false rationalizations—that shape of nose, texture of hair, and pigmentation of the skin have nothing to do with mental ability, human morals, and interpersonal etiquette—she just could not help herself. By this she meant that given the stimulus, "Negro," she gets an emotional negative reaction, which is not reasonable or planned but nevertheless manifested and real. Her prejudice toward the Negro is an emotionalized phenomenon which appears automatically as a result of the previously established attitude toward the Negro. Usually the attitude is developed quite early in life. It often persists in spite of enlightenment and knowledge. People may "know better" but still are prejudiced.

Before we suggest what can be done about these emotionalized prejudices toward specific groups, a further word must be said about another type of attitude that man is capable of developing. We have spoken about specific prejudices, specific attitudes— attitudes toward Negroes, the next-door neighbor, the child on the other side of the tracks. These are specific attitudes directed toward specific objects. But there is another set of attitudes that tends to govern man's behavior and often determines the type of specific attitudes he will develop. A person has an attitude toward a particular individual, and he also has an attitude toward people in general. Besides having an attitude toward a particular member of the opposite sex, one has an attitude toward members of the opposite sex as a group, or toward sex in general.

Sometimes one's attitude toward a particular individual may be the same as the more generalized one. Very often it is not. One may be sincerely fond of, and favorably disposed toward, a particular Negro and still possess race prejudice and be anti-Negro. A person may be in love with a particular member of the opposite sex, but may have prejudicial attitudes toward members of the opposite sex as a group. He may elevate the particular member on a pedestal of social superiority, act obsequiously to her, sincerely feel inferior. Still, if he be an employer, he may be prone not to hire women. He could think and believe that a woman's place is in the home, that this is, and should be, "a man's world."

We can generalize these attitudes even further. Besides having a certain attitude toward a particular individual or a group, one also develops attitudes toward people in general; or even toward life in general. What do we mean when we say a person is not sociable? Or that he is an introvert? Or a cynic? We do not mean that he portrays an attitude toward a particular individual or group, but that he has a general tendency to act in a particular way toward all people and all groups. A cynic is not one who distrusts an individual as much as one who distrusts all people. The same holds true for an introvert. He is not so much one who "turns inwardly" in particular situations as he is one who practices introversion in most of life's situations. A "prejudiced individual" is one who is generally prejudiced. He may manifest his prejudices toward particulars only; on the other hand, one who is generally prejudiced will act in a prejudiced manner in many of, if not in all, life's social situations.

General attitudes therefore exist and are real, too. How else are we to understand the frequency with which prejudices often come in clusters? An individual who is anti a particular group is also anti-group B, C, D, and so on. We find that a tolerant person is not one who limits his tolerance to particulars. Rather, his tolerance usually pervades most of his relationships and experiences. General attitudes are chronic attitudes. The more numerous the situations that arouse a particular mode of behavior, the more general and basic the attitude behind the behavior. One who dislikes Negroes, Jews, Catholics, and children has a tendency to dislike people in general. One who dislikes people is a hostile being. And a hostile person possesses a basic general predisposition of prejudice. How his hostility will express itself depends on the definitions of his society and group. If a community is anti-Catholic, this hostile person will be prejudiced (overtly) toward the Catholic. If the community is anti-Negro, a basic attitude of hostility will arraign him against the Negro. People are what their dominant basic general attitudes are, and people do what the community dictates.

II

Specific attitudes are formed all through life, but basic general attitudes develop quite early in life and are mainly motivated by the family and other primary intimate face-to-face groups, such as the child's play group and the neighborhood. Unlike the specific attitudes, they are less capable of change and alteration, once formed. As long as an attitude is localized, it is capable of change, given a new experience. A person may change his attitude toward a particular individual when he "finds out more about him." A hostile person is not hostile because of a particular experience, but rather because of the fusion of many experiences in early life, until his tendency toward hostility becomes dominant. He has a general tendency to interpret all situations in a hostile manner, and his basic general attitude is not limited to particular objects.

Here again we are faced with an extremely difficult problem if we desire to effect a change, primarily because these attitudes are quite fully developed during the first years of life and, second, because they, too, are emotionally charged. In what other wise can we understand the high incidence of recidivism among criminals and juvenile delinquents? Although antisocial criminal behavior is not inborn, unless powerful reformistic programs are undertaken in our corrective institutions—and even then—one with a criminal bent tends to remain that way. It has often been shown that juvenile experts have ceased trying to alter the basic general attitudes of the bully. Once this aggression-domination tendency develops in an individual, it appears exceedingly difficult to reduce its degree. Without question, it appears even more dubious that a dominating, aggressive individual can ever change fundamentally into a nonaggressive, submissive type. In fact, juvenile experts do not seek basic attitudinal changes. Rather, they seek to constitutionalize the bully. Instead of allowing his bullying to express itself in the unsupervised street-corner gangs, the juvenile gang leader is made president of a club, or the captain of a baseball team. His aggressive tendencies still prevail, but now they are channelized into more acceptable social behavior.

If society could find a way of channelizing the hostile prejudicial tendencies of some people by furnishing outlets for their basic attitudinal drives, we might avoid the group tensions and group antagonisms that have not, of course, a place in democratic societies. If the bigot could be given the opportunity to fulminate his hatred against war, poverty, and disease—against objects of societal disapproval—the villain might even become a hero in the eyes of society. This is a task for education. Education of construction, that is—not education to reform the basic personality, but to open areas and outlets of satisfaction for already developed basic attitudes.

A more important task for education, of course—and specifically for the family as an educational unit—consists in integrating and normalizing the personality while it is being formed, in supplying the child with primary attitudes of tolerance rather than prejudice, with security, sympathy, and the other human virtues of love, pity, concern, and sociability. This task for the family is the greatest challenge. It is easier to form attitudes ab origine than to change them post maturus. Baldur von Schirach, the leader of the Hitler youth movement, made an interesting and significant comment when he told an Army psychiatrist at the Nuremberg prison that he believed German children under ten could be directed toward democracy as they were toward Nazism, but that those older than twelve could be considered absolutely lost to democracy. He believed that just as Hitler "pulled young people away from their non-Nazi parents, so American authorities must remove today's children from their Nazi-poisoned parents."

Nazism was a general way of life in addition to the specific modes of reaction to particular objects. Nazis possessed basic general traits of social hostility to the outside world, group conceit (extreme ethnocentrism), personal and group aggressiveness, personal and group paranoia, group militance, and a tendency to blame others for their own and the world's ills.

Where do these general tendencies arise so early in life if not in the family? Studies of the development of basic general attitudes suggest that they are not a consequence of immanent mental development, but have their origin in the parents. Toward adolescence, children lose awareness of these origins and often devise rationalizations to support them. A young child, finding that his mother is not on speaking terms with her neighbor, refrains from associating with the neighbor's children. He will often accuse them with words repetitive of his mother's condemnatory remarks. And so he will take over his mother's attitudes toward other people and objects. If the mother portrays a general hostile attitude toward the outside world, her overt acts and expressions gradually fuse in the mind of the child until the imitation of his mother's specific negative habits of behavior becomes a general tendency to behave in a hostile manner. The many acts have become a basic predisposition which is fundamentally the same as the mother's predisposition. As the child matures, this basic dominant trait will force and compel specific behavior in specific situations. In extreme cases he will even offend those particular individuals he sincerely loves. A general tendency to behave colors the specific act itself. Man does not evaluate every stimulus that confronts him; rather, the stimulus becomes for him what he makes of it. And he makes of it what his dominant basic attitudes are. "Children," says George Brock Chisholm, Director General of the World Health Organization, "must be taught to live harmoniously together or mankind will follow the dinosaur into oblivion."

In order for children to develop the "correct" attitudes parents must be made aware of their inherent prejudices. How can this be done? Some self-analysis becomes necessary. It should be pointed out to adults—and here the task for adult education becomes most significant—that persons coming from particular strata and segments in society tend to possess the interests and biases characteristic of that segment. Only the few are the exceptions. A white, urban, Protestant, wealthy, middled-aged, Northern male will not possess the same tendencies to act toward given values, groups, individuals—will not have the same interests, attitudes, and predispositions—as a colored, rural, Catholic, young, poor, Southern tenant farmer. Can these two possibly feel the same toward the question of social security, toward equal educational opportunity for all groups, toward taxation, and an endless variety of other social issues? Residence in particular segments of society bring pre-existent reaction patterns.

White persons must be on their guard to avoid slips of the tongue about Negros—especially in front of children. Protestants can exert special effort in not expressing or showing through divers manners their dislikes of Catholics or Jews—again, especially in the presence of their children. On the other hand, the adults comprising minority groups can minimize their feelings and attitudes of insecurity, withdrawal, resignation, and unnatural aggression by becoming aware of these tendencies.

Only in this way can we break into the perpetual cycle of those who have prejudices passing them on to those who have not, thus making an endless chain of hatred and antagonism among men. Adults can and should be made conscious of their predispositions so that their children need not duplicate their parents in this regard. If the adult avoids specific acts and expressions of prejudice, no groups will consequently become defined in the mind of the child as objects of antagonism. If no groups are thus ill-defined, the child will obtain nothing to integrate into a general attitude of prejudice.

People often ask whether there are not any good prejudices, such as prejudices against war, crime, and poverty. Prejudice means prejudgment. If one's beliefs and ideas result from prejudgments it is difficult to see that an attitude for or against any object, group, or value can be condoned. Absence of reason is a poor excuse for any judgment, even if it happens to further the good society. The good society can be and should be reasonable. It surely cannot succeed through capriciousness.

Prejudice Is Losing Out in San Francisco

Prejudice Is Losing Out in San Francisco

Condensed from Collier's

John Gerrity

In San Francisco not long ago members of a Negro church, planning a tea for Negro school teachers, called on the associate superintendent of schools. Could he give them the names of Negro teachers?

"I'm afraid I can't," he replied. "I don't know who or where they are. However, I will give you the addresses of the schools and you can make a canvass."

The incident is not unusual in San Francisco, which has made astonishing progress in a scant six years toward equal treatment for minority groups. In the public schools whites are teaching Negroes, Negroes are teaching whites, Orientals are teaching both. In big stores like Macy's, The Emporium or Joseph Magnin's, Chinese clerks are shopping counselors to Nob Hill residents; Negroes and Orientals manage full departments, supervising as many as 25 white clerks; Japanese head sales-research sections; Filipinos are floorwalkers. Major hotels, like the Mark Hopkins and the Fairmont, are open to any reputable guest who can pay his bill.

This is not to say that instances of discrimination do not arise, or that San Francisco has never been cursed with racial animosities. Indeed, San Francisco might not have done so well with its racial problem if the problem had not been so bad to begin with.

At the end of World War II San Francisco found itself with the largest Chinese and Japanese settlements of any city outside the Orient, the third largest Mexican and Filipino populations on the West Coast, and a Negro population that had increased tenfold in six years, from 5000 to more than 50,000. Altogether, almost 125,000 members of racial-minority groups had chosen to live in this city of 750,000. It was a potentially explosive situation.

Civic leaders, industrialists, merchants, schoolteachers and social-service organizations went to work to end discriminatory practices. Their formula: "Discrimination is bad business and equality is profitable."

Collier's (February 14, '53), copyright 1953 by The Crowell-Collier Pub. Co., 640 Fifth Ave., New York 19, N. Y.

Seaton Manning and Donald Glover of the Urban League approached the city's top department stores. "We don't want you to hire Negroes or Chinese or Japanese because they are victims of prejudice," they said. "These people are your customers. We think they'll become better customers if you recognize their ability to sell as well as to buy."

Manning and Glover met all the standard replies: patrons might object, old employes would quit, separate rest rooms might have to be set up. But The Emporium hired its first Negro, and no customer complained, no employe quit. Next, a Filipino was placed in the store's haberdashery. Nothing happened. Two nonwhite women were hired for the hosiery department. None of the other women clerks was outraged — and hosiery sales kept up. Three months later The Emporium employment interviewers were told to make themselves color-blind or find jobs elsewhere.

Macy's also started hiring nonwhites, and neither employes nor customers showed any signs of being offended. Last Christmas Macy's sales were 20 percent higher than ever before, and one harried store official remarked: "Thank Heaven for the Japanese, Chinese and Negro students who worked as part-time clerks. Without them there would have been a lot of unhappy customers."

Today scores of stores, as well as insurance companies, automobile agencies, the privately owned gas and electric company and the telephone company have put hiring and promotions strictly on a merit and ability basis.

When word reached the president of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. that a young Negro telephone operator's co-workers were snubbing her and making life almost unbearable, the president escorted the young lady to work one day and gave her and her sister operators a brief lecture on telephone-company economics.

"One out of every six calls handled in this exchange," he said, "is made by a Negro, a Filipino or a Chinese. If we lose that sixth call here, or anywhere else in the city, we stand to lose our jobs. At the very least, we will get (and deserve) a one-sixth pay cut. I'll leave it up to you ladies how you want to run your company." The once-snubbed young lady is now a supervising operator.

It was a long time before nonwhites were able to get skilled construction jobs where union labor was employed. But it was done. Leaders of the AFL building-trades union first admitted a few pilot craftsmen. No riots developed and contractors didn't seem to mind. Today there are nearly 4000 skilled nonwhite journeymen working shoulder to shoulder with whites, and a comparable increase has occurred among unskilled workers.

In 1947 San Francisco's school board hired a new superintendent, Herbert C. Clish. Clish insisted on having a free hand in hiring teachers, with professional competence the only requirement. A number of people winked indulgently. "Just the thing for an incoming school superintendent to say. Good public relations." But a few weeks after Clish took over, a vacancy in a principalship arose and Clish named Dr. William Cobb, a Negro, as the man best qualified for the job.

Every public swimming pool and playground in San Francisco is now nonsegregated. And this city was the first in the nation specifically to rule out segregation in urban redevelopment programs. Edward Howden of the city's Council for Civic Unity keeps watch, ready to howl if he spots a housing abuse — on free radio time the Columbia Broadcasting System gives him.

Four labor unions still exclude nonwhites. But these and a few diehards among the city's employers are fighting a losing battle. Most San Franciscans have decided it is more prudent to put plain, hard-headed business sense to work.

The Gentle People of Prejudice

H. A. OVERSTREET

About the author

THE AUTHOR: In a world of rampant specialization, Harry Allen Overstreet shines as an inspiring example of one who has succeeded in living out the life of the whole man. A far cry from the proverbial academic and theorizing prototype usually associated with the name, this philosopher not only has a continuing curiosity toward all facets of life, but constantly searches for the interrelationships which synthesize seemingly autonomous realms of knowledge. After winning his academic spurs from the University of California and Oxford at the turn of the century, Overstreet settled down to a ten-year stint teaching philosophy on the California campus. One year his students were astonished to discover that Professor Overstreet had joined the working class; in order to gather first-hand evidence of what life was like in an industrial economy, he spent a year making rubber shoes for the U. S. Rubber Company, polishing bearings in a machine shop, and sewing sacks for the Hawaiian Sugar Company. In 1911 the College of the City of New York beckoned, and there for many years he was head of the philosophy department. Since 1939 Professor Overstreet has devoted himself wholly to lecturing and writing ("Let Me Think," 1939, and "Our Free Minds," 1941). It is in this way, he feels, that he can best accomplish his life's purpose, which is to awaken adults to the need for continuing their own education and furthering their intellectual and emotional maturity. "Adulthood," he believes, "is the time for putting into effect a wisdom about life that childhood and youth are unable as yet even to possess." Too few adults take advantage of this opportunity, with results which are often tragic and sometimes alarming. "The most dangerous members of our society," he contends, "are those grown-ups whose powers of influence are adult, but whose motives and responses are infantile." Yet Overstreet is no apostle of doom; indeed, he radiates confidence in mankind. As one of his friends once observed, "To know Harry Overstreet is to know what a better world should be like."

DOROTHY BARUCH, in "The Glass House of Prejudice," tells the story of José Morales, a Mexican war worker in the Los Angeles area. José was proud of his war job. He had written his brother, who taught in the University of Mexico, that at last he had work in which he could use his knowledge and skill. One day, after finishing his shift, José took the bus home. When he got off at his street corner he saw some men standing waiting. "They were strangers to him. He had never seen them before, nor they him. . . . But they looked hard at him, and they saw under the light of the street lamp that he was slim and dark. . . .

"One of them cried, 'Dirty Mexican!' And then they were on him. They tore off his clothes. They beat him with chains and iron pipes. They left him naked and bleeding. His back was broken.

"The next morning he died."

A story like this leaves one bewildered. How could human beings do so cowardly a deed? They had never seen the man before. They did not know what kind of person he was. But to them, apparently, he was some form of evil. And that was enough. They killed him.

It does not answer the question to call them hoodlums. In a railway station, a ticket agent deliberately keeps the Negroes waiting until the last minute of train time while he first serves the whites and then sits at his desk chatting leisurely with a pal. He intends to be infuriating. He sees the Negroes at the ticket window, and he enjoys keeping them waiting. He knows they are bitter and relishes their bitterness. He feels big. He is a white man. "Let the damn niggers wait!"

A woman with rooms to rent slams the door in the face of an inquiring couple. "I don't take any Jews here!" She knows her words are an insult. She intends them to be. She feels important, righteous.

The terrifying thing about the cruelty of prejudice is that it justifies itself to itself. It was that way with Hitler's Nazis. To strike down an inoffensive old man, kick him, defile him; that was good, right, beautiful. It was what any well-disciplined Nazi ought to do. It was expected.

How do people get that way?

"Easy," said the poet, "is the descent to Avernus." The first slippery step down is the assumption of an unearned right.

The white man can eat where he pleases, live where he pleases, dance where he pleases, enter the occupation he pleases. He takes that right as his —an absolute one unrelated to his own merit or demerit. He does not need to give a thought to the fact that dark-skinned people do not have these rights, nor to the fact that they are denied them not because they are worse people but because they do not belong to the dominant group. They may even be better people—more intelligent, more reliable, more gracious and pleasant to have around. But the white man would be vastly surprised if someone were to say to him: "You cannot have those privileges of yours without earning them. It is on the record that you are an untrustworthy man; you are foul-mouthed and you beat your wife. You'll have to be put in a Jim Crow car."

JUSTICE is a relation between what an individual does and the rewards or punishments he receives. A culture begins to slip morally when it grants special privileges or denies them on grounds that have nothing to do with individual desert. An employer who gave higher pay to an incompetent official of the company merely because the two of them bowled together or hailed from the same town would be an unjust employer. Justice plays no favorites. The basic moral law requires that as a man is and does so shall he be judged.

Once the dubious principle is accepted that group privileges need have no relation to individual merit, the descent into immoralism is easy. The Nazis made that descent, with a cruel arrogance unmatched in history. No Nazi needed to give the slightest thought to the individual Jews he was herding into the freight car. They might be the noblest persons in the world or the most scoundrelly. So far as he was concerned, all human distinctions among them had vanished. "In the night," wrote Hegel, "all cows are gray." In the night of race prejudice all persons in the despised group are alike. When that happens there is no more morality.

Happily, not everyone who is afflicted with race prejudice goes as far down as did the Nazis. Most people who are prejudiced merely take this first slippery step down: as members of the privileged race they assume the right to have and to hold their special privileges irrespective of their own merit, and they deny these rights to others with a like disregard of individual worth. This may not seem a dangerous downward step to take since so many otherwise respectable people do take it. But note what it involves. Everyone who accepts for himself the special privileges that go with denying them to people of a subordinated race makes possible all the cruelties that arise out of such unjust discrimination.

THUS, for others less kindly disposed than himself, he makes possible the next downward step: scapegoating. A basic requirement of the moral life is to make sure that the person blamed is the person who merits the blame. Here again the Nazis were flagrant offenders. "It was the Jews who did it." That applied to all situations where the Germans, individually or collectively, had suffered frustration. Half-starved after World War I, unemployed, dispirited, ignorant of the reasons for their plight, bedazed by a mystic sense of their own greatness, Germans did not take the sturdy course of seeking out the real causes of their defeat and distress. Had they done so they might have found many causes within themselves. But it takes moral maturity to declare oneself in the wrong. The morally immature person finds it easier to put the blame on someone else. Children do this. "It was Johnny spilled the ink; he joggled my elbow."

Scapegoating is dangerous because it leads easily to violent acts. Where society condemns a certain group as inferior and rightless, it provides an area of permitted insult and cruelty. The man who has lost a business contract cannot go out and kick a white passerby; he might get kicked back. But in certain parts of America he can punch a Negro and call him a black bastard. The Negro has no right to hit back or even to answer back. So, in like manner, the poor white can take out his poverty-frustration on his more well-to-do Negro neighbor by joining with the night riders to burn the Negro's barn. The California "vigilante," burdened with his mortgage and his envy, can empty his revolver through the windows of the returned Nisei farmer. Scapegoating is a way of releasing our own hurt feelings onto someone else.

After scapegoating, the next step down is not difficult: justifying one's acts by lies. The Protocols of Zion were deliberately forged to prove the case against the Jews. To the Jew-hater, however, this was not dishonesty in the ordinary sense of the word; it was "pious dishonesty." You had to make the people hate the Jews; so the end justified the means. But wherever evil means are used, no matter what the ends, they become a moral infection. The story of race prejudice is one long, sordid tale of the use of lies to support a hate.

THE prevailing stereotypes about the Negro—that he is by nature shiftless, lazy, mentally inferior, lawless, sexually unsafe to have around—have no basis in truth whatsover. The best that can be said against those who continue, in the face of disproof, to use these stereotypes is that they are self-deceived or ignorant or duped; the worst is that they are deliberate perverters of the truth.

Finally, the last slippery step down —and here again the Nazis provided us with the most shocking examples. This last step down is to make self-importance out of cruelty. It is bad enough for a person to be unjust, to take privileges for himself and deny them to others without regard to individual merit, to put blame on others when the blame rests elsewhere, and to justify all this by lies. But complete moral disintegration comes when to all this is added a glorying in cruelty and a sense of greatness achieved by inflicting it. The most nauseating parts of the testimony of the war criminals was their repeatedly expressed pride in what they had done. Low as men may fall, moral sensitivity remains as long as shame remains, but when, instead of shame, there is a glorying in foul deeds, the creature is no longer moral.

IT IS the willingness to hurt and be happy in the hurting that is the deepest condemnation of certain forms of race prejudice. The men who broke the back of José Morales and gloated in doing it were at the beast stage of life. But one does not have to break a man's back to achieve moral degradation. The ticket seller who enjoyed being cruel and made importance out of it for his own ego was himself already well on the way.

THROUGH HISTORY WITH J. WESLEY SMITH

"I'd like to save you, Mister Smith, but I ain't allowed to swim in this pool."

All of this will seem to have nothing to do with ordinary, kindly people who happen to have a streak of the anti-Jew or anti-Negro—or anti-Japanese feeling in them. Such people would never for a moment descend so far as to do cruel things for the fun and the glory of it. Happily, these people are a majority even among the prejudiced. Why worry then? A little prejudice now and then might well be allowed the best of men.

Is the matter as unimportant as that? It might seem to be harmless enough for a man to say: "Well, I don't like Jews, that's all, and I surely have the right to choose the people I want to associate with, haven't I?" The answer to that, of course, is yes. The right to choose the people with whom we wish to associate is undeniable. But if we choose (and exclude) on a principle which, when magnified, makes not only for injustice but for inevitable cruelty, then we are helping to create an evil, and, as willing creators of an evil, we have evil in us.

When I say that I have a right to choose the people I want to associate with, I make a true judgment if I imply that I make my choice in terms of the qualities of those I choose. But when I say that I don't want to associate with Jews, I actually imply something quite different. I imply that I don't even stop to consider them as individuals. I shut my eyes and say: "The whole bunch is not for me!"

Magnify this: let every individual say to himself: "I choose my associates by first excluding a whole group of people whom I don't know and don't intend to know," and a cultural pattern is created that is fraught with the profoundest evil.

This is what ordinary, kindly people, with their seemingly harmless streak of racial prejudice, do: they permit the immoral principle of condemning people in the mass to take root in society. Once that principle takes root, other things inevitably follow. It becomes then a permitted thing to look down upon certain groups of people. When this permitted way of looking down becomes an established habit, the consequent habit follows: of regarding these despised people as permitted objects of insult and humiliation. Then the next thing follows: these people—because they are in effect rightless—provide an outlet for pent-up hostilities. They become whipping boys for those members of the dominant group who need to project their frustrations upon others. When society makes an area where hostilities can freely be vented on others it provides for its own moral disintegration.

He who permits evil commits evil. This is what makes for the haunting sense of guilt in our culture. Many a member of the dominant group will earnestly aver that he never intended it that Negroes should be insulted and maltreated on buses, in railroad stations, and on public streets; that he never intended it that Mexican-Americans should be brutally beaten up; that his heart is sore and ashamed when he reads of the defiling of Jewish synagogues by hoodlums. He did not intend these things. But he created the social sanction for these things. By adopting a twisted principle of human association he and the people like him opened the Pandora's box out of which have flown the intolerances and cruelties that have defiled our culture.

There is a deep wisdom in the negative clause of the confession: "We have left undone those things which we ought to have done." The moral sickness that is in most prejudiced people of the dominant group is that they have learned to stand by and do nothing. They do not go to lynchings, but they do nothing to create a condition of human dignity that would make lynchings impossible. The reason why they do not create such a condition of human dignity is that in their heart of hearts they do not believe in the equal right of all human beings to human dignity. Deep and seemingly ineradicable in them is this twisted view of their fellow men. This is the intellectual and moral sickness in them. Out of this sickness comes their effortlessness, and out of their effortlessness come the revolting cruelties of our culture.

WE have become familiar through psychiatry with one peculiar pattern of inertia: the inertia that comes from two conflicting and compulsive drives which, because they are conflicting, make it impossible for the individual to do anything. The irresistible force meets the immovable body within a human mind that cannot seem to throw the weight of decision on one side or the other. Out of such inability to resolve a conflict comes one pattern of neurosis: neurotic inertia. If we look long enough at this pattern it may afford us a peculiar insight into the kind of social inertia we have just mentioned. This type of inertia cannot technically be called a neurosis, but, existent in multitudes of citizens, it pulls down the standard of their common behavior and makes for an increasing obtuseness toward moral values. Caught between ideals that they cannot give up and habits and practices that are equally entrenched, they develop a protective unresponsiveness to events within their society that should properly fill them with horror and induce action. But they do not know how to act nor what price they might have to pay for action. Hence they cannot feel an appropriate responsibility for action. Consciously or subconsciously, the sense of responsibility is dimmed out in them. The power to feel is blurred. The issue is befogged by rationalization. The more often this inertia-response is made, the more satisfactorily, in short-range terms, it reduces the conscious unhappiness and guilt of the person who makes it, and the easier it is to make it on the next similar occasion. So the guilt feeling is diminished on the surface, but the guilt remains and works its corruption at a deeper level of consciousness.

Thus it is the mild and gentle people of prejudice, with their compulsive effortlessness, who must bear the burden of the moral guilt. They have given the green light, and the legion of low hostilities has broken through on the run.

"The corruption of the best is the worst of corruptions." It is the college president who earnestly justifies the quota system who is inwardly corrupt, because, supposedly enlisted in the age-long struggle for human dignity (the Great Tradition), he rationalizes himself out of the struggle when it goes counter to the local mores and the prejudices of his board. It is the minister of the church who timidly suggests that Negroes go elsewhere who is inwardly corrupt, because he denies the Master he asks people to serve. It is the respectable people who would not dream of letting a Negro enter by the front door who are inwardly corrupt because they are willing to insult without even knowing that they insult.

What prejudice does to the prejudiced is, in subtler or in grosser ways, to work this inner corruption. This is the image we need to build of the people who claim white supremacy and Christian superiority. They are intellectually and morally sick people. What is worse, they are sick people who try to make their own sickness the measure of their society's health.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS PAMPHLET No. 399

THE PRESIDENT'S POWERS IN AREAS OF RACE RELATIONS:

AN EXPLORATION

Submitted to the Southern Regional Council as a resource project by Daniel H. Pollitt, associate professor of law, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, North Carolina.

The Federal Government has an important role in the struggle for a more democratic America. It is the country's largest employer. It is the country's largest consumer. It is the country's largest purchaser. More importantly, the Federal Government, and its Chief Executive, the President, can provide leadership, precept and example.

"When Andrew Jackson was President Nullification reared its head. Old Hickory was quick to react. He told a South Carolina Congressman 'You may tell the Nullificationists for me that if they spill a drop of blood, I will hang the first one I can get my hands on to the first tree I can find.' Senator Hayne from South Carolina expressed some doubt that Jackson would go that far. 'I tell you, Hayne,' the congressman replied, 'when Jackson talks about hanging you can look out for rope.'" /33

President Theodore Roosevelt entertained Booker T. Washington in the White House during a racial crisis in Atlanta. Governor Hodges of North Carolina showed President Toure of Guinea warm and generous personal hospitality during a recent tour. Both are examples of executive action, personal in nature, which had profound effect.

"No president has a right to be above a national moral battle. His personal prestige and weight must be thrown into the scale. Lesser men take heart from his example. Courage travel by osmosis." /34

Perhaps "you can't legislate morality." Perhaps prejudice can't be eliminated from the hearts of man by signing a new document. But actions can be legislated, and behavioral patterns influence thought. This has been demonstrated time and again. In the Spring of 1960 it was almost universally assumed that the white Southerner would never break bread with a Negro at the food counters of the dime stores.[35] Yet integrated food service is now a fact which passes without comment in many Southern communities. It was a widely accepted doctrine that the Southern white youth would desert the Army rather than accept orders from a Negro non-commissioned-officer. The fact is that morale in integrated units is equal if not superior to morale in all-white units; and Southern youths who have served in integrated military units cannot appreciate the intensity with which their elders join the White Citizens Councils and other segregationist organizations.[36] No one would have imagined Mississippi voting funds to finance the erection of a thoroughly integrated Veterans Administration Hospital, but this is what happened when the VA threatened to build in Memphis, Tennessee.[37] Dr. Harold I. Lief, associate professor of psychiatry at Tulane University and a serious student of racial prejudice, reports that one of the most striking psychological facts demonstrated by school desegregation is that changes in behavior are in many places preceding changes in attitude. "This is the exact opposite of the old idea that one must change attitudes--perhaps through education --before one can hope to change behavior patterns, and it explains the many attitude changes to be found among teachers, school administrators, and parents who have accepted desegregation against their will only to become advocates of it in the process."[38]

The Judicial branch of the Federal Government has altered behavioral patterns with monumental decisions in areas of education, transportation, recreation, the franchise, etc. The Legislative branch of the Federal Government has contributed to the onward march of civil rights with two important pieces of legislation in an eight year period. The discussion which follows pertains to the Executive Branch of the Government--what it has done,[39] what remains to be done, and the techniques by which progress can be assured.

1. The Military Services

The American Negro dates his military service from colonial times and has been represented in each of our Nation's conflicts. The Negro particularly served well and in large numbers during the Civil War. Several Negroes rose to command rank, and one, Col. William N. Reed of the First North Carolina Regiment, was killed while leading his regiment in a gallant charge at the battle of Olustee, Florida.[40]

Following the civil war, Congress authorized four all-Negro units, staffed almost entirely by white officers. Segregation, thus established, continued until the end of World War II. During much of that conflict the Negro was allowed to serve only in the steward's branch of the Navy, and as truckdrivers or heavy manual laborers in the Army. The wartime experience for them was tragic. In October 1943, many Negro members of a Sea-Bee battalion were dishonorably discharged, mainly because they had protested against discrimination. In Camp Rousseau, California, in 1945, 1,000 Negro seamen went on a hunger strike in demonstration against Jim Crow practices and lack of promotion. In Guam, Christmas Day 1944, Negro sailors were attacked by white marines.[41] Negroes assigned to combat did very well. More than 100 Distinguished Flying Crosses were recommended for Negro pilots during World War II. Officers and enlisted men in the all-Negro 369th and the 270th Infantry Regiments received numerous decorations and citations.[42] In the Winter of 1945, some 2,500 Negro soldiers from the supply services had answered a call for volunteers for front-line duty. These Negro volunteers were formed into platoons and assigned to white companies. The combat performance of these platoons effectively established the feasibility of integration at this level without difficulty. Three out of four white soldiers who served in this campaign said their attitude toward Negroes had changed after serving beside them in combat.[43]

Wy then, was the Negro serviceman so often segregated to a "service" or "manual" position? The answwr given in 1941 by a War Department spokesman to a group of Negro newspaper representatives is that "The Army...cannot be made the means of engendering conflict among the mass of the people because of a stand with respect to Negroes which is not compatible with the position attained by the Negro in civilian life...The Army is not a sociological laboratory."[44] Fortunately, President Harry S. Truman was not one to believe that integration in the military services is a process which must be carried out gradually over a long period of time.

A. Integration of the Armed Forces

In 1948 Executive Order 8891 declared it to be "the policy of the President that there shall be equality of treatment and opportunity for all persons in the armed services without regard to race, color, religion or national origin." "This policy," the President directed, "shall be put into effect as rapidly as possible, having due regard to the time required to effectuate any necessary changes without impairing efficiency or morale."[45] By the same order, the President's Committee onEquality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services (headed by Georgia born Judge Charles E. Fahy) was created. This committee recommended the elimination of segregated units and of a quota system in all branches of the armed services. After a survey in 1950, "The thing that most impressed the Committee about the Navy's experience was that in the relatively short space of five years the Navy had moved from a policy of complete exclusion of Negroes from general service to a policy of complete integration in general service...The Navy had found that Negro and white sailors would work together, eat at the same messes and sleep in the same quarters without trouble."[46] The Army expedited integration with an order that Negro soldiers with critical specialties be transferred to white units requiring such specialties.[47]

Civil rights organizations continue to receive complaints that military authorities of lesser rank frequently frustrate the policies set by their superiors[48] but the order of the day is that Negroes and whites in the Armed Forces eat, sleep, play, work, fight and die together without regard to race.

B. The Military Academies and ROTC Units

Contrary to earlier predictions, removal of racial quotas and other restrictions has not resulted in any imbalance of ratios of Negro enlisted personnel in the Services. In 1954 the percentage of Negroes in the enlisted ranks of the Army was 13.7%; in the Navy 3.6%, and in the Marine Corps 6.5%. Among Army re-enlistment data for 1954 it is found that the re-enlistment rate for eligible regular army Negro personnel is almost identical with that for all personnel in this category.[49] The Negro officer, however, is not found in such large proportion.

In 1954, approximately 3% of the Army Officers were Negroes, and there were only a few individual Negroes (0.1% of the total officer force) serving in a commissioned capacity in the Navy and Marine Corps.[50] As the Fahy Committee points out, the two principal sources of naval officers are the Naval Academy and the Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps at 55 colleges and universities.[51] Unless Negroes are appointed to the Naval Academy, and the NROTC, the paucity of Naval officers will continue. Currently, there are seven Negroes enrolled in the Naval Academy. Similarly, there are only eight Negro cadets at West Point, and only three Negroes enrolled at the Air Force Academy.[52] The disproportionate few Negroes at the service academies may be caused by the small number of qualitied Negro applicants. It may also, however, be due to the fact that the greater majority of midshipmen and cadets, are nominated by Senators and members of the House of Representatives. As there are no Negro Senators and only three or four Negro Congressmen, most of the Congressional nominations (other than those made on the basis of open competitive examination) go to whites. The President, however, has the power to make a limited number of appointments, 89, for example, to West Point.[53] He can use this appointive power to ensure that qualified Negroes gain admission to the Military Academies.

Many Army officers come from the university ROTC programs. But there are at least three states, possibly more, where the Negro is barred by race from attending the state university and consequently from the potential of ROTC training. The President is directed by law to establish and maintain ROTC units, and may likewise disestablish such units.[154] He can, if he will, inform the universities and colleges where ROTC units exist and which refuse to admit Negro students, that the ROTC unit will be disestablished unless the discriminatory admission policies are abolished.

C. The National Guard

The National Guard is part of the United States Army.[155] The composition of its units are required by law to be "the same as those prescribed by the Army."[156] The state units of the National Guard are financed almost in whole by the federal government,[157] and service in the National Guard is a statutory substitute for service under the Universal Selective Service Act in the regular Army.[158] The youth who enlists in the National Guard is released from a tour of extended active duty in exchange for 48 evening drill periods a year and two weeks of summer training throughout the period of his military obligation.[159] The opportunity, however, is not available to the Southern Negro, as the Southern National Guard units are "lily white". This deprives the Negro of opportunities available to the white; and, as pointed out by the North Carolina Advisory Committee to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, "In times of racial tension, if the guard should be called out, it would be reassuring to Negro citizens to observe that members of their own race were on duty. Thereby would be implanted the justified conviction that the sole mission of the guard is to uphold the law."[160]

The President can change this situation at will. He designates the units of the National Guard;[161] and he prescribes the regulations and issues the orders necessary to organize, discipline, and govern the National Guard.[162] Violation of a Presidential regulation results automatically in a forfeiture of federal benefits.[163] This does not leave the state helpless to protect itself from internal disorder, because, in addition to its National Guard, a state has Congressional authority to create and establish a "defense force" to be used within the state boundaries as the Governor considers necessary. This "defense force" may not be called into the armed forces; but a member of such a "defense force" is not exempt from service in the armed force, nor is he entitled to pay, allowances, and the like from funds of the United States.[64]

In short, a state can maintain a lily-white "defense force" at its own expense for operations within the state; but it cannot, if the President so wills, maintain a segregated National Guard unit as an integral part of the United States Army, paid for and supervised by the Federal Government.

D. Facilities on Government-owned Shore Stations and Military Posts.

The Secretary of the Navy, on August 20, 1953, directed the complete elimination of all barriers to the free use of previously segregated facilities on Government-owned Shore Stations of the Navy.[65] Similar regulations were issued by the Army and Air Force. The Commissaries, Post Exchanges, restaurants, swimming-pools, tennis courts, gold courses, and the like are now completely integrated. When there is a dance at the officers' club, Negro officers dance with their wives on the same dance floor with the white officers and their wives. What happens? Nothing. James McBride Dabbs, South Carolina planter, explains it this way: "We mingle with Negroes at games on government reservations because enforcement there is taken out of our hands; we are on federal property, we have no responsibility. Take Shaw Air Force Base, near Sumter, South Carolina, where at integrated athletic contests white citizens' council leaders may be seen sitting by Negroes and chatting with them...A part of the South's present excitement over maintaining segregation is due to the fact that it senses how little it really cares, and is trying to whip up enthusiasm for an attitude no longer. deeply believed in." /66

In 1954 the Secretary of Defense directed " that the operation of all school facilities located on military installations shall be conducted without segregation on the basis of race or color." /67 This preceded the Supreme Court school-desegregation decision by four months. What was the result? Here is what Ms. Hazel Scudder, a native of Arkansas and superintendent of three grade schools on the post at Fort Benning, near Columbus, Georgia: "We lost three teachers. One objected to the new program, another felt her father would disapprove, and a third reported that her husband objected. We have seventy-two teachers, three fourths of them from the South. Some of those from the Deep South have changed their attitudes tremendously. Several have said that they like being here where this bridge has already been crossed. As for the children, there have been no problems at all. The parents have accepted it without question." /68

E. Off-Base Recreational Facilities

For the Negro serviceman stationed in the South, the short bus trip from base to town is a trip to a different world. In Europe, in Asia, in the North, he goes on leave with his white companions. In the South, he bids them farewell at the bus terminal, and looks for the places of public accommodation marked "colored." An official document of the Defense Department comments that "It is paradoxical that the Negro citizen in uniform has frequently been made to feel more at home overseas than in his home town." /69

Leaves, furloughs, passes, "liberty" are for the purpose of rejuvenating the spirit. Forcing a Negro soldier to forego either his pass or spend his off-time in a segregated atmosphere is obviously detrimental to his health and morale. The way to alleviate this situation is shown by the actions of the commander of the air base outside Grand Fords, North Dakota. Receiving complaints that some of the town's restaurants had refused to serve Negro airmen, the commander met with the local chamber of commerce and made clear that all airmen are entitled to equal treatment, that places discriminating against any would be declared "off limits." Chamber members carried his words back to the community and complaints of discrimination stopped.[70]

A commanding officers' authority to safeguard the "health and welfare" of his men has been held to justify putting a used car lot "off limits" to all military personnel after a lieutenant had complained of being defrauded.[71] The President, as Commander-In-Chief is thus clearly within his Constitutional obligation should he decide to put all places of public accommodation which refuse to serve Negro servicemen "off limits" to all servicemen.

FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT

The success of integration in the Armed Forces--where men work, fight, and play together in crowded quarters and often under disagreeable conditions--would lead one to expect even greater and more successful integration in the Federal Civil Service; that Negroes, widely excluded from skilled, clerical and supervisory jobs in private business and industry, would be found in large numbers in the federal government. The facts are otherwise.

An official bulletin of the Defense Department discusses the Negro civilian employee in these terms: "the utilization of the individual Negro employee at his maximum potential often appears as a distant objective....measured against the Negro in military uniform, much remains to be done to accomplish full equity....The situation is not resolved by pointing out that conditions are not measurably better elsewhere."[72]

A listing of recent "breakthroughs" in federal employment serves only to highlight the federal discriminatory employment practices:[73]

Pine Bluff, Arkansas: Two Negro guards are employed by the Federal government at the Pine Bluff Arsenal.

Wilmington, Delaware: The first Negro is employed at the Delaware District office of the Internal Revenue Service.

New Orleans, Louisiana: A Negro is promoted to the job of general foreman in the office of the superintendent of the Postal Transportation Service.

St. Louis, Missouri: The Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis begins hiring Negroes for clerical as well as service jobs.

Oklahoma City, Okla.: Veteran's Hospital employs Negro Medical Technician and promotes him to highest technician grade.

Charleston, West Va.: The Social Security office hires two Negroes--a woman clerk, and a man as a claims investigator.

A recent study of the Negro employment in Federal agencies located in Atlanta, Georgia[74] shows that only 226 of the 2,369 Negro employees (less than 10%) were employed in "white collar" jobs. Only twelve of the twenty-seven agencies with "white collar" positions hired Negroes; and 194 of the 226 Negro "white collar" federal employees (over 80%) were in the bottom 4 of the 15 grades of job classification. (At Grade 5 the jobs begin to involve responsibilities of a technical, professional, or administrative nature.)[75] The "white collar" positions held by Negroes are described as Nursing Assistant, Soil Conservationist, Mail and File Clerk, Tabulating Machine Operator, Laboratory Animal Caretaker, Biological Aid, Messenger, Biologist, and Clerk-Typist; this in a community with six Negro colleges which in 1958 alone handed out 573 graduate and undergraduate degrees. The most recent report of the President's Committee on Government Employment concludes "That there is discrimination in Federal employment is unquestionably true." [76]

Discrimination in federal employment exists despite statutes and Executive Orders to the contrary.

In principle at least, equal opportunity for federal employment has existed since the Civil Service Act of 1883, which provided for open competitive examinations, with vacancies to be filled from the three highest scorers, "with sole reference to merit and fitness."[77]

In 1940, Congress amended the Civil Service Act to expressly prohibit discrimination on the basis of "race."[78]

In 1941, President Roosevelt established a Committee on Fair Employment Practices, which processed a total of 1,871 complaints during the war years, and found discrimination in 58 of them.[79]

After the war, Negroes in Federal jobs again found themselves in a precarious position, especially as the non-discriminating temporary war-time agencies and the FEPC were discontinued. In 1948, President Truman issued Executive Order 9980 ordering each department to consider only "merit and fitness" in appointing and promoting personnel. He further established a Fair Employment Board within the Civil Service Commission to police his regulations and report to him whenever a recommendation concerning employment practices was not "promptly and fully carried out."[80] The effect of this policy was that by 1952, one third of the Federal agencies had, for the first time in their history, hired Negroes as supervisors over integrated work groups, or as executives or in professional capacities.[81]

In 1955 President Eisenhower abolished President Truman's Fair Employment Board of the Civil Service Commission and created in its place the President's Committee on Governmental Employment Policy. In his order creating this Committee, President

Eisenhower stated that it "is the policy of the United States Government that equal opportunity be afforded all qualified persons, consistent with law, for employment in the Federal Government." He added that "this policy necessarily excludes and prohibits discrimination against any employee or applicant for employment in the Federal Government because of race, color, religion, or national origin."

Why, despite this long and unbroken policy against racial discrimination in federal employment, does such discrimination exist? Several lessons from the past are pertinent.

First, the Committee, Board or agency charged with the task of ending discriminatory employment practices never has been assigned sufficient manpower. With government employment in excess of two million, President Eisenhower's Committee was composed of part-time men[83] with a full-time staff of exactly three persons, one of them a stenographer.[84] A President bent on ending discrimination in federal employment must create a task-force commensurate with the job to be done.

Second, the entire system of ending discrimination depended on action initiated by the rejected employee. The procedure began with a complaint, and the complaint was normally filed with the agency against whom it was levelled. Moreover, the burden of proving that the rejection was based on race rather than on some other factor was laid on the complainant, who had no facts and no way of getting them.[85] A President bent on ending discrimination could himself initiate action. For example, he could keep track of the percentage of qualified Negro applicants referred to a given agency by the Civil Service Commission, the percentage of qualified Negro applicants hired by the agency, and then put the burden of explanation upon the agency if and when the two percentages became disproportionate.

Third, those charged with enforcement of the Government's non-discriminatory policy did not believe it immediately possible of attainment. President Eisenhower's Committee asserted that its "most important responsibility" was "to conduct a long-range program of education and persuasion" with the purpose of eliminating, not discriminatory employment practices, but "those fears and prejudices that give rise to acts of discrimination."[86] Contrast with this "federal employment" "long-range" educational program to allay fears the Military crash program to eliminate segregation. The Army made no bones about its objective, and expedited its program by assigning qualified Negro soldiers to billets in white units even when equally qualified white soldiers were available.[87]

Finally, there have never been any sanctions for violation of the Government's policy. President Eisenhower's Committee has found individual and identifiable acts of employment discrimination, but if any one was discharged, or even reprimanded, it remains a secret. Contrast the statement of the top official of the Bureau of Internal Revenue when there were charges that revenue officials discriminated against taxpayers favoring integration: "...we don't allow personal feeling to enter into our work. Anyone found doing this kind of thing would be summarily dismissed. They all know that."[88]

In sum, a President can eliminate discrimination in federal employment, just as discrimination was ended in the military services, by appointing a Committee, adequately staffed, with authority to initiate action designed to seek out and punish those who violate government policy from the inside.

FEDERAL CONTRACT EMPLOYMENT

Not only does the Federal Government discriminate against Negroes in its own employment policies, but it permits private firms holding federal government contracts to follow suit. This is most unfortunate, as goods and services furnished pursuant to federal government contracts constitute a major part of our economy.[89] The end of discrimination in these private firms doing business with the government would have a decisive impact on the employment picture of the United States as a whole. In hundreds of cities the federal contractor is the major employer, and his hiring policies set the pattern for an entire area. As in direct federal employment, discrimination by employers holding government contracts is contrary to our national policy.

In 1941 President Roosevelt established a Fair Employment Practice Committee and called for "full participation in the national defense program by all citizens regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin." Federal agencies were instructed to include in their contracts a provision requiring the contractor not to discriminate.[90] Since 1943 all government contracts have contained a "non-discrimination" clause.

During the Korean crisis, President Truman attempted to revitalize the non-discrimination provision by establishing a Committee on Government Contract Compliance, with instructions to study the problem and to recommend to agency heads measures to eliminate discrimination. The Committee reported that the non-discrimination clause was "dead and buried under thousands of words of standard legal and technical language," that workers were unaware of its existence, and that government contracting agencies lacked machinery to receive and investigate complaints or to enforce compliance.[91]

In 1953 President Eisenhower established the Government Contract Committee (popularly known as the Nixon Committee) with the Vice-President as its Chairman, the Secretary of Labor as its Vice Chairman, and with prominent industrial, labor, and civic leaders among its membership. President Eisenhower's Executive Order[92] contains the following statements:

> "...it is in the interest of the Nation's economy and security to promote the fullest utilization of all available manpower...."
> "It is the policy of the United States Government to promote equal employment opportunity for all qualified persons...because such persons are entitled to fair and equitable treatment in all aspects of employment on work paid for from public funds...."
> "...it is the obligation of the contracting agencies of the United States Government and Government contractors to insure compliance with, and sucessful execution of, the equal employment opportunity program of the United States Government...."

The private firm or corporation now doing business with the government agrees by contract to the following:

> "...not to discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, religion, color, or national origin. The aforesaid provision shall include, but not be limited to, the following: employment, upgrading, demotion, or transfer; recruitment or recruitment advertising; layoff or termination; rates of pay or other forms of compensation; and selection for training, including apprenticeship. The contractor agrees to post hereafter in conspicious places, available for employees and applicants for employment, notices to be provided by the contracting officer setting forth the provisions of the nondiscrimination clause.

"The contractor further agrees to insert the foregoing provision in all subcontracts hereunder, except subcontracts for standard commercial supplies or raw materials."[93]

The contractual provision is definitive and exhaustive--initial employment, upgrading, transfer, lay-off, training--every aspect of the employment relationship is covered. Yet discrimination against Negroes continues almost unabated. It is no secret that General Motors, one of the country's largest holders of government contracts, pursues such a policy in the South, for in 1957 the manager of its Atlanta assembly plant was quoted in the Wall Street Journal as saying, "When we moved into the South, we agreed to abide by local custom and not hire Negroes for production work. This is no time for social reforming in that area, and we're not about to try it."[94]

The extent of discrimination by government contractors is best illustrated by the Nixon Committee's "Examples of Progress" taken verbatim from its most recent report:

Kaiser Aluminum Company--Baton Rouge, La.--As a result of a complaint filed by an individual, there was a general review of the company's employment policies by the cognizant contracting agency. The company hired 4 Negroes as supervisors and increased the number of Negroes in semi-skilled jobs from 5 to 26.

Bethlehem Steel Corporation--Sparrows Point, Md.--The plant employed more than 700 women employees in plant and white-collar positions. A complaint alleged that no Negro women were employed in the plant since World War II.

As a result of consultations with ranking officials of the Department of the Navy, two Negro women were hired as clerical employees.

General Dynamics Corporation (Convair Division)--Ft. Worth, Tex.--This company employs between 25,000 - 30,000 employees, including 200-300 Negroes in unskilled and semi-skilled positions. There were no Negroes in any white-collar positions. After Committee negotiations in September 1959, two Negro women were hired for clerical positions --one in the industrial relations department and the other in the accounting department.[95]

Racial discrimination in government contract employment exists today, not for lack of policy or lack of orders--both are well defined and clear cut. Discrimination exists because no one has taken action. The Nixon Committee lays heavy stress on education: making movies, sponsoring conferences and "equal opportunity" days, producing spot announcements, car cards, brochures, and newsletters.[96]

The President can end government contract employment discrimination by taking action along any or several of the lines suggested by President Truman's Committee as it left office:[97]

1. Disqualification from future contracting. The old committee recommended that each agency establish administrative disqualifying procedures directed against irresponsible bidders whose past performance had been detrimental to the Government's interest. In practice, this sanction has never been used.

2. Termination of Contract. Each contract contains a standard provision that the government may terminate the whole contract or any part thereof if the contractor fails to perform under any provision and does not rectify the failure within a specified period of time. The committee called this the most potent sanction. No contract has ever been terminated for failure to comply with the anti-discrimination clause.

3. Liquidated damages. The committee suggested that liquidated damage provisions might be inserted in contract agreements, and that the violating contractor be required to pay a lump sum penalty for his violation. Liquidation damage provisions have been upheld by the courts many times where injury or the extent thereof is difficult to assess.

4. Injunctive relief. The government might sue for specific performance of the non-discrimination clause. The courts will grant equitable injunctive relief when the damage is not measurable in monetary damages.

5. Certificate of compliance. The contractor could be required to file a certificate of compliance to obtain payment. Execution of a false certificate is a crime punishable by a fine up to $10,000, or imprisonment up to five years, or both.

It is not believed that the Government need resort to criminal sanctions to achieve its stated policy. The termination of a contract or the establishment of a "black-list" should do the job; and would be far more educational than all the movies, spot announcements, and car cards presently produced by the Nixon Committee.

IV.

OTHER FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS AND POLICIES

In addition to direct employment into the Federal civil service and to employment by private industry doing business under contract with the government, the United States of America has at least four other programs which influence employment patterns: vocational rehabilitation, apprenticeship programs, the job referrals by United States Employment Service, and the certification of labor unions as exclusive bargaining agents for all employees within the appropriate bargaining unit. As these programs are conducted with federal funds and under federal supervision, they fall within the command of the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution prohibiting discrimination on racial grounds.[98] As the President of the United States takes an oath of office to support the Constitution, he is honor bound to stamp out federally financed and controlled discrimination where it exists.[99]

A. Vocational Rehabilitation.

The Office of Vocational Rehabilitation of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare finances and over-sees an extensive program to restore handicapped persons to useful activity. In 1959 the total of Federal grants in this public rehabilitation program was $55,928,771[100] and the number of persons benefited was 80,739.[101] There is no problem of racial discrimination in this program because in May of 1958 the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation issued an order that no state shall be eligible to participate unless its vocational rehabilitation program "will be applied without regard to sex, race, creed, color, or national origin of the individual."[102]

B. Apprenticeship Programs.

The Office of Education, also within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, finances and administers a vocational education program, at a cost, in 1959, of $40,888,412.[103] Entrance into these apprenticeship programs is essential if one is to lift himself out of the unskilled labor category. As of today, most of these apprenticeship programs exclude Negroes--the United States Office of Education has not yet seen fit to follow the lead of the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation in affording funds only to those programs which operate without regard to race.[104]

C. The United States Employment Service. (USES).

The states conduct employment reference service financed by the federal government and operated under the general supervision of the Secretary of Labor.[105] The USES "places" employees, offers employment counseling, provides special services to veterans, youth, handicapped; gives occupational testing; and provides technical materials concerning personnel management.[106]

The USES refuses to process discriminatory job orders by the federal government agencies, it refuses the "Caucasian-only" type of job orders in those states where local law forbids job discrimination; but elsewhere and otherwise it fosters and aids the discriminatory employment policies of private employees, even those under government contract.[107]

The Secretary of Labor, on his own initiative, has refused the services of the USES to farmers seeking temporary seasonal help unless the farmer maintains minimum standards of employment practices.[108] In like fashion, he could refuse to process all discriminatory job orders: the "white only" variety. He would have no option in this matter should the President so direct.

D. Labor Union Certification.

The National Mediation Board in the transportation industries, and the National Labor Relations Board in all other industry, "certifies" labor unions (usually following a victorious election in the appropriate bargaining unit) as the "exclusive" bargaining agent for each and every employee in the unit. Federal certification carries with it the responsibility of representing the interest of each employee "fairly and impartially."[109] A decreasing number of labor unions limit membership to "white men" or to "white born";[110] and an additional number of unions relegate their Negro members to "Jim Crow" units represented at the bargaining table and in the grievance proceedings by officials of the "white" unit.[111] Negroes represented by these unions obviously do not get the equal representation that is their statutory right. A leading union attorney has put it this way:

> "No collective bargaining agent can possibly accord equal treatment to non-members in the day-to-day activities of the union. Non-members cannot attend meetings or participate in the decisional processes of the union; they cannot vote for those who will represent them. The elected official of a union--and, like any other politicians, they are officials periodically up for re-election--can hardly be expected to devote themselves as wholeheartedly to the interests of those who cannot vote as they do to the interests of those who can."[112]

One would not expect federal agencies, charged with the task of ensuring equal representation in economic affairs, to subject Negro citizens to representation by white citizens under a system of racial paternalism. Such, however, is the situation.

The National Mediation Board actually mediated and countersigned the agreement by which the railroads and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen excluded Negro firemen from many jobs which they then held.[113] The National Labor Relations Board has consistently maintained that "Neither exclusion from membership nor segregated membership per se represents evasion on the part of a labor organization of its statutory duty to afford "equal representation."[114] The General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board has the obligation to prosecute labor unions for "unfair labor practices." He has taken a consistent position that it is not "unfair" for a labor union to obtain the dismissal of a Negro from his job on racial grounds,[115] or to bargain discriminatorily and unfairly against excluded minorities,[116] as by assigning Negro employees into "non-promotable" jobs.[117]

Would it be worth the while to reverse these policies? Should the Labor Board refuse to certify a winner because of its racial policies, the result might well be no union representation at all, and experience does not suggest that an employer without a union could be more impartial than one with a union contract. Nevertheless, a biased union might change its policies if it knew that notwithstanding electoral victory it could not become certified until it stopped discriminating. In some situations, where a discriminating and a nondiscriminating union are in competition and employees opposed to discrimination constitute a balance of power, fear of losing the election might stimulate changes in the attitude of the anti-Negro organization. This has been the effect in a few reported situations.[118]

The President has less power in this than in the other areas discussed. The National Labor Relations Board is an independent agency, and its members, once appointed and confirmed, are free from direct Presidential control. Nevertheless, the President can direct attorneys from the Department of Justice to intervene in Labor Board cases where this issue is involved; or to initiate an "rule making procedure" wherein the Labor Board is requested to refuse certification to labor unions which discriminate against those whom it has a statutory duty to represent. If these efforts fail, it would then be time to consider legislative proposals.

V. RECREATION

State-owned facilities are forbidden to discriminate by the Fourteenth Amendment and this includes parks, golf-courses, swimming-pools, tennis courts, and other recreational facilities. /119 Court decisions since 1955 have opened some park and recreation areas to Negroes, and stimulated voluntary action in other states and communities. Kentucky and Maryland ordered state parks and recreation sites desegregated. /120 Miami Beach opened its two golf courses to Negroes in 1955; as did a number of North Caroline cities. In Houston, Dallas, and Fort Worth, Texas, the golf courses were opened to Negroes; and in San Antonio and Corpus Christi, the swimming pools were made available to Negroes. In Austin, all public facilities were desegregated. /121 Generally, how ever, the Negro in the South is still denied access to public recreational areas; and a court order forbidding discrimination is apt to result in closing the facility. Montgomery, Alabama closed its parks; /122 Jacksonville, Florida sold its golf course; /123 Greensboro, N. C. sold its swimming pool; /124 and the legislatures in Arkansas and Florida recently authorized the closing or sale of all public recreational areas. /125 Danville, Virginia even closed its library. /126

The President has no direct concern with "local" recreation facilities; but he does have a concern with the recreational areas financed and/or operated by the National Park Service, The National Forest Service, and the Army Corps of Engineers. These federal areas of recreation take on additional importance with the closing of "local" facilities and the new leisure accompanying increased industrialization and automation in the South.

A. The National Parks

More than 58 million people visited one or more of the 181 park
